CHARLOTTE — Just two months ago, Galle was a posh resort on the southern coast of the tiny island nation of Sri Lanka in the Indian Ocean. But the Dec. 26 tsunami devastated the city, leaving thousands of people dead and decimating living conditions.

Help poured in from near and far. Money, clothes, manpower.

On Feb. 15, more manpower — or womanpower — came from Charlotte.

Caroline Orsillo, a health teacher at Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School, left for Galle, Sri Lanka, Feb. 15. She is spending 16 days in the region, cleaning wells and setting up water-purification systems.

Caroline Orsillo, a health teacher at Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School, departed from Charlotte for 16 days of cleaning wells and setting up water-purification systems in Galle.

Such trips are familiar for Orsillo, who has taken more than two dozen mission trips to eastern North Carolina, El Salvador, Honduras and ground zero following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

When she told Carolé Breerwood, principal, about her desire to go on the mission — and that she would need three weeks off from school — Breerwood didn't hesitate before agreeing.

"She said to me, 'You go and do what you need to do,'" Orsillo said.

Orsillo was responsible for raising more than $2,200 necessary to finance the trip. She wrote a note to her fellow teachers asking for their financial and prayer support.

Within a week, donations of cash and supplies poured in from Holy Trinity teachers and parents as well as from Orsillo's own parents.

"They've blown me away with their support," Orsillo said.

Following her return on March 7, Orsillo will talk to Holy Trinity students about her experiences in Sri Lanka.

"I hope to start a trend with the teachers and students, and my own daughters, to do this sort of mission trip," Orsillo said.

Collective efforts

Performing a number of odd jobs, collecting door-to-door and working lemonade stands, the fourth-graders at St. Gabriel School in Charlotte raised more than $1,600 for Catholic Relief Services for tsunami relief, contributing to the more than $3,000 raised by the whole student body. The fourth-grader classes of teachers Steve Boon, Denise Heskamp, Jean Spegal and Betsy DesNoyer placed buckets in the school cafeteria, in which other students placed their left-over lunch and ice cream money.

U.S. bishops' doctrinal official says Vatican ruling no surprise

BY JERRY FILTEAU
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Vatican's notification that there are doctrinal errors in the book, "Jesus Symbol of God," by Jesuit Father Roger Haight, "doesn't surprise me," said Capuchin Franciscan Father Thomas Weinandy, executive director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Doctrine and Pastoral Practices.

The doctrinal congregation's notification, dated Dec. 13, was published in the Feb. 7-8 issue of the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano.

It said the book contained a number of "affirmations contrary to the truths of the divine and Catholic faith" — including errors about "the pre-existence of the Word, the divinity of Jesus, the Trinity, the salvific value of the death of Jesus, the uniqueness and universality of the salvific mediation of Jesus and the church, and the resurrection of Jesus."

Father Weinandy, who wrote a critical review of the book following its publication in 1999, noted that the Vatican document "begins by pointing out methodological errors."

He said that the most important methodological issue "is, as the Vatican document states, that the author subsumes everything under what he calls 'postmodernism.' He wants to make Christianity relevant, intelligible, reasonable to what he considers the postmodern age. In order to do that, Father Haight feels that he has to deny anything that is supernatural."

"So revelation is not God acting in time and history in a manner that is unique to himself; but rather, revelation becomes philosophical insight into the way reality, human life, always is," Father Weinandy said. "And the reason Father Haight does this is because he feels that belief in revelation, as traditionally understood, can no longer be believed by postmodern men and women."

"What he's saying is not really anything new," he said. "It (the denial of the supernatural) has been a problem since the Enlightenment. And of course he willingly admits that the Bible, especially the New Testament, believes in miracles and purports to have seen them — not least of which would be the Incarnation and the Resurrection."

Father Weinandy said that methodological approach affects Father Haight's theology of Christ, the Holy Spirit and God's trinitarian nature.

"In line with his methodology, he can no longer hold — as again the Vatican document points out — that the Son of God pre-exists with the Father and the Holy Spirit from all eternity, and then actually does come to exist as a human being, as a man, in space and time. That understanding is ruled out methodologically," he said.

In Father Haight's book Jesus "becomes the symbol of what God is really like," he added. "So Jesus becomes the symbol of God being merciful, kind, compassionate, forgiving. And in so doing, we can call him the Son of God, but he is only the son not in the sense that he exists from all eternity as a distinct person within the Trinity, but because as a man he becomes an icon, a symbol, of what God is truly like."

He said he hoped Catholics, including the Catholic theological community, would welcome the notification.

"What they have done has not been done in an authoritarian manner, but done in order to preserve the authenticity of the Gospel and the Catholic faith," he said. "By highlighting the errors that Father Haight has tried to offer, the clarity and the truth of the Gospel is more clearly seen in all its splendor and light."

Father Haight, who taught theology at the Weston Jesuit School of Theology in Boston from 1990 to 2000, was suspended from teaching in 2000 when the Vatican began a formal investigation of his book. Last fall Weston accepted his resignation as a professor. He is currently teaching at the interdenominational Union Theological Seminary in New York.

The Vatican notification said that during its investigation his responses to questions about his writings had not been satisfactory. It said he can no longer teach as a Catholic theologian unless he "corrects his positions so as to be in full conformity with the doctrine of the church."

Father Haight told Catholic News Service he will have no comment on the Vatican ruling.

While one of Father Haight's stated intentions was to "affirm together the normativity of Jesus, the true and salvific character of other religions, and thus the positive character of religious pluralism," a Catholic expert in interreligious dialogue said his book is not helpful for such dialogue.

Father Francis Tiso, staff specialist for interreligious relations in the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs, said Muslims and Buddhists — the two main world religions with which Catholics are engaged in active interreligious dialogue — would draw back from a dialogue based on "the postmodernist point of view" that frames Father Haight's work.

Muslims would see the book's approach as an attack on "a metaphysics we have in common," he said.

"It's going to upset the Buddhists and Hindus as well," he added, "because they, too, have great philosophical systems which in effect are being dismantled by this philosophical method that he's using on Catholic Christianity. So one has to ask the question if maybe most religious people around the world would find this method deeply disturbing because they would see it as a dismantling of their traditional philosophical systems."

Old stories with timely messages

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

As the years pass, we come to treasure the memories of childhood, of beloved parents and grandparents, and the stories they once shared with us about their own lives. I have found those graced moments of long ago coming full circle when my two youngest grandchildren burst through our front door.

I'm not sure how my becoming the resident storyteller began, but now the request for a story, or better yet a scary story, quickly follows their arrival. One of the great gifts of "Grandma's Story Time" is reaching farther back in memory to those times beyond when I was a little girl.

Inevitably, after a spirited tale involving ancient relatives, the three of us visit the wall of family pictures. Calculating the years one night, I realized that I have become the living link in a chain that reaches back to late in the 1870s when my own grandfather was the same age as the two upturned faces before me.

We shift to the Gospel of John during the next three weeks of the Lenten season. We hear about three unforgettable encounters Jesus has with a Samaritan woman at Jacob's well, a man blind from birth and Jesus' friends Martha and Lazarus. Each of these stories compels us to move closer to the events of Holy Week and to our own encounter with the risen Lord.

In today's Gospel, John draws us into a dusty day where we find Jesus tired and thirsty, looking for respite from the noon-day sun in a Samaritan town. The fact that this story occurs in Samaria prepares us for a tale of the unexpected, since Jews and Samaritans had been feuding over religious and political issues for centuries.

When Jesus asks a Samaritan woman for a drink, he sets in motion the conversion not only of the woman, but of her neighbors as well. During their long conversation, barriers fall. Jesus is not afraid to speak to a woman in public — a woman some would say should have been condemned on the spot.

Not Jesus.

Jesus meets her where she is and reveals to her that he is the long-awaited Messiah, the living link to God.

I often wonder who remembered this wonderful multifaceted story and passed it along so that someone we know as John, whose muse was the Holy Spirit, would share it with us.

This 'Mask' shouldn't be unveiled

Alan Cumming stars in "Son of the Mask," a daffy but disappointing comedy about a cartoonist who stumbles upon an ancient Norse mischief-making mask that transforms its wearer into a green-skinned demigod, only to discover that he somehow passed on its powers to his newborn son. Emphasizing visual gimmickry over storytelling, the film contains unnecessary potty humor and innuendo. Recurring comic and cartoon violence, some crude bathroom and sexually suggestive humor, an instance of fleeting partial rear nudity, as well as minimal crass language. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Screenwriter wins $40,000 Act One fellowship

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (CNS) — Haynes Brook was chosen as the first recipient of the Bishop Norman McFarland Writing Fellowship awarded by the Act One training and mentoring program for faith-oriented screenwriters.

Brook is a Los Angeles-based screenwriter, actor and playwright. Several of his plays have been staged by Tim Robbins' Actors' Gang theater company. He wrote and directed the half-hour comedy short "The Seven-Level Secret" and had a 10-minute short, "Naomi's Underwear," produced.

The fellowship is a gift from retired Bishop Norman F. McFarland of Orange. In a statement, he said he agreed to the fellowship being named in his honor as a reaffirmation of "the church's continuing encouragement and support of artists in all arenas."

Act One executive director Barbara Nicolosi said in a statement that the fellowship's goal is to "produce a commercial film or television project of great merit and worth. We are also looking to give a creative opportunity to an up-and-coming screenwriter who combines professional skill with personal integrity, and a profound commitment to Christ."

Brook is an Act One alumnus, having completed a monthlong screening workshop combining ethics and spirituality with mentoring by industry professionals.

Adult stem-cell breakthrough generates new hope stem-cells may have the capacity to generate into most tissue types in the human body," said Losordo. "This is a very unique property that until this time has only been found in embryonic stem cells."

Losordo, together with Dr. Youngsup Yoon, led the team of researchers whose findings demonstrating the unique properties of these cells were published in the Feb. 1 issue of the Journal of Clinical Investigation.

Caritas St. Elizabeth's Medical Center is the flagship hospital of the Boston's Caritas Christi Health Care System and a teaching hospital of the Tufts University School of Medicine.

Reviewing the study, Father Tadeusz Pacholczyk, director of education at the National Catholic Bioethics Center in Philadelphia, characterized the researchers' findings as "very exciting."

"It shows that there is a higher degree of flexibility in adult stem cells than many have thought in the past," he said.

According to Father Pacholczyk, supporters of research using embryonic stem cells have long argued that adult stem cells were not as flexible as embryonic stem cells, thus making them less useful in repairing or healing damaged tissues and cells in the body.

"What appears novel about this report is that they have carefully derived a single cell type from the bone marrow, which can be expanded and used to flexibly generate a number of tissues," explained Father Pacholczyk.

"Adult stem cells are incredibly powerful," he added.

Adult vs. embryonic stem cells

Stem cells have a number of unique properties not found in other types of cells. They can divide and renew themselves over a long period of time and, while they are unspecialized in their structure, have the ability to generate into specialized cells for specific tissues.

Currently there are two different types of stem-cell research taking place — embryonic and adult stem cells.

Adult stem cells can be found within tissues and organs, including bone marrow, the brain, blood vessels, peripheral blood, skin, and the liver. Embryonic stem cells can be found only in embryos, and to harvest these cells, a human embryo must be destroyed.

"Adult stem cells have already been successfully used in human therapies for many years," Father Pacholczyk said. "To date, no therapies in humans have ever been successfully carried out using embryonic stem cells."

"The findings reported in Dr. Losordo's study is but another affirmation that we don't have to invest hundreds of thousands on dollars on something that is purely speculative, not to mention morally questionable," he added.

New frontiers

Losordo and Yoon led the preclinical study in which researchers extracted stem cells from human bone marrow and transplanted them into the damaged hearts of rats. The stem cells induced cardiac regeneration, including the growth of new muscle and blood vessels in the heart.

In addition, the researchers demonstrated that this specific subpopulation of stem cells has the capacity to develop into all types of cells, including those that make up the glands, digestive tract, hair, skin, nails, brain, nervous system and muscle.

While previous research has been conducted with stem cells derived from rat or mouse bone marrow, this is the first study to show how human bone marrow stem cells can be used in the generation of various tissue types.

Losordo and his team at Caritas St. Elizabeth's are planning to conduct further preclinical research with this subpopulation of stem cells. If the findings confirm their hypothesis, they will seek to begin Phase I clinical trials with human patients.

"We may be able to extract stem cells from a patient's bone marrow to repair a wide variety of damaged tissue in his or her body," said Losordo.

"Furthermore, by growing tissue from a patient's own stem cells, we could overcome issues related to cell therapy, such as tissue rejection," he said.

FROM THE COVER

Pope leads, but in different ways

For the 84-year-old pontiff, who suffers from a debilitating neurological disease and arthritis, the hospital stay may have marked another stage in his passage from an activist pope to one who leads primarily through prayer and presence.

The pope raised the issue in an Angelus talk Feb. 6, which an aide had to read for him. The pope said he was spending his time praying continually for the intentions of the church and the world.

"In this way, even here in the hospital, among the other sick people to whom my affectionate thoughts go out, I continue to serve the church and all of humanity," the pope's text said.

Some commentators misinterpreted the remark to mean the pope was asserting that he could still run the church. Rather, he was suggesting that sometimes prayer, not managerial abilities, must take precedence — even in the papacy.

"The pope doesn't have to be like Schwarzenegger, the governor of California, and give the impression of a superman who governs the church," said French Cardinal Jean-Marie Lustiger, who retired in mid-February as archbishop of Paris.

Cardinal Lustiger said most people see in the pope "a weak, suffering, sick man who continues to be the sign of a compassionate Christ who carries all the suffering in the world."

"If it were like that for 30 years, it might be a little excessive. But the church's government, when it shows it has a man at the head who carries his suffering like we should carry it, with courage and for the good of humanity, it is a great example," Cardinal Lustiger said.

To some, all this sounds like excessive adulation and a failure of the church to confront hard facts.

Strength in weakness

"Most ends of pontificates have been marked by a type of idolatry ... and with John Paul II the limit has been reached," the French newspaper Le Monde said in a commentary.

"The fiction that this exhausted man is still capable of governing cannot last any longer," it said.

Even inside the Vatican, some have questioned how long the pope, who is expected to grow weaker as his neurological illness progresses, will be able to keep up his teaching role — through documents, speeches and weekly spiritual talks.

That doesn't bother Jean Vanier, founder of the L'Arche communities for the disabled, who spoke to Vatican Radio.

"Today the pope, more than any encyclical or other document, is by his very presence a sign of holiness," Vanier said.

"The pope is a man who suffers. He suffers physically, but I think he also suffers terribly in his heart. And yet there is something in him extraordinarily luminous and clear," he said.

For Vanier, the pope's suffering has become an inspirational sign for Christians living in a world of poverty and injustice. In this sense, he said, the pope exemplifies St. Paul's statement, "Strength is made perfect in weakness."

That all this is on the pope's mind is clear from the content of his teachings in recent months and years.

Important lessons

The pontiff returned from the hospital just in time for the World Day of the Sick Feb. 11. In his message for the event, the pope said that precisely in times of sickness, people ask hard questions about ultimate realities, including the meaning of pain, suffering and death.

For the Christian, he said, it is a time to understand that "health" goes beyond physical well-being and includes "total harmony with God, with self and with humanity." That understanding is reached through the mystery of Christ's own passion, death and resurrection, he said.

The pope's Lenten message this year also explored a theme with personal overtones: old age and the role of the elderly in the church and society.

The pope wrote about times when illness, age and physical weakness reduce the person's ability to be self-reliant. But far from being a wasted time of life, growing old, if accepted in the light of faith, can be an opportunity to understand the "mystery of the cross," he said.

Vatican officials say the pope does not always bear his own physical burdens lightly. He is typically impatient to resume work during his hospital stays, and over the last two years he has regretted the need to shorten his meetings, sit on the sidelines at liturgies and hand off his speeches for others to read.

Occasionally this impatience shows, as in Switzerland last year when he slapped the hand of an aide who tried to take his text, after the pontiff struggled to pronounce the first few words.

But increasingly, the pope has pointed to the need for people of his age to "focus on that which is essential, giving importance to those things that the passing of years does not destroy," as he said in his Lenten message.

By doing so, the elderly teach something important to their society, especially the younger generations, he said.

Most Vatican officials accept that Pope John Paul's papacy has entered a stage of shorter meetings, fewer documents, less talking and a reduced number of trips. In terms of spiritual impact, however, they are hoping that less is more.

"Of course, he's less active," said one Vatican source. "But even so, he's communicating a powerful message."

Lent in the Media Age

Giving up TV might make for good penance

Oblate Father Joe Zuschmidt, pastor of Queen of Apostles Church in Belmont tells a homily "ha-ha" that goes something like this: "When I was in elementary school, the Sisters had us write down what we would like to give up for Lent. I wrote down vegetables, cleaning my room and homework. That very same day I learned how boring and arduous it was to write 500 times, 'I will not make fun of Lenten sacrifices.'"

Wouldn't we all like to take the easy way and do a penitential act during this holy season by giving up something we don't really like anyway? Alas, there is no easy way around it. Pain is gain when it comes to penance.

Penitential acts can take two paths — denial and good works. Denial is usually prefaced with the question, "What are you giving up for Lent?" Depending on your age, the answer might be candy, desserts, decaf double-mocha-fudge-caramel lattes, alcohol or any one of a number of other simple pleasures. The other possibility, good works, offers endless choices: volunteer in a school, visit the sick or reach out to someone in need.

What if you could combine the two types of Lenten offerings? Can we do something good and at the same time give up something? The media, or more specifically, our interaction with it, provides the opportunity for this double whammy of Lenten grace.

Foregoing some of the programming that television has to offer is both denial and doing a good work. I don't recommend giving up TV completely. The Weather Channel is always good, and there are other programs that by giving them up wouldn't necessarily qualify as a Lenten sacrifice. Local newscasts with those abrasive car dealer ads come immediately to mind.

TV has been described as a vast wasteland, and there is a lot of programming that we could easily do without, but which, for many, is a guilty pleasure. For me, a good example of this genre is the popular "judge" show, where people argue before a retired jurist about issues as silly as repair bills on their mobile homes or a missing pet that may have ended up on a neighbors dinner menu.

Turning off this kind of video sludge may be a sacrifice for some, but doing so also does a greater community good. For example, your neighbors won't overhear one of these arguments and assume it is a real confrontation. Your children will profit from your good example and who knows, with the spare time you have you could serve a meal at a soup kitchen.

Newspapers and magazines offer the trashy equivalent of "The Jerry Springer Show," too. As with TV, for some people skipping some articles would be a minor sacrifice that carries an ultimate benefit. Take celebrity news, please. You could start by passing over all of the stories about Madonna, Brad, Jennifer and Cher, just to name a few. Limit your reading to reviews of their film or recording work.

Sordid sports stories about the off-field lives of some athletes are another good example. Stick to scores and highlights of real games. Depending on how fast you read, this might give you time enough to write someone a thoughtful note or drop off some canned goods at the food bank.

Also by avoiding the tabloids, think of the money you will save at the grocery store check out line.

The real good work of being more discriminating about what we watch and read is that the producers and editors of this trash will get the message that the audience is more sophisticated than what it is now perceived to be. Perhaps that will raise the quality level. I wouldn't count on it though. Maybe we can get the good Sister in Father Zuschmidt's story to require all offending media moguls to write 500 times, "I will not create trash."

Your will won't work well when ...

MULTIPLE FACTORS MAY INTERFERE WITH EXECUTING A WILL

Your will won't work well when ...

1. It's out-of-date.

How old is your will? Have you reviewed it in the last three years? If not, chances are it could use some attention.

A number of personal factors can affect your will: things like changes in income, employment, family size or marital status. External factors such as new federal or state laws can also require the revision of your will.

Have any of the following things occurred in the last few years?

- Move from another state;
- New business venture;
- Children less dependent;
- Death in family;
- Serious illness in family;
- Marriage or divorce;
- Birth of child;
- Executor can't serve;
- Trustee can't serve;
- Desire to change guardian;
- More grandchildren;
- Change in giving interests;
- Job promotion;
- Purchase of life insurance;
- New out-of-state property;
- Purchase of home;
- More property in joint names;
- Major change in finances.

2. It's legally invalid.

Your will can contain all the information you think you want and not be worth the paper it's written on. This is more likely to be true if your will is old, or if you tried to cut corners by using generic forms from a stationery store.

A will can be invalid if it is unsigned or witnessed improperly.

There's just no substitute for having a competent attorney involved. In the short run, it may cost you a bit more, but it will certainly provide greater peace of mind and possibly save your survivors from a nightmare.

3. It conflicts with other plans.

Your will should be coordinated with your other estate transfer documents. For example, insurance proceeds and brokerage accounts pass outside the will to the named beneficiaries. Pension funds are also distributed outside the will. A will that truly works well takes all of these other assets into consideration.

Guest Column

4. It fails to fulfill your desires.

Your will should accomplish exactly what you want. Do you want your children to receive their inheritance all at once, or at various intervals? Do you want your charitable gifts to be used for unrestricted purposes, or do you want to earmark the funds to meet specific needs? Do you want to give your parish a percentage of your estate, or a set amount?

Perhaps you didn't know all the options when you signed your will. Later, you discovered other ways to make your bequests. You may feel dissatisfied with your will. It may work as a legal document, but fail to work well as the expression of your true desires.

Is it time to redo your will? If so, we urge you to make an appointment with your attorney as soon as possible. You should be satisfied and confident about your estate plan.

Jim Kelley, diocesan director of development, is available to visit with you about any of this. He can review bequest options with you and tell you about other giving possibilities. For more information, please contact Jim at (704) 370-3301 or jkkelley@charlottediocese.org.

Q. Several months ago our sister died, leaving a large sum of money for Masses. We want to comply with her wishes, but how do we distribute these Masses and be assured they will be offered? (Ohio)

A. Offerings for Mass intentions may be given to any priest, who is then obliged to apply the Masses for those specific intentions. Parishes, monasteries and other Catholic institutions may also accept such offerings, committing themselves to having the Mass intentions fulfilled by priests connected with that institution.

In your case, with the large number of Masses desired, you may wish to distribute them among several parishes or individual priests. In fact, you may find it necessary to do that since no priest may accept more Mass offerings than he can fulfill or arrange to be fulfilled by others within a year.

Once a priest or Catholic institution has accepted the Mass offerings you give them, you need not worry about your requests being satisfied. Church law seriously obliges priests to satisfy all Mass obligations they have accepted and to do so in a timely fashion, certainly, as I said, within a year.

The case of Terri Schiavo

One can't let go if she isn't going anywhere

She is not dying. She has no terminal illness. She is not in a coma. She is not on life-support equipment. She is not alone, but rather has loving parents and siblings ready to care for her for the rest of her life. She has not requested death.

Yet a battle rages regarding whether Terri Schindler-Schiavo should be starved. She has sustained brain injuries and cannot speak or eat normally. Nevertheless, the only tube attached to her is a small, simple, painless feeding tube that provides her nourishment directly to her digestive system.

Her legal guardian is her husband, who already is with another woman — by whom he also has children. He wants Terri's feeding tube removed. Of course, he could simply allow her to be cared for by her parents and siblings, and get on with his life, but he refuses.

I have had two opportunities to visit Terri, most recently on the first Sunday of February. I have been able to talk to her, to listen to her struggle to speak, to watch her focus her eyes and smile and attempt to kiss her parents. I have prayed with her, blessed her and assured her that she has many friends around the country and around the world, who love her and want her to enjoy the same protections we all enjoy, even when we're wounded.

News articles have recently characterized Terri's situation by saying that some want to "keep her alive against her husband's wishes." But Terri is not dying. What does "keeping her alive" mean, if not the same thing as keeping you and me alive — that is, by giving us adequate food, shelter and care?

Some say that Terri's family should "let her go." But this is not a matter of "letting her go," because she isn't "going" anywhere. If, however, she is deprived of nourishment, then she would slowly die in the same way that any of us would slowly die if we were deprived of nourishment. It is called starvation.

If the courts permit that to happen, then why should that permission apply only in Terri's case? There would be no way to limit it to her case alone. Countless others would follow, and their deaths would be described as "letting them die" instead of "killing them."

Where, indeed, does the state get the authority to starve people? Court decisions permitting this lack all authority, as Pope John Paul II teaches in "The Gospel of Life" (section 72). These decisions cannot be obeyed, because they are not binding on the conscience and are in fact acts of violence.

At the present time, there are two simple things you can do. Educate your neighbors about this situation. Visit our Web site, www.priestsforlife.org, and click on the "Terri Schiavo" link. Second, contact anyone you know in Florida and ask them to encourage their governor and state legislators to continue doing everything possible to save Terri's life.

For more information on this crucial case, visit our Website, www.priestsforlife.org. If you want educational cards on Terri's situation, contact our orders department at orders@priestsforlife.org, or by calling 888-PFL-3448, ext. 237, or by writing Orders Department, Priests for Life, PO Box 141172, Staten Island, NY 10314.

Marriage isn't all glitter and gold

Our Turn

THERESE J.
BORCHARD
CNS COLUMNIST

After a mere four and a half years, Hollywood's most celebrated marriage — between America's heartthrob Brad Pitt and "Friends" favorite star Jennifer Aniston — has ended in speculation that has the tabloids guessing everything from extramarital affairs, ultimatums about babies and the usual celebrity gossip about jealousy, careers and whether beautiful people can remain faithful in a world of glitter.

My naive self was among the many young adults who invested hope in Jen's and Brad's marriage because, like the nuptials of Princess Diana and Prince Charles, it seemed like the one fairy tale that wouldn't end as half of marriages do — in bitter divorce.

As a product of a split family, nothing gives me nightmares more than messy breakups. Like many brides, I said my vows knowing that marriage wasn't always going to be as easy as it appeared on that gorgeous day I said "I do." Yet I didn't expect the newness to wear off as the mundane responsibilities of playing house with someone — taking out the trash, washing endless loads of laundry and feeding and bathing children — introduced me to domesticity's boring side.

Like half of American wives today, I can say I'm in this relationship for the long haul. The white gown and wedding ring (to which I'm now allergic) weren't just props for a personalized pageant. They signified the end of a me-first attitude and the beginning of a life together with someone I love.

A friend who recently celebrated her 25th wedding anniversary told me that marriage at nine years is much more difficult than it is at 25 years. In the earlier years, a couple hasn't worked out all the kinks.

Perhaps that's why many people are divorcing after a few years of marriage. Just as the romance fades, the real work starts. You realize your spouse snores and is grumpy when he has the flu. But you love him anyway.

And if you happen to fall in love with a person, place or thing, you do so as a married entity, with a respectful distance so as to not break the bonds of your commitment.

Marriage isn't for sissies or for people used to glitter and gold. More often than not, the daily give-and-take of a committed relationship chips away at a person's selfishness and ego, making her into a kinder, more compassionate human being. But that only comes with a little boredom.

How common mendacity is!

Telling lies comes too easy to many of us

Recently, I used the word "mendacity" in a passing comment during a lecture on contemporary business ethics. I may even have used the word "mendacious" in describing an auditor's complicity in filing a false income statement.

In any case, a mid-level manager came up to me afterward and said, "You used a word that I never heard before, 'mendacity.' What does it mean?"

My immediate reaction was to admire his honesty in acknowledging his own modest vocabulary deficit. Some others in the audience probably didn't know the meaning of the word either, but chose, as so many of us do from time to time, not to let on.

We're not expected to declare to the world our ignorance of things our conversation partners presume that we know and understand. But if we shade the truth in speech we originate and, of course, tell an outright lie, we're left open to the charge of mendacity.

A column by Don Aucoin in the Boston Globe Sunday Magazine last summer highlighted New York State Attorney General Elliot Spitzer's disclosures of the extent of fraud committed by Wall Street investment banking firms. The article was titled "Let's Be Honest."

"The country seems to be on a lying binge," writes Aucoin. "The simple act of telling the truth seems unaccountably hard for a lot of people these days."

His point is that "the simple act of telling the truth" is a solution to the problem of corporate fraud.

"The tide of corruption at Enron, WorldCom, Tyco, Arthur Andersen, ImClone et al," says Aucoin, "represents a profound breach of the social contract and persuasive evidence of a systemic, robber-baron ethos at play — one that, if unchecked, could threaten the livelihoods and retirement dreams of millions of working stiffs."

The way to check it is "the simple act of telling the truth."

In giving advice to Catholic Church officials still trying to work their way through the clergy sexual-abuse scandals of 2002, Margaret O'Brien Steinfels, former editor of Commonweal, said simply, "Tell the truth." She added: "We must pursue a form of what Vaclav Havel, president of the Czech Republic, called 'living in truth' in his 1978 essay, 'The Power of the Powerless.' 'Living within the truth,' he wrote, 'is an attempt to gain control over one's own sense of responsibility.'"

Havel saw "living a lie" as a condition "so subtle and so unconscious that

Looking Around

FATHER
WILLIAM J.
BYRON, SJ
CNS COLUMNIST

those who live a lie may not fully grasp the ordinary subterfuge in which they carry on their daily life," Steinfels said.

The subtlety of it all has to be respected by everyone in church and state, business and government — wherever human persons communicate. "Living within the truth" implies a serious responsibility to understand the meaning of "mendacity," which, of course, is the opposite of "veracity."

A lawyer friend told me the other day that veracity is so much on his mind that he finds himself challenging young associates if they say, in written or oral communication with clients, "It's almost ready," when, in fact, not one word of the brief or memorandum has found its way onto paper.

"Veracity is a crucial but neglected virtue," says this senior partner. "It's easy to start with small untruths, but that can escalate into exaggeration of the number of hours worked (and billed) and on to outright misrepresentations."

Avoiding mendacity is a challenge for us all.

BUNDLE OF JOY

Chicago priest finds premature newborn at church door

BY MICHELLE MARTIN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

CHICAGO — When Father Paul Kalchik peered behind the vestibule door at St. Michael Church in Chicago before the 9:30 a.m. Mass Feb. 6, he saw a bundle wrapped in a blue terry-cloth towel.

It wasn't until he unwrapped the cloth that the tiny baby inside started to cry, and Father Kalchik's training as a nurse — a degree he studied for but never completed — and as a priest kicked in.

"I was thinking, 'Little baby. Cold little baby. Get the baby warm. Get the baby safe,'" Father Kalchik said from his office at Archbishop Quigley Preparatory Seminary Feb. 7.

And as he carried the baby up the aisle and into the attached rectory, he noticed the tiny boy urinating on him ("That's good — it means his kidneys are functioning," Father Kalchik thought) as he pronounced the prayers of baptism.

He christened the child Michael Joseph, in honor of St. Michael the Archangel, the parish's patron, and late pastor Father Joseph Nowack. All the while, a small parade of lecturers, eucharistic ministers and other parishioners followed, while a choir member began leading the waiting congregation of 200 to 300 people in prayer.

After Father Kalchik wrapped the baby in a dry towel and called authorities, Michael Joseph was taken to Advocate Trinity Hospital. Staff said the boy, at 3 pounds 4 ounces, was about five weeks premature. He needed tube feeding but was otherwise well.

Meanwhile, Father Kalchik started Mass about 20 minutes late. He and parishioners prayed for the boy and his mother at that Mass, the 11 a.m. Sunday Mass and daily Masses.

"Obviously, this pregnancy was not totally wanted," Father Kalchik said. "But she did carry it to term, and she did bring the baby to a safe place. Churches have traditionally been seen as a place of sanctuary."

Whoever it was might be familiar with the parish's Mass schedule, Father Kalchik said, because the baby was placed in the vestibule sometime after 9:10 a.m., when he finished greeting parishioners after the 8 a.m. Mass, and before 9:30 a.m.

Illinois' "safe haven" law allows mothers of newborns to leave them, no questions asked, at police stations, fire stations and hospitals. Churches are not on that list, and the state Department of Children and Family Services was investigating.

That same morning, Father Kalchik said, two parish families expressed interest in adopting the boy.

Discussing Vatican II

COURTESY PHOTO

Msgr. John McSweeney, pastor of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, speaks to more than 100 people at the church Feb. 8 about the importance of the Second Vatican Council in recognition of its upcoming 40th anniversary.

Vatican II, as it is called, was an ecclesial, theological and ecumenical congress convened in the autumns of four years from 1962 through 1965 with bishops from around the world. The council produced 16 documents and brought about many changes in the Catholic Church, including those on liturgy and Catholic social teaching.

Msgr. McSweeney will give more lectures on Vatican II throughout March and April. Scheduled times are: Feb. 28, March 7 and 21, and April 4 at 7-8:15 p.m.; and March 1, 8 and 22, and April 5 at 6:30-7:45 p.m. Childcare is available by reservation at (704) 543-7677 ext. 1011.

When Carmelite Sister Lucia dos Santos — the last of three Fatima visionaries — was buried in mid-February, a surprising number of people believed still-secret secrets of Fatima were buried with her.

Her Feb. 13 death also led to widespread discussion in Italy about the number 13, given the fact that the Blessed Virgin Mary promised to appear to Lucia and her two cousins on the 13th of the month. The apparitions took place from May 13 to Oct. 13, 1917.

MISSION OF FAITH

The coffin of U.S. missionary Sister Dorothy Stang is carried by members of the Landless Movement during funeral services Feb. 15 in Anapu, Brazil. Sister Stang, a member of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, lived in Brazil's Amazon region for nearly four decades, working to protect the land rights of peasants and speaking out concerning the ecological dangers of deforestation.

Murdered nun spoke of 'great struggle' in one of her last letters

BALTIMORE (CNS) — In what might have been her last letter before she was murdered Feb. 12, U.S. missionary Sister Dorothy Stang spoke of the "great struggle" in Brazil, where she had spent nearly 40 years.

The letter was to her fellow Sister of Notre Dame de Namur and longtime close friend, Sister Barbara Ann English, director of Baltimore's Julie Community Center. The two had spent nearly 20 years together in Brazil before Sister English returned to the United States in 1985.

In the card, Sister Stang wrote: "Yes, we are in a great struggle, and the sense of solidarity is our source of life."

Sister English received the note Feb. 11. The next day she learned that "Dot," her 73-year-old "sister, colleague, friend and co-madre" had been shot four times in the chest and head by a pair of gunmen while she was visiting a remote rural encampment near Anapu, on the outskirts of the Amazon jungle.

Sister Stang had been a missionary in Brazil for almost 40 years, and for the past 22 years she worked in the Amazon with the poor and landless as she joined in the struggle to preserve the rain forest.

Sister English, 71, had just returned from the funeral of another nun when she got a phone call about Sister Stang's death. Sister English was shocked and grief-stricken, but not surprised.

"It wasn't that this could happen, because it could have happened to any one of us at any time," she said.

She knew that her friend had been on a hit list, and she remembered how the danger of being killed had been almost ever-present when she worked in Brazil during the years of the military dictatorship of the 1960s and '70s.

"We lived with landowners and people that were hired by big companies who terrorized with guns and machine guns," she said. But, the people for whom she and Sister Stang and other Sisters provided pastoral care "are the people you work with and love, and so you go on about your business. You can't allow yourself to be terrorized."

Sister English said her heart is full of memories of the woman who had wanted to be a missionary since she was a child, the woman she calls a pioneer and martyr.

After a 2004 visit, Sister English said Sister Stang told her: "I have learned that faith sustains you, and I have also learned that three things are difficult: One, as a woman to be taken seriously in the struggle for land reform; two, to stay faithful to believing that these small groups of poor farmers will prevail in organizing and carrying their own agenda forward; and three, to have the courage to give your life in the struggle for change."

Supreme Court rejects request to reconsider Roe vs. Wade

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Supreme Court Feb. 22 turned down a request that it reconsider its 1973 Roe vs. Wade ruling that legalized abortion.

Norma McCorvey, who was identified as "Jane Roe" in the 1973 case, and Sandra Cano, the "Mary Doe" of the companion Doe vs. Bolton ruling, petitioned the court to set aside the decisions, or at least order a new trial on the merits for reversal.

Neither Cano nor McCorvey ever had the abortions at issue in their cases. Both women now oppose abortion. Their effort to see the Roe and Doe decisions overturned is backed by 33 women from 19 states who say they regret having had abortions.

Without comment, the court rejected the appeal.

Americans United for Life said the problem is the court's current makeup.

"The justices' refusal to consider this case shows that they won't consider the growing evidence that abortion hurts women physically, emotionally and psychologically," said Dorinda Bordlee, senior legislative counsel for Americans United for Life.

"While unfortunate, the decision from this court was expected. This proves the need for justices who will respect self-government," said Bordlee. "In a matter as weighty as this, the people should decide, not unelected judges."

The Roe decision threw out most state restrictions on abortion, while the Doe decision permitted abortions through all nine months of pregnancy.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Justices Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia have said Roe was wrongly decided and should be overturned.

However, it is rare for the court to reopen a case based on changed circumstances. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in September threw out the lawsuit, saying McCorvey's claims were no longer relevant because the Texas abortion ban of that era had long ago been repealed.

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope issues letter on recent trends in media, communications

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II has written an apostolic letter on recent trends in media and communications, the Vatican said.

The letter, titled "The Rapid Development," was released at a Vatican press conference Feb. 21. The letter was relatively brief — under 20 pages — and addressed primarily to those responsible for social communications.

In addition to looking at the way Catholics can and must use the media and interact with them, the pope called for greater public involvement with the running of newspapers, television and radio stations.

"If the communications media are a good destined for all humanity, then ever-new means must be found ... to make possible a true participation in their management by all," the pope said.

U.S. Archbishop John P. Foley, president of the Pontifical Council for Social Communications, addressed the press conference, along with other officials of the pontifical council.

Last year, the pope met with pontifical council members as they marked the 40th anniversary of the Second Vatican Council's Decree on the Instruments of Social Communication ("Inter Mirifica").

That decree called on members of the church, especially laity, to instill a "human and Christian spirit" into newspapers, magazines, books, films, radio and television.

For many years, the pope has issued an annual message to mark the World Day of Social Communications. In recent years, the pontifical council has issued a document on media ethics and two documents on the Internet.

Vatican, Israeli representatives meet in Jerusalem, set more meetings

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In an ongoing attempt to negotiate agreements called for by a 1993 treaty, Vatican and Israeli representatives met Feb. 17 in Jerusalem and agreed to hold further meetings in March and April.

A source close to the Vatican negotiators told Catholic News Service the meeting lasted less than three hours, but after a December meeting was canceled and a January meeting was postponed the fact that the two sides met was positive.

The 1993 Fundamental Agreement between the Vatican and Israel, which led the way to full diplomatic relations, specified that further negotiations were to be held to develop treaties on legal and fiscal issues.

The current talks are focused on the church's long-standing exemption from local property taxes — an exemption the government unilaterally revoked in 2002 — and on the Vatican's insistence that property disputes involving the church be resolved in a court of law, not by politicians.

On the Israeli side, the Vatican source said, "there were promises and assurances of good faith. We are awaiting further developments."

"There is openness on the Israeli side, but we are waiting for that to be translated into a text," which would be legally binding on both sides, he said.

"The problems are not technically difficult," he said, but the Israeli government must decide whether concrete relations with the Catholic Church will continue to be a matter handled politically by the government or will be normalized and recognized in Israeli law.

The choice, he said, is that issues involving the Catholic Church and church property in Israel would continue to be "determined by executive order or begin to be determined by rule of law. Will they move from a situation of control to mutually agreed rights and duties?"

The source said he is convinced that the Feb. 17 meeting would not have taken place at all if the U.S. government had not put pressure on the Israeli government to return to the negotiations.

Israeli Franciscan Father David Jaeger, an expert on Vatican-Israeli relations, told Vatican Radio: "There was a good atmosphere. The people involved have known each other for some time" and are committed to concrete results.

The Israeli ambassador to the Vatican, Oded Ben-Hur, told Vatican Radio: "Obviously, I share this sense of optimism. The serious intention and the good will on the part of Israel to arrive, finally, at the conclusion of these negotiations have been understood."

Galveston-Houston now an archdiocese

HOUSTON (CNS) — With the reading of the papal decree during a special Mass Feb. 16 at St. Michael the Archangel Church in Houston, the establishment of Galveston-Houston as an archdiocese became official.

The decree was read by Archbishop Gabriel Montalvo, apostolic nuncio to the United States.

Pope John Paul II divided the state of Texas into two ecclesiastical provinces Dec. 29, making Galveston-Houston an archdiocese and the metropolitan see for six other eastern Texas dioceses — Austin, Tyler, Beaumont, Victoria, Corpus Christi and Brownsville.

The other archdiocese in the state, San Antonio, remains the metropolitan see for seven other dioceses — Dallas, Fort Worth, Amarillo, Lubbock, San Angelo, Laredo and El Paso.

Ninth annual St. Pat's parade coming to Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — The Ninth Annual St. Patrick's Day Parade and Festival will take place in uptown Charlotte on Saturday, March 12.

James Babb, president of Babb Communications, will serve as grand marshal and Moira Quinn, interim president and senior vice president for communications for Charlotte Center City Partners, will be deputy grand marshal.

Catholic schools and other local Catholic organizations, including the Knights of Columbus and Ancient Order of Hibernians, were among the 80 groups marching in last year's parade. This year's parade, which runs along Tryon Street past St. Peter Church, is expected to be the largest yet.

The festival, which is free and open to the public, will feature live Irish music, food, activities for children and an "Irish Marketplace," which will feature Irish arts and crafts.

The headline band will be The Wolfe Tones' Derek Warfield on tour direct from Ireland. The Federal Brothers Band also will perform throughout the day, as well as performances by Mulligan's Banned and Rince na H'Eireann School of Irish Dance and Walsh Kelley School of Irish Dance.

FOR THE LEAST AMONG US Kernersville Knights raise funds for local organizations

KERNERSVILLE — On behalf of the The Lamb Foundation of North Carolina, Inc., the Knights of Columbus Council 8509 at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville reported Feb. 16 that it had raised almost $22,000 in 2004 to benefit mentally handicapped adults and children in North Carolina.

"Eighty five percent of this amount will be distributed to requesting organizations in Forsyth County and will be combined with funds raised by three other Knights of Columbus councils in Forsyth County," said David Thomas, the council's 2004 local coordinator.

The funds will be distributed to the organizations during a private dinner at St. Leo the Great Church in Winston-Salem March 10.

"The North Carolina State Knights of Columbus will distribute the remaining 15 percent," said Thomas.

The councils in Forsyth County have raised more than $92,000 the past three years to support both local and state organizations for schools with mentally handicapped programs. One hundred percent of all funds raised is used for charitable purposes as designated.

"We enjoyed an extremely fine campaign along with the dedicated time and effort of so many workers," said Fred Hogan, council publicity chairman. "Many of them came from outside our parish limits, willing to assist as they knew of the 'good and generous' outcome of this particular charitable program."

The Knights of Columbus, an international service organization founded in 1882 in New Haven, Conn., has more than 1.5 million members worldwide. The Knights emphasize charity in each council's local community.

The services the Knights provide are entirely volunteer and range from fund-raising for the underprivileged to highway cleanup efforts. In December 2004, Council 8509 collected 17 bags of garbage and a large bag of aluminum cans along Hastings Hill Road in Kernersville.

'May the Lord repay her abundantly for the great and hidden service she gave the church.' — Pope John Paul II

Pope, cardinal talk of last Fatima visionary cousins, Francisco and Jacinta Marto, were beatified — a step toward sainthood — in 2000.

Italian Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone of Genoa, who celebrated Sister Lucia's funeral in the pope's name, discussed all three issues with the press.

In 2000, when Pope John Paul II, who met Sister Lucia three times, ordered the publication of the so-called "third secret" of Fatima — a description of a vision the Blessed Virgin Mary showed the children — groups such as the Canadian-based Fatima Center immediately began claiming that the publication was incomplete and the Vatican was hiding something.

And when Sister Lucia died, the Fatima Center posted a message on its Web site saying it would continue a "campaign for the release of the full third secret."

But Cardinal Bertone, who had spent hours with Sister Lucia discussing the third secret and the Vatican's interpretation of it before it was published, categorically denied anything remains a secret.

"I can say, without any doubt, that it is absolutely certain that everything having to do with the secret of Fatima has been revealed and that the third part of the secret is contained in the four pages that we published in their entirety and which correspond exactly to the letter written personally by Sister Lucia," Cardinal Bertone said Feb. 14 before flying to Portugal for the funeral.

The cardinal said he was aware that people, despite the affirmations of Pope John Paul, continue to claim there is more to the secret, but he insists the Vatican published everything in its possession.

"I explicitly asked Sister Lucia if she had written something before or after what has been published of the third secret. She herself confirmed that she had written nothing either before or after," Cardinal Bertone said.

'Great and hidden service'

Pope John Paul II said he was deeply moved when he heard that Sister Lucia "was called by the heavenly Father to his eternal dwelling place."

Sister Lucia died in the Carmelite cloister in Coimbra, Portugal, at 97.

"I remember with emotion the various meetings I had with her and the bonds of spiritual friendship that intensified with the passing of time," Pope John Paul said.

"May the Lord repay her abundantly for the great and hidden service she gave the church," the pope wrote to Bishop Albino Mamede Cleto of Coimbra.

The Portuguese girl was only 10 years old when she and her two younger cousins claimed they saw the Blessed Virgin Mary at Fatima in 1917. The Catholic Church has ruled that the apparitions and the messages from Our Lady of Fatima were worthy of belief.

In 2000, Pope John Paul ordered the publication of the so-called "third secret" of Fatima, which he believed referred to the 20th-century persecution of the church under Nazism and communism and spoke of the 1981 attempt to assassinate him.

The pope was shot May 13, 1981, the anniversary of the first of the Fatima apparitions.

Pope John Paul has said he believes Mary saved his life that day; he sent one of the bullets removed from his abdomen to Fatima, where it is part of the crown on the statue of Our Lady.

Cardinal Bertone was asked by reporters to comment on the number 13.

"The fact that the number 13 connects almost all the apparitions and was the date of the attempted assassination of the pope is something more than simple coincidence, I think," the cardinal said.

"In the same way, I think it is a heavenly sign that the Madonna called Sister Lucia to herself precisely on the 13th of February," the cardinal said.

The cardinal said people should remember the 13th of each month, "not out of superstition," but simply because God and the Blessed Virgin Mary had done extraordinary things on that date in the past.

Cardinal Bertone said he last visited Sister Lucia in November 2003 and told her that he would come visit her again.

"She told me that I would not see her alive again, but that I would come only to bless her casket. She knew even this," the cardinal told reporters.

"I am not saying this was a prophecy, but it was the simple truth," he said.

Beatifying the visionary

After the funeral, Cardinal Bertone confirmed that Sister Lucia's computer and all the letters, diaries and other written material found in her cell at the cloister had been collected and sealed.

"They will be examined one by one in the process for her beatification, which will begin soon," the cardinal said.

However, Cardinal Bertone did not give any timeline for the official opening of her cause, nor did he indicate whether he thought Pope John Paul would waive church rules requiring a five-year waiting period before the process could begin.

Jesuit Father Paolo Molinari, postulator of the cause for Blesseds Francisco and Jacinta, said he personally believes it is important to wait.

"We must avoid the danger of people thinking that she is being beatified or canonized just because of the visions," he said Feb. 16.

"The apparitions of Our Lady and what Our Lady said certainly had an impact on Sister Lucia's life," he said, but they did not make her holy.

"She accepted the message and she lived according to the message for more than 80 years, offering her life for the sake of sinners. This is holiness, not just receiving the grace of a vision," the Jesuit said.

The five-year wait allows the church to confirm that a large number of the faithful around the world recognize in a prospective saint a special way of living the Christian faith and helping "bring God's love, mercy and goodness into the world because she modeled her life on the life of Jesus Christ," Father Molinari said.

In his message to Bishop Cleto, the pope said that with her death Sister Lucia "reached the goal she always aspired to in prayer and in the silence of the convent."

"Sister Lucia leaves us an example of great fidelity to the Lord and of joyfully following his divine will," the pope wrote.

Seventh-graders at Asheville Catholic School learn to read and write Japanese during part of a two-day workshop in February.

Asheville Catholic students learn art of Japanese writing

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — In conjunction with their ongoing studies of Japan, seventh-graders at Asheville Catholic School were recently treated to a two-day workshop on the art of Japanese writing and language taught by a World War II veteran.

Bryan Battey, who learned Japanese in the U.S. Navy and served as a translator for captured Japanese soldiers, showed the students the history of the written Japanese language as an art form of symbols and characters dating back to 700 A.D.

School librarian Pamela Budd, who spent three weeks in Japan in November as part of a Fulbright Memorial Fund Teaching Program, saw Battey's demonstration at an Asheville Arts Council showcase and invited him to enrich the seventh-graders' study of Japan.

Battey taught the students how to write many of the Japanese characters and form basic radicals, or root words, from which other words are formed.

By the second session, students were asking about "stroke order" and "key strokes" of characters, and how to form different words.

In addition to how to write Japanese words, Battey also taught the students the cultural significance of many words in the language.

The Chinese originally carried the first written language to Japan to teach about Buddhism, Battey explained.

"They kept the pictures simple so the uneducated could learn the language quickly," he said.

For example, said Battey, to express a loud noise, a symbol of three women talking was used. For louder noises, the characters representing four dragons were used.

The seventh-graders were familiar with the Japanese word "samurai," so Battey explained that samurai began as a group of men to defend against bandits who were stealing grain from wealthy farmers. But in time, some samurai began taking advantage of the poor, forcing them to pay for protection; thus, the symbol for samurai eventually became one for an unsavory person.

Students also learned the symbol for nine with round trip ("maru") is, according to Battey, included in "all seagoing cargo vessels in Japan, because they believe the ship will go off and never be seen again without it."

Teacher Sue Banks said the students were very interested in the workshop.

"They really got into this," she said.

Catholic student band members honored, perform in local events

CHARLOTTE — As a result of recent auditions, students from Charlotte Catholic High School and Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School in Charlotte gained membership in area honors band and orchestra programs.

Several Charlotte Catholic students were selected for the South Central All District Concert Band Festival, which took place Jan. 29-31 in Mooresville. The top students from instrumental music programs across a six-county area are picked annually for the band.

Charlotte Catholic students selected were Kris Bahar, Deanna Becker, Mark Binetti, Jenna Harper, Megan Hermance, Alexandra Reinhart and Emily Sharp, with Emily Freeman and Kaitlin Gilbride picked as alternates.

In addition, Charlotte Catholic's Chelsey Conrad, Andrew Randazzo and Andrew Mack were selected for the All District Jazz Band Festival, a new event planned this year for Feb. 28 at Lenoir-Rhyne College in Hickory.

A number of students from Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School also were selected for the All District Concert Band Festival. They were Alexandra Boss, Ryan Brennan, Eric Gleeson, John Luttrell, Becca Mack, Keagan Maryman, Evan Peleaux, Carianne Schlie and Hilary Sharp. Maggie Luttrell was selected as an alternate.

Charlotte Catholic High School Band plans to participate in the St. Patrick's Day Parade in Charlotte March 12, the South Central District Band Festival in Shelby and the North American Music Festival in New York in April.

Holy Trinity's sixth-grade band will perform the home opening game of the Charlotte Knights baseball season this spring, while the eighth-grade band will participate in the Smoky Mountain Music Festival in Gatlinburg, Tenn., in May.

Spiritual foundation for the Liturgy of the Word

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 9

For the last several weeks, we have been considering the Introductory Rites of the Mass. We discovered that as the highest form of prayer, the Mass teaches us how to pray.

The Mass begins with the Penitential Rite, which allows us the opportunity to confess our need for God's abundant mercy. Likewise, prayer begins with the humble recognition of one's inadequacy in the presence of God.

After recognizing our sinfulness and God's abundant mercy, we are moved to praise and adore the Blessed Trinity in the ancient hymn known as the Gloria. Likewise, prayer moves from humility and repentance to praise and adoration.

Finally, the Introductory Rites of the Mass reach their culmination and fulfillment in the Opening Collect or Prayer. The celebrant collects the petitions and intercessions of the sacrifice and implores the Father through the Son in the Holy Spirit. Prayer, as in the Mass, then moves from praise and adoration to petition and intercession.

So far, the Introductory Rites of the Mass teach us that prayer has the following form: humility, praise and petition. But there is still a further component to prayer, beyond the scope of what we have already accomplished. We must listen to the voice of the Lord. We must be receptive to the Word of God.

Prayer, too, becomes more receptive and meditative as we listen to the voice of God. And so, the Mass moves from the Introductory Rites to the Liturgy of the Word. The congregation is seated to listen attentively as God instructs his people.

Perhaps the most beautiful papal teaching on the holy sacrifice of the Mass, "Mediator Dei," written by Pope Pius XII in 1947, explains the encounter with Christ in the Liturgy of the Word:

"In the sacred liturgy, the whole Christ is proposed to us in all the circumstances of his life, as the Word of the eternal Father, as born of the Virgin Mother of God, as he who teaches us truth, heals the sick, consoles the afflicted, who endures suffering and who dies; finally, as he who rose triumphantly from the dead, and who, reigning in the glory of Heaven, sends us the Holy Paraclete, and who abides in his Church forever...."

"The liturgy shows us Christ not only as a model to be imitated but as a master to whom we should listen readily, a shepherd whom we should follow, as author of our salvation, the source of our holiness and the head of the mystical body whose members we are, living by his very life....

Guest Column

FATHER MATTHEW BUETTNER

"Hence, the liturgical year, devotedly fostered and accompanied by the Church, is not a cold and lifeless representation of the events of the past, or a simple and bare record of a former age. It is rather Christ himself, who is ever living in his Church (No. 151-153; 163-165)."

In other words, Pope Pius XII teaches that the Liturgy of the Word is not a simple recounting of historical events; it is not merely the formal reading of sacred texts; it is not a quaint reminder of our past; but rather the recapitulation of the saving work of our Lord.

Through the faithful proclamation of salvation history found in sacred Scripture, we gain access to the saving mysteries of our faith. The events of the past are brought into the present. The mysteries of the life of Our Lord are brought into light today to continue and to fulfill the work of salvation in each generation.

Christ continues his redemptive activity, his mission of teaching the truth that sets us free. As his present day disciples, we have a privileged place of honor sitting at the feet of the master, listening to him, listening to the voice of the good shepherd who leads us to eternal life.

St. John Eudes wrote, "We must continue to accomplish in ourselves the stages of Jesus' life and his mysteries and often to beg him to perfect and realize them in us and in his whole Church...." (Liturgy of the Hours, Friday, week 33).

Next week we will examine how the divine mysteries are unfolded as we look at the structure of the Liturgy of the Word.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Diocese in compliance with charter

the "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People." The bishops' Office of Child and Youth Protection prepared the report for the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and the National Review Board, appointed by the bishops to monitor compliance with the charter. The all-lay review board approved the report before it was sent to the USCCB.

The charter was approved by the bishops in 2002 and calls for an annual compliance report.

This was the second year in a row that on-site audits were done in dioceses, with much of the data based on self-reporting by church officials. While the charter requires the child protection office to issue annual compliance reports, it does not stipulate how to gather the data for the report.

The 46-county Diocese of Charlotte was audited for compliance during Aug. 16-20, 2004. It also was found in compliance during the first national audit report, released in January 2004.

"It is gratifying to continue to be in compliance with the charter," said Bishop Peter J. Jugis. "I will continue my daily prayers for all victims of abuse in our society."

Local statistics

During 2004, the Diocese of Charlotte spent $48,172 on programs aimed at protecting children, including training and background checks of staff and volunteers — 4,502 staff and volunteers received the training and/or were subjected to background checks.

The diocese also provided $15,385 in assistance to victims of abuse, all of which was used for counseling services. No money was paid for settlements or attorneys' fees. No funds from parish collections or the Diocesan Support Appeal were used for the assistance.

Also during the year, the diocesan Review Board investigated one complaint, which was made regarding an incident alleged to have happened in the 1970s. The board found the complaint not credible. Bishop Jugis concurred and no further action was taken.

One priest was removed from active ministry in February 2004, when information about his service in another diocese was reported to officials of the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Here in the Diocese of Charlotte, we have policies, programs, people and, most importantly, prayer to address this problem," said Bishop Jugis. "Prayer is the primary response for the people of God when confronted with something as evil as sex abuse."

National perspective

The 50-page audit report said that in 2004 there were 1,092 new allegations nationally of child sex abuse made against 756 diocesan and religious priests and deacons, with most of the alleged abuse taking place between 1965-74. It said 73 percent of the accused, prior to the allegation, had been removed from ministry or were dead or missing. No breakdown of priests and deacons was given.

Half of the new allegations were against clergy who had been previously accused. Males accounted for 78 percent of the 1,083 accusers.

During 2004, the U.S. church spent $158 million for sex abuse-related activities, with more than $106 million paid in settlements to victims, the report said. The figures include money spent by religious orders. When added to other published figures, the U.S. church has now spent about $1 billion in child sex abuse-related costs since the beginning of 1950.

The data on new allegations and spending came from a separately commissioned study done by the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA), based at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., and incorporated into the final report by the bishops' child protection office.

The report also includes recommendations for improving policies. These include developing a mediation system for the resolution of allegations and an annual report by each diocese and eparchy with information about new allegations and costs.

"There is undoubtedly progress still to be made," said Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., USCCB president, in a cover letter to the report.

"Much of what dioceses face today is the result of past abusive behavior — often long past — and procedures are in place to deal with and put a stop to new instances of abuse that may be reported," he said.

Despite the almost-total compliance of dioceses and eparchies with the charter, "continued external oversight and evaluation (are) essential" since compliance "may improve or diminish over time," said the audit report.

An audit "does not ensure that all offenders or potential offenders have been appropriately removed from ministry," it added.

Breaking down the audit

The report is based on audits of 194 of the 195 U.S. dioceses and eparchies conducted by the Gavin Group Inc. of Boston and on data collected by CARA from dioceses, eparchies and religious orders.

Only the Diocese of Lincoln, Neb., did not participate in the compliance audits. No reason was given in the report.

Of the 194 dioceses and eparchies audited, only seven were not compliant with one or more of the charter's 17 articles on Dec. 31.

This is a significant advance from the 2003 report, when 19 of the 191 dioceses and eparchies audited were not compliant with aspects of the charter.

Compliance was judged in two steps. First was the on-site audit, which judged the situation since the 2003 audit. Dioceses not in compliance with aspects of the charter were given "required actions" to remedy the situation and had until the end of the year to take the actions.

Initially, 50 dioceses received "required actions" with 43 taking the necessary actions by the end of 2004.

Regarding allegations and spending, CARA received responses from 181 dioceses and eparchies, representing 93 percent of the total, and from 158 religious communities representing 71 percent of the total U.S. male religious population.

Spending figures showed that 32 percent of the $140 million spent by dioceses and eparchies was covered by insurance and 12 percent of the $18 million spent by religious orders was covered by insurance.

The report said that the new allegations generally parallel the patterns of gender and age reported in the massive "nature and scope" study of clergy child sex abuse from 1950 to 2002 released last year by the National Review Board.

The "nature and scope" study conducted by the John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York reported that 81 percent of the accusers were males while the 2004 audit showed that 78 percent were males. The John Jay study reported that 59 percent of the accusers were between 10 and 14 years old when the abuse began while the 2004 figures reported that 55 percent were in the same age group.

Other stats and recommendations

Other figures from the 2004 report include:

— 3,277 victims and some of their relatives received outreach services from dioceses.

— 43 priests were laicized.

— 56 allegations received before 2004 were judged false in 2004.

— 57 of the allegations made in 2004 were judged false.

The audit also reported major inroads in conducting background checks of clergy, lay employees and lay volunteers coming into regular contact with children. Important strides were also made in implementing "safe environment" education programs to prevent abuse. The background checks and education programs are considered crucial to long-term efforts to prevent child sex abuse.

Background checks have been conducted on 92 percent of the 34,874 diocesan priests needing them. All 13,559 deacons subject to background checks

Protecting God's Children

CHARLOTTE — In the Diocese of Charlotte, policies, procedures, programs and people are in place to combat the sin of sexual abuse of minors. They are:

— A written policy to deal with the sin of sexual abuse that was put in place in 1994. The "Policy of the Diocese of Charlotte Concerning Ministry-Related Sexual Misconduct by Church Personnel" has been updated to reflect the values expressed in 2002 in the U.S. bishops' "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People."

— The policy included the establishment of a review board, a group of volunteers not employed by the diocese, with the exception of one priest. The group includes a psychological counselor. Their role is to review allegations of abuse and to make recommendations to the bishop.

— Procedures that encourage people to come forward if they have witnessed or experienced sexual abuse. The procedures can be found on the diocesan Web site, www.charlottediocese.org. The diocese also encourages anyone who has been a victim to report the incident to civil authorities. The diocese will cooperate with any investigation.

— Lay people who serve as victims' assistance coordinators. Three coordinators are located in diocesan offices in Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Asheville.

— Training for clergy, staff and volunteers. Since June 2002, more than 9,000 diocesan employees and volunteers have completed the Protecting God's Children Training Program to help them recognize and prevent the sexual abuse of children. The diocese has also implemented a version of Protecting God's Children for minors.

— Background investigations for clergy, volunteers, teachers and contractors who have contact with minors.

More than 97 percent of the 185,924 Catholic school educators have had background checks. More than 85 percent of the 207,817 other church lay employees have been screened. And almost 79 percent of the 978,172 church volunteers have had background checks.

The report said that background screenings and evaluations also take place for priesthood candidates in the 112 seminaries run by the dioceses and eparchies audited.

Recommendations in the 2004 report for improving sex abuse prevention programs include:

— Special outreach to clergy and religious who have been victims of sexual abuse.

— Developing practices for monitoring priests and deacons at risk as offenders.

The report notes that the church needs to continually develop new prevention initiatives because full implementation of current policies "will not ensure that no child will ever be abused again in a church environment."

It asks Catholics to be "unwavering in our commitment to ensuring the accountability of all Catholic bishops of the United States to their people in the future and to the safety of all our children."

Bishop celebrates rite of election in diocese during the rite of election and call to continuing conversion at St. Thomas Aquinas Church Feb. 19. This was one of three such events that took place in the diocese.

During his homily, the bishop addressed the catechumens and candidates, saying, "Your presence at this rite this afternoon is evidence that Christ, our good shepherd, the risen savior, is indeed working in his church."

"He has spoken, saying, 'Come, follow me,' and you have responded to his call," Bishop Jugis said. "You would not be here if our Lord were not working in your life through his Holy Spirit."

The rite of election consists of the official enrollment of the names of those unbaptized adults, or catechumens, who seek baptism at the Easter Vigil Mass. Adults who were baptized in other Christian faiths, or candidates, are also introduced to the bishop at this time.

On Feb. 13, catechumens and candidates from the eastern counties of the diocese participated in the rite at Holy Family Church in Clemmons. Parishes from the western counties gathered for the rite Feb. 20 at St. Barnabas Church in Arden. The diocesan commission on the RCIA designed the liturgical celebrations for the Diocese of Charlotte.

A journey of faith

The rite of election and call to continuing conversion is one of several steps along the journey, following a period of discernment and study of the Catholic faith.

Before formally beginning the RCIA process, a person considers his or her relationship with Jesus Christ and their interest in joining the Catholic Church. This period is known as the period of evangelization and pre-catechumenate.

After discerning their desire to join the Catholic Church, the inquirers may decide to continue the process and enter the period of the catechumenate, when they study the history and practice of Catholicism. This stage can last for a few months or for as long as several years.

The third formal stage is the celebration of the sacraments of initiation, which occurs during the Easter Vigil Mass on Holy Saturday. During the Mass, catechumens receive the sacraments of baptism, confirmation and Eucharist, and candidates are confirmed and receive the Eucharist. At this time, they become fully initiated members of the Catholic Church.

Following initiation at the vigil Mass, a final period of formation and education continues in the stage known as mystagogy. During this period, which lasts until Pentecost or later, the neophytes reflect on the events of the Easter Vigil and continue to learn more about the Scriptures, the sacraments and the teachings of the Catholic Church.

Celebrating the call and call to continuing conversion was celebrated in both English and Spanish. The readings alternated between the two languages, and hymns were sung in both as well. Bishop Jugis completed his homily with a special welcome to the Hispanic participants in Spanish.

Bishop Jugis said the rites of election were joyful celebrations and the joy of all the participants was apparent.

"I was delighted as bishop to see such evidence of the work of the Holy Spirit throughout the diocese," said Bishop Jugis. "It was inspiring to see so many individuals wanting to celebrate the sacraments of initiation."

In the Diocese of Charlotte, the RCIA ministry is currently undertaken by the Office of Faith Formation in lieu of an office of liturgy. The faith formation office is supported by funding from the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

"Given the 683 elect we received last year and probably about the same number this year, it is quite evident that Pentecost continues in our diocese and the Holy Spirit never ceases to call people to become disciples of Jesus," said Cris Villapando, diocesan director of faith formation programs.

The Office of Faith Formation is one of 36 ministries funded by contributions to the Diocesan Support Appeal.

Bishops' committee sets up Web site where people can vote on Oscars

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops' communications committee is urging people to cast their own vote for the Academy Awards by visiting their Web site.

Results will be posted on the site Feb. 28.

Visitors to the Web site can vote on Best Actor, Best Actress, Best Director and Best Movie of the Year and on awards in a handful of other categories. The chance to vote continues through Feb. 27, the date of the annual presentation of the Oscars, which are voted on by members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Office of Film & Broadcasting reviewed all of the movies nominated. Reviews include a description of the film, the USCCB classification of each movie's suitability by age group, along with the rating given by the Motion Picture Association of America. In 2004, the office reviewed 225 movies.

New reviews are posted each week on the Web site (www.usccb.org/movies/index.htm), which receives more than 20,000 visits each month. A total of 297,484 visits was logged in 2004. The reviews are also carried by Catholic News Service.

Reviews also can be accessed through the movie review line, (800) 311-4222. The movie line, supported by the Catholic Communication Campaign, received more than 76,000 calls in 2004.

VIDEO REVIEW

Intriguing message found in 'Dust Factory'

BY DAVID DiCERTO
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — In "The Dust Factory," a life-affirming family fantasy, a young boy (Ryan Kelley) — mute since witnessing his father's tragic death — falls from a bridge into the titular dream realm somewhere between this world and the next.

There he must confront his fears of mortality, guided by his grandfather (Armin Mueller-Stahl) and the friendship of a mercurial girl (Hayden Panettiere).

Written and directed by Eric Small, the intriguing film wrestles with heavy issues — death, loss and grief — in an imaginative way, but its opaque narrative, freighted with surreal imagery, fogs the movie's underlying message: that despite its transience and unavoidable pain, life is ultimately worth embracing.

The home video release date of "The Dust Factory" is March 22.

Due to mature themes and some frightening images, the USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

DiCerto is on the staff of the Office for Film & Broadcasting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Faith allows us to see the divine

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

I am an illustrator. That's amazing, since I can't draw very well.

I didn't study art, but somewhere in adulthood, when my faith life assumed central importance, I discovered that I was blessed to be able to express spiritual ideas through pen-and-ink drawings.

Still, I steered away from anything that called for rendering the human figure, because my "people" tended to have Picassoesque forms.

Nevertheless, I persevered, and a breakthrough came when I read "Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain" by Betty Edwards. The author noted that whether a person engages the brain's left or right hemisphere determines one's mental perception.

A right-handed person drawing with the left hand perceives an object differently than when drawing with the right hand and is particularly able to recognize "negative space," she said. For instance, when drawing a hand, one would see the spaces between the fingers more prominently than the fingers themselves.

I tried it, and although my left-handed lines were shaky, the drawing was more accurate than anything I'd done with the right hand. I was amazed that simply holding the pencil in my left hand enabled me to "see" negative space.

This weekend's readings are about appearance and seeing. The blind man in the Gospel is given sight by Jesus; figuratively, he receives divine sight. Jesus explained that the man was blind "so that the works of God might be made visible through him."

In the first reading, the Lord tells Samuel that human judgment is inadequate; one must seek God's perception and trust its truth.

In drawing, I realize that seeing the positive space of fingers carries all my preconceived notions of what fingers ought to look like. But when I see them differently — in the context of the negative space around them — those notions disappear and the fingers are allowed to take on their true appearance.

Jesus told the Pharisees that as long as they "see" only with human experience and expectation, they will be blind to God's divine ways, and their sin will remain. But if they will have faith enough to open themselves to a new way of seeing — put the pencil in the other hand, as it were — they will discover divine vision.

House to reject the Real ID Act, H.R. 418, saying its provisions would weaken asylum protections, undermine national security and promote unsound public policy.

The bill would set nationwide standards for state-issued drivers licenses, prohibiting federal agencies from accepting licenses as identification for access to government buildings or air travel unless they meet the new requirements.

It also would raise the burden of proof of persecution for political asylum applicants and waive all laws that might affect plans to build new barriers on the southern border of the United States.

The bill was passed on a fast track over the objections of House Democratic leaders who pushed for it to be sent back through the usual process of public hearings and review by one or more House committees. Those steps were bypassed.

Persecuting innocence

In a Feb. 9 letter to members of Congress, Bishop Gerald R. Barnes of San Bernardino, Calif., chairman of the bishops' migration committee, said the bill's provisions would do little to prevent use of drivers licenses by terrorists, as its supporters claim. He said a homeland security bill passed two months earlier included an adequate provision to prevent use of licenses for fraudulent purposes.

As the National Council of State Legislatures said, according to Bishop Barnes, denying licenses to all people who are not legal residents would make the roads less safe, "because the number of unlicensed, untrained and uninsured drivers would increase dramatically and deny police officers the tools they need in investigating crime" or assisting people in distress.

Several states, such as North Carolina, have begun issuing drivers licenses without regard for the applicant's legal residency status as a way of helping ensure that all drivers have insurance and can be held accountable in case of accidents.

Bishop Barnes also criticized the bill's asylum provisions, which require applicants to prove they fled persecution on the basis of religion, nationality, race, social group or political opinion.

Bishop Barnes said the provisions ignore the reality that those who flee persecution may not readily relate the horrors they faced and may not have brought corroborating evidence as they fled their home countries. He noted that terrorists are already barred from obtaining asylum, so the new provisions are unnecessary.

An exchange of hope

"A study of the economic policies between the United States and our southern neighbors would give many U.S. citizens a change of heart toward our brothers and sisters from south of the border," said Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott, director of Hispanic Ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Sister Inkrott agreed with Bishop Barnes' assessment that denying licenses to non-legal residents would make the roads less safe and would do little to decrease people coming into the country.

"People come to the United States looking for what the majority of our own ancestors also came looking for — a way to overcome the unbearable economic situations that do not allow them to provide for their families," said Sister Inkrott.

"Unless the economic situations are improved in the countries of origin, there is no way that people will stay home and watch their families suffer," she said. "They will risk even death in the desert or attacks by robbers on their way to the promise of a better life for themselves and their families."

Bishop Barnes' letter also said the bill's provision to expedite construction of fences on the U.S.-Mexico border "would be a dangerously broad mandate that is almost without precedent."

"While the threat of terrorism to our country is a real one that requires our government to implement appropriate measures to be vigilant, we must make sure we address real threats and consider carefully unexpected negative outcomes," said Joseph Purello, director of Justice and Peace Office for the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Expediting the building of more fences will likely make border crossings more treacherous as people seek relatively isolated, more lightly guarded crossing zones in wilderness areas," said Purello. "We must ask who will be harmed the most by increased exposure to the elements, long treks through isolated regions and the evil actions of smugglers and robbers who prey on migrants seeking a better life in the United States."

"Disturbingly, the bill would require waiving all laws, including, for example, laws against murder; laws protecting civil rights; laws protecting the health and safety of workers; laws providing for a minimum wage or prevailing wage; environmental laws and laws respecting sacred burial grounds," said Bishop Barnes.

It would also prohibit judicial review of any decision or action related to a section of the 1996 Illegal Immigration Reform and Responsibility Act, and bar courts from ordering compensatory relief for problems arising from border construction.

"Catholic social teaching calls us to weigh carefully the impact of any policy decision, such as one that would create a more extensive border fence network, on the poor and vulnerable," said Purello.

THANK YOU for your magnificent outpouring of compassion to survivors of the tsunami catastrophe. Because of your generosity, CRS was able to quickly respond with food, clean water, shelter and the tools survivors need to rebuild their lives and livelihoods. And thanks to you, we have committed $80 million to help families and communities in the hardest-hit areas of Indonesia, India, Sri Lanka and Thailand. Their road to recovery is a long one, but we plan to work with them for the next five to seven years as they rebuild.

The response of the U.S. Catholic community proves that we do live in one human family — bound by compassion and inspired by hope. Your support is an inspiration to us at CRS. But more importantly, it is a source of hope for so many devastated by this disaster. Thank you, again, for your generosity and your prayers.

A generous response to 'God's family'

My Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

As you are aware, the people of South Asia are still suffering from the devastating effects of the earthquake and tsunamis that struck that region on Dec. 26, 2004. The tragic loss of life, the great threats to health and safety, and the enormous ongoing and long-term rebuilding efforts have led to a tremendous outpouring of prayers, material assistance and financial support from around the world.

The people of the Diocese of Charlotte have joined millions of others in answering the appeal for prayers and assistance to our brothers and sisters in South Asia. It is with great joy that I share with the people of the Diocese of Charlotte that a total of $421,905 has been raised to date, primarily on behalf of the work of Catholic Relief Services (CRS), to assist in the South Asia earthquake and tsunami disaster recovery effort.

The response of generous donors from dioceses throughout our nation has enabled CRS to commit more than $80 million to relief and recovery programs in the tsunami-impacted communities in South Asia. Life-saving assistance and urgently needed supplies have brought immediate relief, while plans for long-term rebuilding are being implemented.

The relationship of our diocese to CRS is a long and strong one. Previously responses to CRS disaster appeals and ongoing yearly support of the Operation Rice Bowl Lenten program have brought the people of the Diocese of Charlotte into deeper solidarity with the global community, especially our brothers and sisters in this world who are poor and suffering. I am pleased that once again so many families, parishes and schools of our diocese are participating in this 30th anniversary year of CRS Operation Rice Bowl.

His Holiness Pope John Paul II, in his World Day of Peace message of Jan. 1, 2005 prays that the "sons and daughters of the Church find in the supreme sacrament of love [the Eucharist] the wellspring of all communion: communion with Jesus the Redeemer and, in him, with every human being."

The generous response of the Catholic community to the millions of suffering people in South Asia is an incredible witness to the Holy Father's closing words, "by sharing in the one bread and the one cup, we come to realize that we are 'God's family' and that together we can make our own effective contribution to building a world based on the values of justice, freedom and peace."

I am very grateful for this outpouring of generosity from our diocese. Please join with me in thanking our Lord for the generous response of our diocese to the recent disaster in South Asia. We call upon the mercy of Jesus Christ for the souls of the departed and we continue to pray for the healing of those who suffer.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Communal anointing of the sick

Q. Please explain communal anointing of the sick and when it may be received. My husband understands that the sacrament of anointing will take away all your sins. Is that what we believe? (Iowa)

A. In Catholic belief, forgiveness of sin always has been one effect of the sacrament of anointing of the sick. The primary biblical text about prayer and anointing of the sick (Jas. 5) says that "if he (the sick person) has committed sins, he will be forgiven."

Exactly what this means, however, or how it happens is not spelled out. The Council of Trent, in its classic text on the sacraments, says the anointing "cleanses all sins yet to be expiated (forgiven or absolved), as well as any remainders of sin." This is the first effect of the anointing mentioned by the council (Session XIX).

Our present Catholic ritual for pastoral care of the sick teaches that, if necessary, the sacrament of anointing "also provides the sick person with the forgiveness of sins and the completion of Christian penance" (No. 6).

In all its major documents about this sacrament, the church professes that the sacrament also arouses trust in God's help to bear one's suffering in a holy way and may return the sick person to health if that would be helpful for salvation.

However one might explain these Catholic teachings, they fit with the words of the Catechism of the Catholic Church that "the anointing of the sick completes our conformity to the death and resurrection of Christ, just as baptism began it. It completes the holy anointings that mark the whole Christian life," baptism and confirmation. This last anointing, it continues, "fortifies the end of our earthly life like a solid rampart for the final struggles before entering the Father's house" (No. 1523).

Determining who should receive this sacrament also has changed over the years. For centuries, any seriously ill person was considered eligible for anointing. Later on, as most older Catholics still remember, it was thought of more as the "last rites," only for people actually dying. In fact, reception of this sacrament usually was delayed until the sick person reached as close as possible to the moment of death.

Today the church again acknowledges more explicitly that the true sacrament for the dying is not anointing of the sick but the Eucharist. Christian tradition, in fact, gives a special name to holy Communion when it is received by the dying. We call it "viaticum," literally something to be with us and help us "on the journey" through death into eternity.

The anointing of the sick, therefore, may and should be received by anyone whose health is seriously impaired from sickness or old age. This includes those who have been anointed but are now suffering from a different illness, those who are to undergo surgery because of a serious sickness, sick children if they have sufficient use of reason to be comforted by this sacrament and old people who are weak from age, even if there is no dangerous illness present (Ritual for Care of the Sick, Nos. 8-12).

The ritual notes that no one should become overly demanding in determining how sick an individual must be. "A prudent or reasonably sure judgment, without scruple, is sufficient for deciding on the seriousness of an illness."

Communal anointings are ceremonies at which a number of people receive the sacrament within one celebration. These anointings may be either within the celebration of Mass or in a separate liturgy.

Arthur Miller and the oxygen of affirmation

Fictional characters have ties to reality

The death in February of Arthur Miller, at age 89, triggered an outpouring of praise for one of America's greatest playwrights. His 1949 classic "Death of a Salesman" is the only work I'll mention here.

His creation of Willy Lowman, the salesman who needed the oxygen of affirmation, and Willy's wife Linda, whose words provided it so movingly but unsuccessfully, was Miller's great contribution to our national treasury of dramatic memory.

We need great plays to help us better understand ourselves, to see our failures and regrets, and to learn how we might change.

Linda, aware of Willy's downward spiral of discouragement and eroding self-confidence, pleads with their two sons, Happy and Biff, to show their father more respect. "He's the dearest man in the world to me," she says, "and I won't have anyone making him feel unwanted and low and blue."

Biff tells her to "stop making excuses for him," and cruelly adds that Willy never respected her.

Linda replies: "Biff, I don't say he's a great man. Willy Lowman never made a lot of money. His name was never in the paper. He's not the finest character that ever lived. But he's a human being, and a terrible thing is happening to him. So attention must be paid. He's not to be allowed to fall into his grave like an old dog. Attention, attention must be finally paid to such a person."

Linda then urges her son to "be sweet to him tonight, dear. Be loving to him. Because he's only a little boat looking for a harbor."

Miller was 33 when "Death of a Salesman" opened on Broadway. At age 68 he said in an interview with the New York Times that he could see himself in the character of Willy Lowman, although when the play opened he tended to identify more with Willy's son Biff.

But now, "when Biff's yelling at Willy, he's yelling at me. I understand Willy. And I understand his longing for immortality — I think that's inevitable when you get older. ... Willy's writing his name on a cake of ice on a hot day, but he wishes he were writing in stone. He wants to live on through something. ... I think all of us want that, and it gets more poignant as we get more anonymous in the world."

Willy believed "a man has got to add up to something." He couldn't face living the rest of his life "ringing up a zero." Early in the play he says, "You're my foundation and support, Linda." But eventually Willy takes his own life.

Charley says to Biff: "Willy was a salesman. And for a salesman, there is no rock bottom to the life. He don't put a bolt to a nut, he don't tell you the law or give you medicine. He's a man way out there in the blue, riding on a smile and a shoeshine."

"And when they start not smiling back — that's an earthquake. And then you get yourself a couple of spots on your hat, and you're finished. Nobody dast blame this man. A salesman is got to dream, boy. It comes with the territory."

Our world is full of Willys, writing their names on cakes of ice. They need the gently heroic Lindas for support and encouragement. And all of us Willys and Lindas can be grateful to Arthur Miller for the spirit-sustaining insights that his genius left behind.

Lent time for sincere, profound conversion, says pope

The Pope Speaks

POPE
JOHN PAUL II

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Sitting with two aides in his private library, Pope John Paul II used closed-circuit television to greet hundreds of pilgrims who had come for his weekly general audience.

The Vatican initially said the pope would come to the window of his apartment Feb. 23 to bless the pilgrims in St. Peter's Square. However, bad weather led officials to herd the pilgrims into the Vatican audience hall, where they saw and heard the pope on big television screens.

Except for the fact that the pope was not in the audience hall and did not spend half an hour shaking hands and blessing individual pilgrims, the Feb. 23 gathering had most of the ingredients of a normal weekly general audience.

After the pope made brief remarks in Italian about the Lenten season, Vatican aides introduced the pilgrim groups present. Then the pope offered them greetings in English, French, German, Spanish, Italian and Polish.

In English, he said: "I greet all the English-speaking pilgrims here today and thank you for your prayers. May your time in Rome be filled with joy and deepen your love for the universal church. God bless you all."

It was the first general audience following Pope John Paul's Feb. 10 release from the hospital for breathing difficulties. No audience was scheduled for Feb. 16 because of the annual Lenten retreat for the pope and his top aides.

While he was wheezing a bit, the pope read his introductory remarks with strength, even adding several phrases to the prepared text published by the Vatican press office.

"We are following the Lenten journey, which began Ash Wednesday, helped and stimulated by the liturgy which calls us to a particular commitment to prayer, fasting and penance and to a greater solidarity with our neighbors, especially the poor and needy," the pope said.

"The austere itinerary of Lent will lead us to the solemn celebration of Easter," he said. "Let us open our hearts to a sincere and profound conversion. May selfishness give way to love so that we can experience the joy of forgiveness and of intimate reconciliation with God and with our brothers and sisters."

Healing for those in need

Anointing of the sick brings God's grace to others

Sickness is one of the major worries in any life. Over the years I have seen what a comfort the sacrament of the anointing of the sick is to people. On occasion I have seen people healed either spiritually or physically.

In early December, we scheduled a "healing Mass" in our parish. We announced that anyone who wanted healing could come forward to be anointed. We had hoped to have an outside priest with a ministry of healing come, but no one was available. So it was just me to do the anointing and our two deacons to lay on hands in prayer.

When the night came for the healing Mass, the church was jammed — not just with our parishioners, but with people from other parishes and even some non-Catholics.

I preached on healing. I talked about various kinds of healing: the healing of memories; healing that comes with forgiveness; healing that comes with reconciliation; the healing of the troubled spirit as well and the infirm body.

I expected about a dozen or so people to come forward to be anointed and prayed over. We were overwhelmed when more than 250 people pressed forward. What we thought would take only a few minutes consumed more than an hour.

The sick in body, mind and spirit lined up three and four deep across the front of the sanctuary. Many were accompanied by a companion.

As I came to each person, I leaned down to be told why a healing was wanted. Some had chronic conditions. Some had cancer or heart disease. Many mentioned things like depression. A few young people who were there came forward and said, "I want to be anointed for my uncle" or some other person.

I anointed the people with holy oil on the head and the hands. Then I laid my hands on each one's head. The deacons followed, laying hands on each head and praying over people for a while as I moved on to the next person.

After more than an hour I was exhausted. Sweat was pouring down my brow. Someone brought me a towel and a glass of water. I had to sit down. One woman came up to me afterward and said, "Who will anoint the anointer?" Good question.

It was a wonderful experience.

Over the following weeks, people would stop me and say, "My back is better," "My depression is lifted." Their healing had nothing to do with me, of course. It was the power of grace.

In one case, a young man came forward to be anointed for his uncle who was suffering from heart disease. A few days later the uncle agreed to be anointed in the hospital. The man had been away from the church for many years. He received absolution and Communion as well as anointing.

Since then he has come back to the sacraments. Sometimes the healing God gives is not what we intend but is what God knows we need.

When I was a young priest, I was skeptical about what good the anointing of the sick really did. It seemed so fruitless because it often was administered just moments before death.

But now, I see things differently. I have seen various kinds of healing: spiritual, physical and emotional. I have seen families healed by the experience.

God's grace is raining down on us all the time. Healing grace is always there. The anointing of the sick is just a way of taking down our umbrellas and letting that grace soak in to give us what we really want, healing.

A spirit of Christian love: St. Paul the Apostle touches many lives in Guilford County

GREENSBORO — The Catholic community of St. Paul the Apostle Church was founded in July 1974, when then-Bishop Michael J. Begley of Charlotte invited the Paulist Fathers to create the fifth parish in the Guilford County seat.

The first pastor, Paulist Father Robert T. Scott, celebrated St. Paul the Apostle Church's first Mass at Cross of Christ Lutheran Church. While a long-term, three-phase building plan was drawn up in those early days, the congregation first gathered at a number of Protestant churches and a funeral home for liturgies and parish celebrations.

As the number of families continued to grow from its original 90 to more than 350, the parish set its sights on constructing a church. Ground was broken in August 1975 for a multipurpose facility, and the parish gathered for its first Mass in the new 450-seat church in April 1976.

In addition to the central worship space, the new building also provided a chapel, kitchen and rooms for a nursery, classrooms, religious education offices and meeting rooms.

Bishop Begley served as celebrant at the dedication Mass in May 1976. Concelebrating was Paulist Father Thomas F. Stransky, then president of the Paulist Fathers, who delivered the homily, and Father Scott.

While the Paulists ministered to the ever-growing parish of St. Paul the Apostle Church, they also served in campus ministry to Catholic students attending Guilford College, Greensboro College and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. This ministry developed into the Catholic Student Fellowship.

Parish growth continued through the 1980s, both in the number of ministerial efforts and the size of the congregation.

The Paulist Fathers continued their pastoral at St. Paul the Apostle Church until 1991. That year, the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales assumed pastoral leadership, and Oblate Father James O'Neill was appointed pastor.

The parish at that time was composed of almost 1,000 families, and Father O'Neill immediately began plans to enlarge the church facilities. The expansion, which yielded additional worship space, was dedicated by then-Bishop

John F. Donoghue in March 1993.

By 1998, the parish had grown to about 1,900 households with more than 5,500 people. On Oct. 21, 2001, then-Bishop William G. Curlin joined the parish family to celebrate the dedication of a new Parish Life Center, a facility providing a multipurpose room/gymnasium, additional meeting space and classrooms.

Father O'Neill continued to serve the Greensboro parish until April 2002. Oblate Father Tom Murphy, who came with Father O'Neill in 1991 as parochial vicar, returned in April 2002 as pastor.

Oblate Father William J. Ruhl assumed the pastorate of St. Paul the Apostle Church in July 2004.

The parish council has developed a vision statement that stresses St. Paul the Apostle Church's commitment to the Eucharist as the center of each parishioner's life. "Our Vision 2000" encompasses individual spirituality and community outreach as the model by which the St. Paul the Apostle Church family will continue to move through the new millennium.

An ecumenical outreach, which developed during the Paulist presence in Greensboro, continues today. The Catholic parish signed a covenant of cooperation with Cross of Christ Lutheran and St. Barnabas Episcopal churches, which were utilized by St.

Paul parishioners in the early years for parish functions.

Emphasis on community — among the congregation and beyond — has been an important facet of parish life. In the mid-1970s, Father Scott brought a ministry to the parish for divorced and remarried Catholics. In 1978, the parish made local news when it "adopted" a family of Vietnamese refugees.

St. Paul the Apostle parishioners are known in the Greensboro community for their extensive involvement in outreach opportunities. The church is one of a small number of churches that participate in the Guilford Interfaith Hospitality Network, a joint venture of area churches that unite to provide shelter, meals and compassionate assistance to homeless families. Four weeks each year, the parish transforms meeting rooms into bedrooms and provides housing for the families currently in the network.

Other outreach activities include volunteering at a soup kitchen, maintaining a food pantry and providing Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter food baskets to about 150 families referred by the Hispanic Ministry, the Native American Association and local social service groups.

St. Paul the Apostle parishioners also work to alleviate hunger and housing crises through participation in CROP Walks and Habitat for Humanity.

St. Paul the Apostle has formed a relationship with a parish in Manta, Ecuador, and through the Sister Parish program they have helped finance a soup kitchen, provide wheelchairs for four parishioners and hearing aides to a young child.

Dozens of other ministries and projects enhance an active faith life at the parish. From youth ministry to Mobile Meals for the needy, small faith communities to Respect Life ministry, the people of St. Paul the Apostle Church reach out far beyond the church walls to touch the lives of many in their community.

FEMINISTS AGAINST ABORTION

Abortion harms, exploits women, says speaker

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — "The Feminist Case Against Abortion" was recently presented in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Abortion is contradictory to feminism," said Serrin Foster, president of Feminists for Life of America. "The more you know about the remarkable women who set the first examples, the more you will see why you can be pro-life and pro-women."

Foster, who has served at the pro-life organization based in Washington since 1994, spoke at three locations around the diocese in February. The diocese, diocesan Catholic Campus Ministry and Belmont Abbey sponsored her visit.

"I am still asked if Feminists for Life is an oxymoron, but there's nothing more consistent than supporting women and children, rejecting violence and exploitation," she said.

BELMONT — The threat of rain did little to dampen the spirits of hundreds of young pilgrims walking and praying behind the Eucharist.

Approximately 250 youths from high schools and colleges across the diocese followed Bishop Peter J. Jugis as he led the eucharistic procession around Belmont Abbey College. It was part of the diocesan Youth Pilgrimage to Belmont Abbey, themed "Come, Let Us Adore Him," Feb. 27.

"You've come here from many different parishes," said Bishop Jugis to the youths, who gathered in the Abbey Basilica before the procession. "You really get a sense of being a part of something bigger."

GREENSBORO —

Fearing society is becoming "spiritually bankrupt," one priest taught a group of young people to embrace their heritage for a better future.

Verbite Father Charles Smith was the invited speaker at St. Mary Church in Greensboro, where young people gathered to celebrate black history and black Catholicism Feb. 26-27.

For the annual Black History Celebration, organizers decided to focus on the young people of the multi-ethnic parish — black,

U.S. and United Kingdom members of a pro-life team, which involved around 30 people from pro-life organizations in several countries, draft a press release at the United Nations in New York as U.N. members worked on a Feb. 18 declaration calling on member states to outlaw human cloning practices. The pro-life team was present to advocate against cloning.

United Nations passes declaration to ban all forms of human cloning

NEW YORK — After more than three years of deadlock, delegates to the United Nations legal committee, by a vote of 71 to 35, accepted a declaration calling on all nations to enact laws prohibiting all forms of human cloning.

The United Nations has called on member states to adopt urgent legislation outlawing all cloning practices saying "they are incompatible with human dignity and the protection of human life."

The Feb. 18 declaration, introduced by Honduras and supported by the United States, also calls on countries to "prevent the exploitation of women." Cloning requires harvesting eggs from women.

The previous deadlock was caused by countries seeking approval for cloning research. The United Kingdom, Belgium and Singapore led the opposition against a total ban, insisting it should apply only to "reproductive cloning" that allows the cloned human to live, while permitting cloned embryos to be used for research that would kill them — the so-called "clone and kill" process also referred to as "therapeutic cloning."

At the insistence of delegates from developing countries who feared their women would be turned into "egg farms," the declaration calls on member states to introduce measures to prevent the exploitation of women. Delegates expressed concern that poor women would be targeted to extract the vast numbers of eggs that would be needed, inevitably inflicting painful, dangerous and invasive procedures on vulnerable women.

If "clone and kill" research were continued, millions of women would be needed to take high doses of fertility drugs to produce sufficient quantities of eggs, with projections of 800,000 women likely to be affected by serious medical complications as a result.

Efforts to pass the ban at the United Nations were supported by a pro-life team involving around 30 people from an international coalition of pro-life organizations.

Dr. Martha Shuping of Winston-Salem was partially supported by the Diocese of Charlotte and St. Mark Church in Huntersville to participate in pro-life educational efforts at the United Nations. Coalition members helped educate U.N. delegations about adult stem cell research, which makes unethical treatments with embryonic stem cells unnecessary.

Coalition members believed their presence influenced the passage of the declaration. Several members were involved in contacting thousands of supporters with prayer requests when negotiations began to stall with talk of "no action."

Members credit the final result to the power of prayer, said Shuping.

In the United States, anti-cloning legislation — the Cloning Prohibition Act — was introduced in both the Senate and the House the same week. This legislation has been passed twice by the House and is supported by President Bush, but it has failed in the past to gain Senate approval.

However, there is an anti-life cloning bill being considered in the Senate and in the House. Cloning legislation is also currently under consideration in several individual states, including Missouri, Massachusetts and Arizona, which may be helped by the standard set by the United Nations.

Cardinal says feeding-tube removal could lead U.S. down wrong path

CLEARWATER, Fla. (CNS) — Facing a new court deadline of March 18 for removal of the feeding tube that keeps Terri Schindler Schiavo alive, the parents of the brain-damaged Florida woman found in the words of a Vatican cardinal new support for their fight against removal of the tube.

Cardinal Renato Martino, president of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, told Vatican Radio Feb. 24 that if Terri's husband, Michael, "is legally able to provoke the death of his wife, this would not only be tragic in itself, but it would be a serious step toward the legal approval of euthanasia in the United States given the weight which court decisions have in the formation of laws in that country."

Michael says his wife would want the feeding tube removed. Her parents say their daughter would want to live, in part because of her Catholic beliefs.

Cardinal Martino recalled a recent message from Pope John Paul II to the Pontifical Academy for Life, in which the pope reaffirmed "that quality of life cannot be interpreted as economic efficiency, beauty or the enjoyment of physical life, but it consists in the supreme dignity of the creature made in the image and likeness of God."

Pinellas County Circuit Court Judge George W. Greer ruled Feb. 25 that Michael Schiavo could order doctors to remove the feeding tube March 18.

Terri Schiavo, 41, has been impaired for the past 15 years since she collapsed because of what doctors believe was a potassium imbalance. Her brain was deprived of oxygen for several minutes. She can breathe on her own but requires nutrition and hydration through a feeding tube.

Israeli official confident about Vatican accord on legal, tax matters

ROME (CNS) — The Israeli Foreign Ministry's point man for interreligious affairs, Nimrod Barkan, said he is confident an Israeli-Vatican agreement on legal and financial matters will be sealed in the next four months.

Barkan, who met with top Vatican diplomatic officials Feb. 22 to explain Israeli stances, said there was "a breakthrough in the Israeli position" on the negotiations.

The new Cabinet of Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has approved the proposals presented to the Vatican, which should clear the way for a finalization of the new treaty within "three or four months," he said.

Barkan said he was confident an agreement could be reached on the taxation of church-owned vehicles, on the percentage of income tax church-owned businesses have to pay and on a description of what types of property disputes involving the church can be handled by a court rather than by the government.

The most difficult issue in the current negotiations, he said, has been the church's insistence that church institutions exempt from local property taxes for hundreds of years continue to be exempt.

"We have informed the Vatican that this will be resolved to their full satisfaction once the other issues have been dealt with," Barkan said, refusing to explain further.

Asked about allegations that Israeli police did not protect Melkite Catholics in the Galilean village of Maghar when they were attacked by their Druze neighbors in mid-February, Barkan said the government has launched an inquiry.

The government, he said, is committed "to making sure every human life in Israel is respected and protected."

CHARLOTTE — Thank God It's Friday (TGIF), a weekly support group for separated and divorced women, meets every Wednesday, 6:30-8:30 p.m. in the New Life Center building, room 114, of St. Matthew Church, 8015 Ballantyne Pkwy., including a potluck dinner. Vatican highlights pope's e-mail address for well-wishers

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican Web site has highlighted Pope John Paul II's public e-mail address so that well-wishers can send him their greetings and promises of prayer.

As in the past, the Vatican's Internet office added the e-mail link to the Vatican's home page Feb. 25 without fanfare or public notice.

Pope John Paul was hospitalized Feb. 24 and underwent a tracheotomy to help him breathe. Five days later, Pope John Paul II was able to say Mass in his hospital room, meet with aides and continue initial sessions of speech therapy, the Vatican said.

Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, who brought the pope some papers to work on, told reporters March 1 that the pontiff was "able and alert," and had spoken to him — in two languages, German and Italian.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls told reporters the same day that the pope's recovery was "completely normal" and that he had spent another peaceful night, but did not say how long the pope would remain at Rome's Gemelli hospital.

Messages may be sent to the pope by clicking on a link in English titled "Best Wishes for the Holy Father" on the Vatican's homepage: www.vatican.va.

Because of the volume of e-mail the pope receives when the address is highlighted, the Vatican usually gives it prominence on the home page only on special occasions such as Christmas or the pope's May 18 birthday.

But even when the address was not easy to find on the Web site, when the pope was hospitalized Feb. 1-10 he received between 40,000 and 50,000 e-mail messages, said Legionaries of Christ Father Fernando Vergez, an official in the Vatican's Internet office.

Father Vergez said March 1 he did not know how many e-mails the pope had received since undergoing the tracheotomy because the Internet office is "really just a transit point" for the messages, which are forwarded to the Vatican Secretariat of State.

Each message is read by an official in the secretariat. He prepares a summary of the messages and forwards the summary to the pope, along with the complete texts of a few sample messages.

Rome's Jewish leaders lead prayers at hospital in honor of pope

ROME (CNS) — Leaders of Rome's Jewish community went to the Gemelli Hospital Feb. 25 to offer prayers for Pope John Paul II and try to get some firsthand information about his condition.

Rabbi Riccardo Di Segni, the chief rabbi of Rome, told reporters, "We prayed and recited a psalm to show our solidarity and to send our best wishes."

Rabbi Di Segni and Roberto Cohen, vice president of Rome's Jewish community, said they did not get in to see the pope, who underwent a tracheotomy late

Feb. 24 to ease a breathing problem.

Cohen said they recited Psalm 139, which professes God's intimate knowledge of and care for those who trust in him.

The Jewish community wanted to acknowledge how much Pope John Paul had contributed to improving Catholic-Jewish relations, he said, adding that the community was not afraid that difficulties would return if he were no longer pope.

"By now the centuries of darkness have passed and there is no risk of going back," Cohen said.

Volunteer honored by governor for outstanding service

CHARLOTTE — Don Saravalli, a parishioner of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte, has been awarded the 2004 North Carolina award for Outstanding Volunteer Service.

Saravalli, who received a congratulatory letter and certificate from Gov. Michael Easley in November 2004, is one of more than 15,000 volunteers from North Carolina who have received this award since 1979.

In the letter, Gov. Easley said Saravalli's service "is admirable and your contributions to the state are immeasurable. Thank you for all that you do."

Saravalli's volunteer work began 12 years ago as an Emergency Financial Assistance interviewer for Crisis Assistance Ministry in Charlotte, which provides assistance and advocacy for people in financial crisis. He has been volunteering in the organization's business office for the last six years.

His primary responsibility is entering data into a computer, resulting in the generation of 300-400 rent or utility checks per day. With little exception, the 46,000 hours of volunteer service that annually benefit Crisis Assistance Ministry is provided by volunteers who work one morning a week.

"Don is a rare volunteer in that he is here five days a week for three to four hours per day," said Pete Bondi, Crisis Assistance Ministry's director of finance. "He is more like a staff member because of his many years with Crisis Assistance Ministry."

Saravalli's commitment to Crisis Assistance Ministry was exemplified by his actions during a snowstorm Feb. 26, 2004. With the beginnings of 16 inches of snow falling on the ground, only seven of the 50 staff members — and one volunteer, Saravalli — arrived for work. Saravalli was subsequently honored with the organization's first

Black history celebration inspires Catholic youth

Hispanic, Asian and white.

The weekend celebration, titled "Moving On: Embracing the Future," consisted of workshops for high school and college students, a gospel Mass and dinner on Saturday and concluded with Mass on Sunday.

"We wanted to motivate the youths in the Catholic Church ... we have so many young people that leave the faith," said Kathy Jefferson, a parishioner who coordinated the celebration. "We try to keep them faithful to the Catholic religion and active in the church."

Many high school and college students leave out of boredom, but return to the church once they have families of their own, Jefferson said.

Migdalia Ortiz, director of faith formation for St. Mary Church, said the leaders of St. Mary Church are trying to make the Catholic faith more appealing to young people.

"Youths want to be more active in the church, but leadership is needed," Ortiz said.

One of the goals of the workshops was to draw out young leaders from youths of the parish.

About 60 youths attended the workshops led by Father Smith, priest-in-residence at St. Rita Church in Indianapolis.

In small groups of six to eight youths and an adult moderator, the students discussed a variety of hypothetical scenarios involving issues such as the death penalty and abortion and tried to come up with solutions.

The groups found that solutions to such complicated issues were hard to come by. Most recommended forgiveness, repentance and prayers for guidance for the characters in their scenarios.

"My main task is to get young people to understand more clearly and precisely the values and doctrines of the church," Father Smith said.

Father Smith said American society is at risk of becoming "spiritually bankrupt" — people value material possessions to the point that they have lost their identity, vision and gospel heritage.

"I'm a firm believer that Catholic morality, when used by people in everyday life, will redeem (those people) and society," said Father Smith. "If we practice justice, peace, charity and morality — at work, school and home — we will have a better world."

If diverse groups can sit and dialogue as Christians, they can become a model for the world.

Feminist case against abortion

nists for Life is a national grassroots organization that continues the efforts of the early American feminists, including Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, to eliminate the causes that drive women to abortion by facilitating practical solutions.

Foster is widely recognized as an international spokesperson for pro-life feminism. Her speech, "The Feminist Case Against Abortion," was published in the anthology Women's Rights, which is one volume in a series of "Great Speeches in History." In her speech, Foster addresses 200 years of pro-life feminism and explains how the modern women's movement came to support abortion.

The "abortion debate is full of horror stories on both sides of the issue," she said.

"Coercive and unethical counselors lie to vulnerable women and pressure them. This has happened in some abortion clinics as well as some pregnancy care centers," said Foster. "Women have died from botched abortions, both before abortion was legalized and after, when it is supposed to be safe. Fanatics resort to violence on both extremes of the pro-choice/pro-life spectrum."

"What it does not do is help women, which was what the original feminist movement set out to do," she said.

The now-revered feminists of the 19th century were strongly opposed to abortion, said Foster, because of their beliefs in the worth of all humans. In Susan B. Anthony's newsletter, The Revolution, abortion was described as "child murder," "infanticide" and "feticide." Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who in 1848 organized the first women's rights convention in Seneca Falls, N.Y., classified abortion as a form of infanticide.

Anti-abortion laws enacted in the latter half of the 19th century were a result of advocacy efforts by feminists who worked in an uneasy alliance with the male-dominated medical profession and the mainstream media, said Foster.

The early feminists understood that, much like today, women resorted to abortion because they were abandoned or pressured by boyfriends, husbands and parents and lacked financial resources to have babies on their own, she said.

"In the 1960s, certain factions of the women's movement made a drastic about-face," said Foster.

"Ironically, the anti-abortion laws that early feminists worked so hard to enact to protect women and children were the very ones destroyed by the Roe v. Wade decision 100 years later — a decision hailed by the National Organi-

Youths gather for spiritual pilgrimage

You get a sense of how good God is and the work he's doing throughout the diocese."

A pilgrimage is more than traveling from one place to another, said the bishop.

"Rarely we would set out traveling aimlessly. We always have a goal in mind," he said.

The goal of a pilgrimage, said the bishop, is to that of a sacred place "where we want to go and spend some time with the Lord, separate from our daily lives."

"The goal of our lives, no matter how young or old we are, is that of eternal life," he said. "To get to eternal life, we go on a pilgrimage."

"During the Year of the Eucharist, we come to this sacred place — one of the first churches in what is now the Diocese of Charlotte," said Bishop Jugis, calling the basilica, which was built in the 1890s, a "testimony to the Catholics who came before us."

"This pilgrimage is a reminder of the pilgrimage that the church is on as a family of God, a pilgrimage through history to God," he said. "This is a small version of that pilgrimage."

"This is our time now. We are on our way, marching to our eternal home," said Bishop Jugis. "That is a pilgrimage that we never want to lose sight of."

The pilgrimage was one of numerous activities scheduled throughout the diocese to observe the Year of the Eucharist, proclaimed by Pope John Paul II. During the year, which runs through October 2005, a series of programs and observances is scheduled to take place, including eucharistic adoration in various parishes and the diocesan Eucharistic Congress in Charlotte Sept. 23-24.

"The youth pilgrimage was a wonderful privilege to commemorate and devote ourselves more faithfully to Our Lord, who is truly present in the holy Eucharist," said zation for Women (NOW) as the 'emancipation of women,' she said.

"The goals of the more recent NOW-led women's movement with respect to abortion would have outraged the early feminists," said Foster.

"It's important to reach them (women) now, so we can help create a world where we focus on helping women instead of eliminating people," said Foster.

"To gather the youth from around the diocese in the Year of the Eucharist, to adore our Lord in the sacrament, is a tremendous opportunity for grace," said Paul Kotlowski, director of diocesan youth ministry. "Hopefully, this experience will lead to greater appreciation of the sacrifice of the Mass, which is Christ's greatest gift to us."

The youth pilgrimage also included remarks by Abbot Placid Solari, abbot of Belmont Abbey; Benediction; and an informal bring-your-own supper.

Structure of the Liturgy of the Word

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 10

We know that the Mass teaches us how to pray. According to the structure of the Mass, prayer has the following form: humility and repentance, praise and adoration, and petition and intercession. These aspects of prayer particularly involve our words; that is, we speak to God.

But perhaps more important than our words, our need to address our Heavenly Father, is his desire to speak to us, to reveal his will, his divine plan, indeed himself. And so both in prayer and in the holy sacrifice of the Mass, which is the highest form of prayer, we must listen to the voice of the Lord. We are seated to listen attentively to the voice of the Good Shepherd who leads us to eternal life; we must be receptive to Our Lord, who is called "Rabbi," the great teacher, who said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life," for he is the Word of the eternal Father.

Several weeks ago, we discussed the Mass as a sacred ritual, whose parts and prayers are selected, inspired and faithfully handed down through the centuries. In other words, the selected readings at the Mass are part of this divine plan of revelation, so that through the seasons of the church year, the mysteries of Christ's birth, life, teaching and miracles, and finally his passion, death and resurrection are unfolded each year. From week to week, the life of our Lord is unfolded, revealed again and again, so that we can penetrate these mysteries and receive the fruits and graces of these mysteries.

Since these readings are pre-selected and handed down to us, they are not subject to the whim of the celebrant. The readings maintain the universal character of the church — it does not matter which Catholic church you attend — the country, language, local customs, etc. — the same readings are provided everywhere in the world. The celebrant does not have the authority or the freedom to select his favorite readings or discard his least favorite. The Catholic faithful have the privilege and right to hear the voice of God speak to us in every reading.

And so, the church offers us a three-year cycle of readings for Sunday Masses and a two-year cycle for weekday Masses. As you attend Mass each week, almost the entire canon of sacred Scripture, almost the whole of the Bible, is proclaimed every three years. And if you attend Mass every day, you will hear almost the entire canon of sacred Scripture every two years.

The Sunday readings follow a very simple three-year cycle: year A concentrates on the Gospel of St. Matthew, year B focuses on the Gospel of St. Mark and year C on the Gospel of St. Luke. These three Gospels are very similar in structure and content and are known as the Synoptic Gospels. Since the Gospel of St. John contains material that is not found in these three Gospels, St. John's Gospel is proclaimed at specific times of the year and at specific feasts, such as Christmas and Easter.

On Sundays and Solemnities, three readings are provided. The first reading comes from the Old Testament and is selected to show the Old Testament foundation for the Gospel. The Old Testament foreshadows the New Testament. The New Testament completes the Old Testament.

In the words of Archbishop Fulton Sheen: "The New is in the Old concealed, the Old is in the New revealed; the New is in the Old contained, the Old is in the New explained."

And so on Sunday, the first reading establishes a hope that is fulfilled in the Gospel.

The first reading and the Gospel go together. The Responsorial Psalm is a response to the message of the Old Testament reading. One psalm is selected out of the 150 psalms of the Old Testament. The second reading comes from one of the New Testament Epistles, or letters, of one of the Apostles.

Throughout the year, we hear the inspired accounts of St. Paul, St. Peter, St. James or a few others. These second readings often do not follow the pattern established by the first reading and the Gospel, but they offer specific instruction on living the Christian life.

Next week we will take an even closer look of the Liturgy of the Word.

Pope says Eucharist lies at core of Christian community

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — The Eucharist lies at the core of the Christian community and its mission, Pope John Paul II said at the end of a week of spiritual exercises held in the Vatican.

In a written message addressed to Italian Bishop Renato Corti of Novara, the preacher who led the Lenten retreat, the pope thanked the prelate for underlining the need to keep the Eucharist at the center of daily life.

"At the heart of the church, we have gathered around the mystery of the altar" in which lies "the pulsating heart of the communion and mission of the entire Christian people," said the pope's written message released Feb. 19 by the Vatican.

The annual Lenten retreat was attended by members of the Roman Curia, but sources said Pope John Paul did not participate this year; instead he followed the Feb. 13-19 proceedings via a video link from his apartment. Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican's secretary of state, substituted for the pope at the Feb. 19 closing Mass.

Mass participants prayed that the pope remain a "vibrant image of the goodness and mercy of the heavenly Father" and asked that "he be loved and listened to by all with brotherly affection."

Bishop Corti dedicated his weeklong series of meditations on the theme, "The Church at the Service of the New and Eternal Covenant," with special attention paid to the role of the Eucharist during this Year of the Eucharist.

Bishop Corti said that Jesus, during the Last Supper, gave the faithful a new commandment, "Love each other as I have loved you."

"In this simple verse from the Gospel, we find a synthesis of every law and all the prophets," he said in comments to Vatican Radio.

"All Christians should have at heart" Christ's commandment of love, giving the church a "brotherly face," said Bishop Corti.

"If one wants to pay witness to communion, one must learn to see in the other not just what he has gotten wrong, but also that which is good (in him) and to learn to have esteem for him," he said.

In another of his retreat reflections, the Italian preacher said that Christians must ask themselves how they can help "build a world that has signs of hope."

"Today hope is very difficult, and many people say they do not have it," he said.

The church needs to be the first place where hope resides, he said.

Those who believe in Christ, the hope for all mankind, must put themselves at the service of hope by being at the service of people "who suffer, who are alone, so that they can have reasons to be consoled, encouraged and overcome difficulties," said the bishop.

"Give Your Heart Away" community service weekend Feb. 11-13. The retreat was sponsored by the diocesan Catholic Campus Ministry Office, which runs Catholic campus ministry at colleges and universities throughout western North Carolina.

Approximately 60 students from nine colleges participated in the retreat, held at the McCarthy Spirituality Center on the Sisters of Mercy campus.

"This is the second time I've been on this retreat, and it is a really awesome experience," said Sid Mursten, a student at Appalachian State University.

The students spent the retreat working in groups at several area organizations, including Habitat for Humanity, Urban Ministries, House of Mercy, Crisis Assistance Ministries, Catherine's House, Holy Angels and Shining Hope Farms.

"The retreat was a great reminder of what Lent and life are about — loving others, helping those in need and working for God," said Caroline Bond, a student at Appalachian State.

At Habitat for Humanity, a non-profit Christian housing organization, the students helped shingle a roof on one house and painted rooms in another.

"While we weren't able to meet the owner of the house, all of us understood that our work would be appreciated," said Nick Dellaripa, a student at Wake Forest. "The best part was the bonding that went on in the group."

At Urban Ministry Center in Charlotte, an interfaith organization that assists the poor and homeless, students ate lunch with and baked cookies for homeless people. The experience offered the students new perspectives on life.

Students also spent the day sorting clothes at Crisis Assistance Ministries in Charlotte, painting rooms at Catherine's House and working with residents and Holy Angels and House of Mercy in Belmont.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated Mass for the students and joined them for dinner at the McCarthy Center.

"There are a lot of exciting programs taking place on campuses through Catholic Campus Ministry," said Bishop Jugis. "The students are filled with faith and love for Christ."

"I am impressed also that people are willing to take their time off away from studies," said Bishop Jugis. "It is a powerful expression of faith."

Special Olympian receives special sendoff

BY DEACON GERALD POTKAY

GREENSBORO — It was far from any ordinary pep rally at St. Pius X School in Greensboro.

The school gave Anne Kessler, a Special Olympian with multiple sclerosis, a special sendoff Feb. 18. She was selected as one of two athletes from North Carolina to represent Special Olympics Team USA in Alpine skiing at the 2005 World Winter Games in Nagano, Japan Feb. 26-March 5.

A member of St. Paul the Apostle Church in Greensboro, Anne's mother, Carmel, is a teacher at St. Pius X School.

"This is how the student body and the teachers got to know Anne," said Principal Mark Ackerman.

"We have all been excited since the beginning of the year when we first heard about Anne's selection for the World Special Olympics," said Vice Principal Anne Knapke.

"Anne has been a wonderful presence at our school. Everyone here knows her," said Knapke. "Anne proudly brings in the ribbons and medals she has won at the local, state and national events."

During the rally, Anne's father, David, spoke proudly of how Anne participated in the Special Olympics for the last 18 years.

During that time, Anne has competed in Alpine skiing, ice skating, aquatics, golf, soccer, softball, basketball, athletics, bowling and cycling. In 1995, she was selected to represent the Kentucky delegation of Special Olympics Team USA in aquatics at the Special Olympics World Summer Games in Connecticut, where she was awarded three gold medals.

"This year, Anne won a gold medal in downhill skiing in Boone during the North Carolina state winter games," said David Kessler.

Anne also attended a training camp for Special Olympics Team USA in Colorado in December. In addition to her training, Kessler has been learning about Japanese culture and is excited to experience it firsthand.

Anne Kessler receives a blessing from Msgr. Anthony Marcaccio during a pep rally held at St. Pius X School in Greensboro Feb. 18. Watching are father David, sister Carolyn and mother Carmel Kessler.

Anne, who works at a local supermarket, is a member of the ARC of Greensboro and both the Guilford-Greensboro Athlete Council and steering committee. She has served as a Global Messenger since 2002 and on the SONC Board of Directors since 2004.

She said Special Olympics have given her a chance to travel and compete in all kinds of sports.

"I've met a lot of friends in Special Olympics," she said. "It's a wonderful dream come true to compete with other athletes across the world."

During the pep rally, Msgr. Anthony Marcaccio, pastor of St. Pius X Church, blessed Anne for her successful and safe journey to the games.

"I love this," said Anne. "It's going to be really cool to see Japan."

"It was amazing that Anne got that opportunity to go to the World Olympics," said fourth-grader Claire Hudak. "We all wish her all of our prayers and the good luck (she needs)."

After the pep rally, Anne and her parents left for a banquet in Raleigh before heading to Los Angeles. On Feb. 20, the U.S. competitors and coaches boarded a plane provided by the U.S. State Department en route to Japan.

Service and sacrifice Teen-agers participate in 30-Hour Famine

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

HIGH POINT — Can hunger serve a higher purpose? When teen-agers voluntarily go without food for 30 hours, the answer seems to be an unequivocal "yes."

More than 200 sixth- through 12th-graders from six High Point- and Greensboro-area churches participated in World Vision's 30-Hour Famine at Christ United Methodist Church Feb. 26-27.

Youths from Immaculate Heart of Mary Catholic Church have participated in the famine for the past nine years. Three years ago, Christ United Methodist Church and Wesley Memorial United Methodist Church joined the already successful project.

For the 2005 famine, three more churches decided to participate — St. Paul the Apostle Catholic Church in Greensboro and First Methodist Church and Covenant United Methodist Church in High Point.

"The kids (who participated in past years) look forward to the fellowship and the community service," said Terry Aiken, director of youth ministry at Immaculate Heart of Mary Church.

According to World Vision's Web site, groups raise money through donors and sponsors to help millions of starving and hurting children in some of the world's poorest countries.

During the famine, participants went 30 hours without food so they could have a real taste of what hunger is like, and took part in community service projects in addition to raising money.

Money was collected through sponsorships and collections following three church services the students attended. The money raised will be sent to World Vision and put to work in areas like Africa, Asia, Central and South America and the United States.

In 2003, World Vision raised $7.7 million through the 30-Hour Famine program. In 2004, that amount nearly doubled to $11.4 million.

Last year, High Point's 30-Hour Famine raised more than $13,000, making it the top North Carolina fundraising group.

The various service projects included visiting the residents of Maryfield retirement community, yard work and trash pick-up at non-profit agencies and purchasing non-perishable food for the local homeless shelter.

Participants were also visited by a homeless family and learned firsthand the causes and effects of homelessness.

youth and young adults at Christ United Methodist Church, coordinated the weekend's activities.

"This is one weekend that young people are actively participating in community activities," Cornell said.

Going hungry for a good cause and serving their community had an unexpected by-product: new friendships.

In addition to their exposure to the needy in their own community and throughout the world, the teen-agers gained insight into other Christian religions. The entire group attended Saturday Mass at Immaculate Heart of Mary and services at Christ United Methodist and Wesley Memorial United Methodist churches on Sunday.

Aiken and Cornell hope to get more churches and the local synagogue in-involved in the famine next year.

Conventional wisdom would suggest that once teen-agers had fasted for 30 straight hours, they would never want to do it again. Not so, said Betty Galgoc, an adult catechist at Immaculate Heart of Mary.

"It's contagious," she said. "The kids couldn't wait to do it again, and they brought other kids with them."

Matt Hairgrove, a sophomore from Immaculate Heart of Mary Church, said the famine is "a way to connect with the community and help those who are less fortunate."

Cornell summed up the famine's service, sacrifice and camaraderie in just 10 words.

"God's kingdom is a lot bigger than our little playground," he said.

In new book, pope says society did not learn from 20th century

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — In a new book, Pope John Paul II warns that despite the failed ideologies and tragic lessons of the 20th century, modern society still acts as if it can determine good and evil without reference to God.

That represents a threat to entire groups of people, including the unborn, the pope says in the book, "Memory and Identity: Conversations Between Millenniums."

"If man can decide alone, without God, what is good and what is evil, then he can also decide to exterminate a category of human beings," the pope wrote.

The 228-page book was unveiled at a Feb. 22 press conference in Rome. It is due out in English later this year.

Based on conversations between the pope and several Polish academics, the book is essentially a papal reflection on the ideological struggles that played out in Europe over the last 100 years and their significance for the 21st century.

With the advance of the communist revolution, the rise of Nazism, the outbreak of World War II and the installation of the Soviet regime, the pope views the 20th century as a stage upon which the forces of good and evil engaged in sharp combat.

He is convinced that good has triumphed, but worries that not all the lessons have been learned.

For example, the pope noted that Hitler used legal means to open the way to aggression against other European countries, the passage of racial laws, the creation of concentration camps and the introduction of the so-called "final solution" to eradicate the Jewish race.

The pope then connected those historical developments with worrisome signs in modern Europe and elsewhere, and he warned of a dangerous detachment from traditional moral and religious values.

"The most immediate association of ideas that comes to mind are the laws on abortion," he said.

"The parliaments that create and promulgate such laws should be aware that they are abusing their powers and remain in open conflict with the law of God and the law of nature," he said.

If in the past it was nationalist regimes that advanced totalitarian agendas, today the threat is often represented by powerful economic forces that try to impose their ideas around the world, especially in poorer countries, he said.

Under "democratic" forms, this new type of totalitarianism has taken aim at basic human values by promoting moral permissiveness, abortion, euthanasia, genetic manipulation, contraception and divorce, he said.

The pope said one egregious example was the recent legislative push to have homosexual unions recognized as an "alternative form of family."

At the book presentation, Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, head of the Vatican's doctrinal congregation, said the pope was not putting the Holocaust and abortion on the same historical level, but was noting that modern democracies are not immune to evil, including the destruction of human life, which in some forms can even be supported by the majority.

The book is autobiographical in the sense that as a young man the pope lived in a country that found itself in the midst of Europe's ideological struggles. He writes movingly of what people knew and did not know after the Nazi invasion of Poland, saying the true extent of Nazi evil was evident only after the war.

The book has the tone and freshness of a dialogue, but the substance is meaty. It ranges over such topics as the Christian roots of Europe, the relationship between the faith and the Enlightenment in 18th-century Europe, the Industrial Revolution and the emergence of the ideals of freedom and equality in democratic states.

Key to the pope's vision is the belief that the memory of one's own history and culture in large part forms human identity, at the personal and collective levels.

Christ's love is liberating

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

My old friend was clearly in trouble. He was dizzy, unable to stand without help. His breathing was shallow and labored. His fingers and lips were beginning to take on the bluish tinge that warned of oxygen deprivation.

Fearing for his life, his children rushed him to the hospital. It was a relief to all his anxious family and friends when, many hours later, the doctors reported that the emergency surgery had succeeded.

However, he would need lots of help, the family was told. He would be weak for a long time, and his recovery would be slow. Having rejoiced when the crisis was averted, his family now hunkered down for the long, often taxing work of assisting him in the completion of his return to health.

One of the striking elements of the Lazarus story, which the church proclaims each year as candidates for Easter baptism prepare for their Christian initiation, is the final directive Jesus gives to those at the cemetery. After raising Lazarus from the dead and calling him forth from the tomb, Jesus engages the community in his transformative work.

"Untie him," he tells the friends and family and onlookers, "and let him go."

The heavy lifting of conversion, both in its initial stages and in the ongoing life's work of it, is done by Christ. It is he who, in the secret chambers of our hearts and the external circumstances of our lives, draws us to himself in the church.

It is up to the church then, to all of us who comprise the family of faith, to cooperate in his work by untying one another. We must undo the bonds that impede our freedom — injustice, envy, selfishness, complacency, coldness of heart.

In these last weeks of Lent, may Christ make of us liberators.

Questions:

How can I assist someone preparing for Easter baptism to feel more welcome in the church? To whom might I turn for help in "untying" bonds that are keeping me from fully living my faith?

John Travolta, Uma Thurman and Cedric the Entertainer star in "Be Cool," a flat follow-up to the 1994 comedy "Get Shorty" in which a mobster-turned-movie producer sets his sights on the music business. The stale sequel lacks the sharpness and satirical edge of "Shorty." The movie contains recurring violence, an implied sexual encounter, images of smoking, drug content, some vulgar gestures, and much rough and crude language and humor. ABC-TV Easter special focuses on new members of Catholic Church

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON (CNS) — An estimated 150,000 Americans joined the Catholic Church last Easter, according to figures compiled by the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Evangelization.

The stories of a few of those 150,000 will be told in an ABC-TV special slated to air on Easter, March 27.

"Come to the Water: The Adult Journey to Baptism" takes a look at people in the Archdiocese of Seattle who joined the church at last year's Easter Vigil — including those with Protestant, Jewish, Buddhist and atheist backgrounds.

The hourlong special is broadcast at the discretion of ABC affiliates, so interested viewers should check local listings or call their ABC affiliate about its plans to air the program. The U.S. bishops' Web site, www.usccb.org, will have posted in mid-March a list of ABC stations committed to airing the show.

The program will show parts of the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults ceremony at St. James Cathedral in Seattle. Those who are not yet baptized are called catechumens, while those who are already baptized in another Christian faith are called candidates. Candidates receive the other two sacraments of Christian initiation — confirmation and Eucharist — while catechumens receive the sacrament of baptism as well.

As catechumens are led to the cathedral's baptismal font for baptism by immersion, "I take each of them by the hand and you can feel the different reaction," said Archbishop Alex J. Brunett of Seattle. "You can feel people who are actually shaking, you know, and so excited, and some of them so tense because this has got to be a very big moment; they've really worked toward this moment."

"Come to the Water" was produced by New Group Media of South Bend, Ind., for the Catholic Communication Campaign.

Brave Bear returns home to Immaculata School

HENDERSONVILLE — Half-way through Catholic Schools Week earlier this year, students at Immaculata School in Hendersonville welcomed home an old friend.

Brave Bear, a tall ceramic bear in Native American dress, made his unexpected return to the school Feb. 2.

The journey of Brave Bear began last year, when the students were studying Native Americans. As the students covered the gym walls with posters about Indian tribes, one parent and artist, Rhoda Shipman, was inspired to paint the bear she dubbed "Brave Bear."

But Brave Bear moved away before he met the students.

For months, he stood on a downtown sidewalk as part of a public art display. The bears were later auctioned off to a local antiques store, and most of the proceeds went to charity.

But for Catholic Schools Week

Jan. 31-Feb. 4, Jane Asher, the shop owner, brought Brave Bear back to the school.

As the students gathered in the gym, Brave Bear stood on stage with a sheet covering his head.

"How many of you remember Brave Bear?" asked parent Ansley Leitner.

Hands shot up. When the sheet was removed, the students cheered, much to Asher's delight.

"They really wanted him, and I'm really happy he's got a good home," said Asher.

Scott Parrott of the Hendersonville Times-News contributed to this story.

Lent project encourages reading, helps feed poor

HIGH POINT — For the second year, the Lenten project at Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point encourages reading and helps reduce the problem of hunger and poverty.

Students in all eight grades are involved in Heifer International's Read to Feed reading incentive program, in which the students each set reading goals, log their progress and get sponsors to pledge money per the number of hours or books read. At the end of the program, students collect donations and turn them in to their teachers.

Teachers and students then use a special catalog to "purchase" livestock for struggling families in the United States and other countries who have limited resources and are in need of ongoing sources of income. Each "purchase" is symbolic and represents a contribution to the entire program. The animals help families move away from poverty and toward self-reliance.

In return, the families are required to pass on the good deed by giving one of their animal's offspring to another family living in poverty, thus setting off a chain reaction of positive, lasting change.

Last year the school raised more than $5,000 for the project.

Students working to save manatees

HIGH POINT — Fifth-graders at Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point have a chance to be parents to Florida manatees.

Through the Save the Manatee Club, students can donate money to adopt manatees and learn more about the importance of saving endangered species.

Last year's fifth-graders at Immaculate Heart of Mary School adopted 12 manatees; this year's goal is to top that amount. Donations will be pooled to adopt as many of these creatures as possible; $20 gets a student his or her own manatee.

Adoption lasts for one year and students will "check in" on their manatees several times via a Web site, www.savethemanatee.org.

Manatees are large aquatic mammals whose closest land relatives are the elephant and the hyrax, a small, gopher-sized mammal. The average adult manatee is almost 10 feet long and weighs between 800 and 1,200 pounds.

Because manatees are often found in shallow, slow-moving rivers, saltwater bays, canals and coastal areas, many manatee mortalities are human-related and occur from collisions with watercraft.

For more information, or to make a donation, contact fifth-grade teacher Meredith Chandler at the school at (336) 887-2613.

The teaching moment

Catholics have opportunity to enlighten the world

My telephone rang at 6:40 in the morning recently. Taking calls at odd hours is part of my job. Lately I've been getting a lot of them.

Was this the call I've been dreading? The one where a reporter gives me some bad news about the pope?

The caller was a reporter — the pope was back in the hospital. Can I give a short interview about what it all means to the Catholics of the Diocese of Charlotte? A few minutes later another reporter calls, and then another.

Thanks to the Internet, bad news encircles the globe in an instant. Often it can be summarized in a single word — "illness," "tsunami," "earthquake." Then the news media begins its repetition of the facts that are combined with analysis, comment and background information. The calls from reporters are invariably cordial and they represent a great opportunity to step up to the megaphone that is the media and talk about the Catholic Church.

The same people who were calling a year ago to talk about the sex scandal are calling again. This time it is about the condition of the Holy Father. Oddly, as news stories go, the health of the Holy Father and the sex scandals have a few things in common. Both stories commanded a great deal of attention and both present us with what I like to call a "teaching moment" — an opportunity to enlighten a friend, a co-worker or anyone who asks you a question with an answer that is faith based.

In the sex scandal, we learned that an institution as mighty as the Catholic Church can falter, just as we humans do, and when it does it must seek forgiveness. The papal health crisis teaches us that we have a pope who demonstrates the triumph of the spirit over the weakening flesh of advancing age, and there are a great many non-Catholics who love and respect John Paul II.

The media is officially neutral on the value of any story. It may seem like news organizations and individual reporters were out to get the church when all of the reporting was focused on the sin and crime of sex abuse. But the ongoing coverage of the pope's health has been far more positive.

Catholics & the Media

DAVID HAINS

This is not to say that the faltering health of the Holy Father is good news. But it is a good thing when we read and hear stories of people in prayer and the amazing resiliency of the Holy Father. These stories reinforce the faithful and perhaps introduce the church to many who are seeking faith. Both stories also show that when the church faces a crisis, it turns first to prayer.

As the events unfold in Rome, all of us are going to be in a spotlight. This is still a mission diocese; there are a lot of people who have legitimate questions about our church. When asked, we should use the questions as an opportunity to teach, to talk about our faith or the power of prayer, or even the connection between the Holy Father and Jesus Christ through the appointment of St. Peter. The list could go on.

A television reporter, a non-Catholic, who was earnestly trying to understand how Catholics feel about the Holy Father's declining health, recently interviewed me. She asked me, "Are Catholics praying for the pope?"

"Of course," I answered. "In addition to private prayers, we pray for the Holy Father twice during every Mass, once during the Intercessions and later in the Eucharistic prayer." "What does prayer do?" she asked.

It is a brief question that begs for a long answer. But from experience I know that television reporters don't have time for an answer longer than about eight seconds. I paused and prayed for a worthwhile response.

"Prayer makes the world a better place," I said.

The reporter smiled; the sure sign of a teaching moment.

Pope says Africans must work together to build continent's future

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Editor's note: Due to the pope's hospitalization, there is no coverage this week of his weekly audience.

VATICAN CITY — In a message signed before he went into the hospital, Pope John Paul II said the future peace, stability and development of Africa depend on the ability of Africans to work together.

The pope said that in calling for a new Synod of Bishops for Africa he hoped to "deepen and prolong" the energy and commitment African Catholics brought to the church and society following the first African synod, which was held in 1994.

Pope John Paul announced in November that he was convoking a new synod, although he did not announce a date for the gathering. Generally synods take several years to prepare.

The pope's letter to the synod planning committee was dated Feb. 23, the day before he was taken to Rome's Gemelli hospital, where he underwent a tracheotomy to relieve breathing difficulties.

The text of the pope's message was released Feb. 25 by the Vatican.

The Pope Speaks

POPE
JOHN PAUL II

"I rejoice at the commitment of numerous faithful in the urgent work of evangelization and to social development in the continent's countries," the pope said.

But more needs to be done to face the "terrible scourges" of "armed conflict, persistent poverty, diseases and their devastating consequences — beginning with the social drama of AIDS — widespread insecurity and corruption," the pope said.

"To build a prosperous and stable society, Africa needs all its children and their joint efforts," he said.

The pope prayed that African Catholics would become clear witnesses for their neighbors of how much can be accomplished with commitment, generosity and sacrifice.

'Hands of Christ' working in many ways

Reaching DSA goal will benefit parishes, people

St. Teresa of Avila said, "Christ has no body now on earth but yours, no hands but yours, no feet but yours. Yours are the eyes through which the compassion of Christ must look out unto the world. Yours are the feet with which he is to go about doing good. Yours are the hands with which he is to bless his people."

These words of St. Teresa of Avila are just as true today as they were in her day, as we bring to a close this initial phase of the 2005 Diocesan Support Appeal, themed "We are the hands of Christ." The ministries funded through DSA contributions are the outreach ministries that touch the lives of thousands of people here in our diocese. They are ways of reaching out to our brothers and sisters in faith with compassion, good works and blessings.

As we approach Appeal Sunday, March 13, the DSA is almost halfway to the goal of $3,950,000. A total of $1,929,086 has been received in pledges from 8,088 donors during the month of February. Thirty-two parishes have pledges exceeding 50 percent of their target amount.

The in-pew effort on Appeal Sunday often results in more than half of our parishes reaching their assessed goal. Any money received over the parish goal is returned to the parish for its own use.

Each year, during the DSA, I hear of many ways the appeal has touched people's lives. The catechumens and candidates in my own parish felt a great sense of belonging to the universal Catholic Church when they attended the rite of election, under the direction of the Parishioners at St. Joseph Church in Asheboro benefited from the Lenten reflections and evening of prayer led by Frank Villarronga, director of evangelization in the diocese. The seniors of the diocese are already looking forward to the "Spring Fling," under the direction of Sandra Breakfield, director of diocesan Elder Ministry. A young engaged couple spoke of the many ways their marriage will be enhanced thanks to their participation in Catholic Social Services Marriage Preparation.

These are just a few of the ways a DSA-funded ministry has made a difference in the lives of our parishioners.

By the time the DSA comes to a close at the end of 2005, nearly 20,000 parishioners will know what it means to be the hands of Christ through a gift to the appeal. More importantly, over 100,000 people will know what it means to receive help from someone who serves as the hands of Christ.

Holy Week is about 'unclogging the arteries'

It seems to me that "repentance" has been the key word for the whole season of Lent, and it reaches its apex during the Holy Week, which is by all standards the most important week of the year.

We have heard many times during our liturgical prayers, "If you hear the voice of the Lord, harden not your hearts." The voice of the Lord calling to repentance, therefore, must have an answer by unclogging the arteries rather than going on with the hardness of heart. Sometimes, we are unaware of our stony hearts by being agnostics or non-authentic, by being Mr. or Mrs. Perfect, by being mercenaries rather than volunteers.

The word "agnostic" means somebody who does not know or somebody who claims he or she does not know. The early church suffered a great deal about this illness that plagued society for many centuries and there is still some "left-over" today. One of the claims of the agnostic people was that Jesus was not real and once they acquired that knowledge, they could live as they pleased and do anything they cared to do. The result of this mess was a very low standard of morality and values.

We know by experience that "if anything goes, nothing comes." Then authenticity comes into play. If we claim to be Jesus' followers walking in the light of love, but our lifestyle does not really reflect this, we are liars, as the Apostle John bluntly wrote.

We cannot ignore our brothers and sisters, whom we see, and pretend to love God, whom we don't see. The cost of discipleship is not free nor is the gift of God. It does not mean that we buy the gift or we bribe God for it. It simply means we must meet certain requirements to receive his free gift.

The other John (the Baptist) tells us that repentance is a change of heart; in modern understanding, we talk about heart-transplant or bypass surgery. The problem with some of us is that we never can get the business of repentance started because we may see ourselves as Mr. or Mrs. Perfect.

Not by accident, Jesus uttered the harshest words to the so-called "religious people." And yet he has the good news for the same people: I have come to lift the heavy burden you are carrying into your worship experience. I have come to lift the heavy burden you are carrying into your relationship with God and one another.

Not the external letter of the law, but the spirit "within" should be the basis of our approach to God and others. Therefore, change, turn, unclog your arteries and open the flow of love and grace. It's OK to change the status quo into the status fidei.

The New Testament, speaking of the "hardness of heart," refers to the Greek mentality, which believed that the heart was the center of our being, not the brain. The truth is that we may physically have a very healthy heart and a very weak mind. Jesus goes to the heart of the matter: He goes to our thinking and our feeling.

Repentance basically is "change." We know that change cannot be forced on us. Forced repentance, forced love, forced forgiveness are contradictions in terms. The genuine followers of Christ are volunteers and lovers. You are not perfect, neither am I, so let's make the best of our flaws!

Capuchin Father Aurilia is pastor of Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville.

Clarification of response to laicization meaning

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN
DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

Q. I was offended by the tone of your recent response to "What does laicization mean?" You said the laicization process is "designed to protect the rights of everyone — any victims, the offenders and other Catholics or members of civil society."

This is a loaded statement that makes the popular assumption that all laicized priests are wicked abusers. You didn't mention that a priest can be laicized after walking away from the priesthood for a number of reasons which do not involve abuse.

As the daughter of a laicized priest who left the priesthood in the tumultuous 1960s, I can say you should have thought harder before responding in such a cold way. After 30 years away, he returned to the church, goes to Mass almost daily and prays for himself, family and friends, the church and other priests. You should be added to his list. (Missouri)

A. Perhaps you didn't notice that the questioner in that column specifically asked about a priest who is "laicized because of grievous offenses against Catholic law." I took, that, as it seems you did also, as referring especially to the current scandals of sexual abuse by priests. The response I gave was in that context.

It is worth noting, however, that several possible circumstances may explain a priest's being dismissed from the clerical state, or laicized. Some are punishments for wrongdoing, but others involve dismissal with the priest's own consent or at his request.

Canon law provides that dismissal from the clerical state may occur through a declaration that the ordination was invalid (similar to the declaration of nullity of a marriage); it may be imposed as a penalty; or it may be granted for "most grave causes" to priests who request it (No. 290).

As you say about your father, it is rash to judge Catholic priests who left the ministry, especially in this third way. Many are living full, active and faithful Catholic lives. It is a mistake to assume otherwise.

Questions for this column should be sent to Father John Dietzen, Box 3315, Peoria, Ill. 61612, or email jjdietzen@aol.com.

Free speech in church

Sermon content should be protected for religious freedom

If a priest or minister is preaching the Word of God, would you agree that he should be free in this country to say what needs to be said in order to apply that Word of God to the circumstances of our times?

That's exactly what Martin Luther King, Jr. thought, and he said this the night before he was assassinated: "It's all right to talk about the new Jerusalem, but one day, God's preacher must talk about the new New York, the new Atlanta, the new Philadelphia, the new Los Angeles, the new Memphis, Tennessee."

The Second Vatican Council also defended the freedom of the preacher in these words in the Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World: "... At all times and in all places, the Church should have the true freedom to teach the faith, to proclaim its teaching about society, to carry out its task among men without hindrance, and to pass moral judgment even in matters relating to politics, whenever the fundamental rights of man or the salvation of souls requires it" (GS 76).

But in 1954, this freedom was threatened when Lyndon Johnson introduced an amendment into the tax code to protect himself from anti-communist groups that were threatening his re-election. Johnson was not targeting churches, but his action affected them, because the amendment said that tax-exempt groups could not intervene in political campaigns.

This amendment to the tax code was inserted without hearings or debate; it was done literally within a few minutes.

Now, many bishops, priests and ministers are confused and intimidated about "preaching about politics," to the point that some church attorneys even gave legal advice in the last election cycle saying that churches should not quote the president talking about the "Culture of Life," because, after all, he was running for re-election.

A piece of legislation has been introduced in Congress to restore some sanity to the situation. The Houses of Worship Free Speech Restoration Act (HR 235) will protect the contents of the sermons and religious teachings delivered in our nation's churches by insuring that such content does not become the basis for challenging a church's tax-exempt status.

Freedom of speech is a bedrock of our republic. It takes on an even greater dimension when considered in the context of churches. Those who preach and teach the Word of God are carrying out a mission not given to them by an earthly authority, but rather entrusted to them by the King of kings and Lord of lords.

The content of a sermon or religious teaching, therefore, has to be protected in order to insure that religion can be freely and properly exercised, that the preacher can fulfill the sacred duties to which he is solemnly committed, and that the congregation can receive the clear and robust teaching of their religion, free of distortion, dilution, or apology.

That's why each of us should contact our representative in Congress and urge support for HR 235, the Houses of Worship Free Speech Restoration Act.

Family of faith: St. Joseph Church serves Catholics in Catawba County

St. Joseph Church in Newton has served Catholics in Catawba County for more than 30 years.

NEWTON — In the late 1800s, Catholic priests visited the Hickory area to do missionary work. They continued to celebrate Mass periodically until 1928, when Benedictine priests began celebrating weekly Masses in Hickory's St. Aloysius Church.

While Catholics in Catawba County had been gathering to attend Mass from time to time for almost a century, it took until 1965 for land to be purchased on which to build a mission church in Newton.

During the early 1970s, Msgr. Eugene Livelsberger, then-pastor of St. Aloysius Church, saw the Catholic population in his Catawba County region grow. In 1977, ground was broken to begin construction on a new church in Newton, which was dedicated in October 1978.

Then-Bishop Michael J. Begley served as celebrant of the dedication Mass of St. Joseph Church, after which Msgr. Livelsberger and his pastoral associate, Father John Murray, continued to offer Mass for Catholics in Newton. The new Catholic Church received a warm welcome, as its mortgage had been paid in full even before that first Mass was celebrated.

Although established as a mission church of St. Aloysius Church, St. Joseph experienced rapid growth. Bishop Begley, in turn, installed Father John Hoover as its first resident priest in December 1979, thereby granting parish status to St. Joseph Church.

The parish quickly turned its attention to expanding outreach efforts. The pastoral council voted to build a parish center for faith formation and social activities. Named Holy Family Hall, it was completed in the fall of 1982.

St. Joseph Church has continued to welcome all seeking to share in the Lord's grace. Father Richard Hokanson was pastor from 1991 to 1997. Father Gordon Pillon served as administrator from 1997 to 1999.

Father James Collins assumed the pastorate of St. Joseph Church in 1999.

Community is a staple of the Newton church. In addition to a variety of active parish commissions, St. Joseph parishioners volunteer their time to such efforts as Knights of Columbus; Prime Timers, a retiree group; and youth and Hispanic ministries. With Deacon Scott Gilfillan's direction, the parish has become active in prison ministry.

Trained parishioners also are involved in a ministry to the sick. Community outreach programs include support of such organizations as Eastern Catawba Cooperative Christian Ministry, The Corner Table soup kitchen and the Pregnancy Care Center.

The parish strongly illustrated its embrace of ecumenism in October 1996 when St. Joseph Church celebrated five years of dialogue with Beth Eden Evangelical Lutheran Church. The festivities included the signing of a historical covenant between the two churches, outlining an agreement to work together toward unity as they approached the millennium.

That relationship continues today as both churches continue to work together for Christian unity. This past January, Bishop Peter J. Jugis went to St. Joseph Church to participate in the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity Service along with representatives of Lutheran, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Church of Christ churches.

St. Joseph Church experienced a devastating fire on Feb. 28, 2002, the result of a candle left burning in the church's chapel. While the majority of the structural, mechanical and electrical damage was contained to the chapel, the sanctuary received extensive smoke damage.

The congregation turned the tragedy into an opportunity for rebuilding, improving and enlarging the church. The sanctuary was expanded and classrooms were added to alleviate overcrowding.

During the 13-month rebuilding project, Mass was celebrated in the parish hall. The newly renovated church saw its first celebration of Mass on Holy Thursday in April. Then-Bishop William G. Curlin rededicated the church on June 15, 2003.

In June 2004, the Alma Mae Hoover Carpenter and Charles Harold Carpenter Endowment Fund for the Benefit of St. Joseph Parish was established through the Foundation for the Diocese of Charlotte. Interest generated from the $200,000 endowment, donated by parishioner Charles Carpenter, assists in non-budgeted needs of the parish.

Although it is less than 30 years old, St. Joseph Church is the product of decades of Catholicism's presence in western North Carolina. From its beginnings as a mission church to a thriving parish community today, it has proven to be an active family of faith.

MAGGIE VALLEY — Preschool Faith Day at St. Margaret of Scotland Church gave kids a chance to learn and play, while parents looked at the materials that will be used for preschool faith formation this fall.

St. Margaret of Scotland Church historically has had a majority of adults and retirees, but now more families are moving to the area and joining the parish. In May, nine youngsters will make their first Communion, the most in a number of years.

About 15 children, ages 5 months to 10 years, attended the faith day, in the parish hall March 5.

COMMANDING ATTENTION

Kermit Phillips of New River, Tenn., and Eric Herman of Millersville, Md., stand in front of the U.S. Supreme Court March 2 with signs illustrating their opposing positions on whether Ten Commandments monuments should be displayed on government property. The Supreme Court heard arguments in two cases regarding such displays.

Supreme Court hears arguments in two Ten Commandments cases

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In two cases argued March 2 over displays of the Ten Commandments on government property, Supreme Court justices raised questions about the motives of government authorities who ordered the displays, about the difference between versions of the commandments, and about what sort of tests should be used to evaluate the displays' constitutionality.

In the cases, the court is being asked to rule on the constitutionality of a 40-year-old granite Ten Commandments monument on the grounds of the Texas state Capitol in Austin, and on displays of framed copies of the commandments amid other historic documents on the walls of courthouses in McCreary and Pulaski counties in Kentucky.

Although some defenders of the monuments have portrayed the cases as a critical turning point for religious rights, other legal observers have said it is more likely that they will affect little more than other such monuments.

Supporters of the monuments in both cases, including the acting U.S. solicitor general, argued that the Texas Legislature and county supervisors in the two Kentucky counties were not promoting a particular religion but merely giving appropriate credit to the historic importance of the commandments in the foundation of the U.S. government and its legal system.

Attorneys for opponents of the monuments tended to stick to the specific circumstances of each case, avoiding the justices' efforts to discuss the circumstances under which it would be appropriate to have government-sponsored displays of the Ten Commandments.

Attorney David Friedman, arguing for the American Civil Liberties Union in its case, McCreary County vs. ACLU of Kentucky, said the counties' supervisors "absolutely intended and felt they had a right to display the Ten Commandments because of the religious nature of the displays."

Even a third version of the display, which included equal-sized versions of other historic documents in addition to the commandments, emphasized that the tablets Moses received from God are "the foundation of our legal system," he said.

Such monuments around the country typically include the version of the commandments familiar to most Protestants. It differs from the one familiar to Catholics in that it includes a prohibition on worshipping graven images and combines what the Catholic version treats as two commandments forbidding coveting a neighbor's wife and coveting a neighbor's goods.

Justice Antonin Scalia argued that "it doesn't matter what version it is if it stands for the belief that the law is from God."

When somebody walks by such a monument, he said, it's not important what the exact words are, but that they remind people of God's role in shaping the founders' beliefs and the system of law.

Cuban bishops say cardinal treated poorly by U.S. officials

HAVANA (CNS) — Cuban Cardinal Jaime Ortega Alamino was held for three hours and treated disrespectfully by U.S. immigration officials at the Miami airport when he tried to enter the United States on a Vatican diplomatic passport at the end of February, said the Cuban bishops.

An official wanted to open a file on the cardinal as a possible dangerous person and began asking him questions, which he refused to answer, said the bishops in a March 3 statement.

The cardinal said he told the U.S. officials he was a well-known figure and complained that they were arbitrary in deciding which Cubans needed a file, according to the bishops' statement.

Cardinal Ortega is president of the Cuban bishops' conference and head of the Havana Archdiocese. He is a frequent traveler to Miami, where there is a large Cuban-American community.

The incident occurred Feb. 25 and was first reported Feb. 28 by El Nuevo Herald, a Miami Spanish-language daily newspaper, citing unnamed sources.

Zachary Mann, a Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement spokesman, told Catholic News Service that the cardinal was treated courteously and professionally and was held for an hour.

The bishops said that the treatment of the cardinal was "brusque and discourteous," and he was told he had no choice but to answer the questions if he wanted to enter the United States.

When the cardinal said he had the option of returning to Cuba, an official told him he had been given permission to stay in the United States for 30 days, said the bishops.

During the cardinal's time at the airport, U.S. officials made no mention of the cardinal's criticisms of the Cuban and U.S. governments, said the bishops.

Cardinal Ortega has criticized restrictions on religious liberty in Cuba and has opposed the U.S. economic embargo against the island nation.

Vatican says cardinals to stand in for pope during Holy Week

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican announced that a series of cardinals would be standing in for Pope John Paul II in the celebration of Holy Week events.

For the first time in his 26-year pontificate, the pope was not scheduled to preside over Holy Week and Easter celebrations, said a March 8 Vatican press statement.

However, the pope was expected to impart the papal blessing "urbi et orbi" (to the city of Rome and the world) March 27, Easter, following Mass presided over by Cardinal Angelo Sodano, Vatican secretary of state.

Where the pope would be when he was to offer his Easter blessing "was left purposely vague," said a Vatican official, since it was still unclear as to what extent the pope would be able to resume activities following his hospitalization for respiratory problems and a tracheotomy.

Papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said March 7 the Vatican hoped the pope would be back in the Vatican for Holy Week, but he would decide how or if he would participate in the week's many liturgies.

Over the past few years, due to his limited mobility, the pope has forgone performing certain Holy Week rituals, such as washing the feet of priests on Holy Thursday and carrying the cross on Good Friday; instead, he has assigned the task to others.

This time several cardinals, including U.S. Cardinal J. Francis Stafford of the Apostolic Penitentiary, have been asked to preside over the Holy Week liturgies and events.

March 12. Anyone interested in participating should call the church office at (828) 754-5281.

Official says Catholic-Muslim committee prayed for hospitalized pope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Catholic and Muslim members of a joint interreligious committee opened their one-day meeting in Cairo, Egypt, with a silent prayer for Pope John Paul II who was hospitalized that same day.

The Feb. 24 meeting of the joint committee of the Permanent Committee of al-Azhar for Dialogue with Monotheistic Religions and the Vatican's Council for Interreligious Dialogue "began with a silent prayer with special intentions going for the Holy Father," a Vatican official said March 7.

Pope John Paul was rushed to Rome's Gemelli hospital the morning of Feb. 24 after suffering a recurrence of respiratory problems. He was hospitalized Feb. 1-10 for treatment of a flu-related inflammation of the throat.

The joint committee meets once each year to discuss issues important to Islamic-Catholic relations. This year, delegates discussed the church's call to mission and the similar call in Islam to Da'wa.

Da'wa is the duty of Muslims to convey the message of Islam to non-Muslims. The aim of Christian mission is to propagate Christianity or to carry out humanitarian work.

A delicate balance must be struck by both religions to spread their faith without falling into proselytization, that is, inducing another to convert to one's own religious faith.

In a written press release, the joint committee asked that while Catholics follow their call to mission and Muslims their duty to Da'wa "the freedom of belief of each person be respected."

Both sides agreed that in the formation of Catholic missionaries and Muslims engaged in Da'wa, religious educational institutions played an important role in instilling a sense of respect for others' beliefs.

The joint committee agreed that every person has a "right to seek truth and to follow it according to their conscience without fear of incurring punishment" or undergoing pressure "to go against their conscience."

Muslim and Catholic delegates also appealed to the international community to "not link together religion and terrorism since terrorism has no religion." Christianity and Islam "call for peace, fraternity and love among all human beings," the statement said.

The Vatican delegation to this year's joint committee included the head of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue, Archbishop Michael Fitzgerald, and the apostolic nuncio to Egypt, Archbishop Marco Brogi.

Farming support

Bishop Thomas G. Wenski of Orlando, Fla., leading spokesman in the church in immigration matters and former chairman of the U.S. bishops' migration committee, speaks at a press conference on a federal measure known as AgJOBS Feb. 24 in Tallahassee, Fla. He is joined by farmworkers and farming leaders to support the bill allowing farm laborers who are now in the country, whether legally or illegally, to become legal residents and eventually U.S. citizens. If the bill is passed, immigrant farmworkers will be able to register for temporary legal residency. They could then earn permanent residency by working in agriculture for a specified amount of time. "It is not an amnesty program," said Bishop Wenski. "These are workers who have invested sweat equity and they deserve legal immigration status."

Paintings on beatitudes brighten church

BY DEACON GERALD POTKAY
CORRESPONDENT

GREENSBORO — At one church, people are looking at the beatitudes in a whole new way.

Parishioners saw the arrival of 16 paintings at St. Pius X Church Feb. 24. The eight color and eight black-and-white paintings depict the beatitudes of Jesus from the perspectives of the world and God.

Dee Schenck Rhodes, the artist, is the stepdaughter of a parishioner at the church.

The beatitudes, teachings of Jesus, describe the ideal Christian character and lay down some of the guiding principles of Christian morality.

The paintings will remain on public display at the church until March 17, according to Tracy Welliver, pastoral associate. Because the paintings are going to be used for the main theme in Lent at St. Pius X Church, they have temporarily replaced eight of the Stations of the Cross. The paintings will be taken down on each Friday morning during that time period for veneration of the Stations.

Pictured is a painting by Dee Schenck Rhodes of one of the beatitudes: Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness. The painting and others depicting the beatitudes hang in St. Pius X Church in Greensboro.

"They (the paintings) add a lot to our Lenten season," said Welliver. "Msgr. (Anthony) Marcaccio had delivered a very good homily on the beatitudes, and now we can visualize them differently through the work of Dee Rhodes."

"I think it is good to have another form of sacred art to brighten the church," said Welliver.

"The colors really bring out more emotions and they make you think about it (the theme of the beatitudes) a lot more," said Brian Rachal, a member of St. Pius X Church's RCIA program, who helped hang the paintings.

In addition to the paintings, there will be copies of the book "Blessed Paradoxes: the Beatitudes as Painted Prayer" with pictures by Rhodes and poetic commentary available for reference and/or devotion.

Women unite for World Day of Prayer service

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

HICKORY — Catholic women in Poland helped write this year's World Day of Prayer worship service, and Catholic women in the Hickory area helped organize a service close to home.

Carole Marmorato, a parishioner of St. Aloysius Church who for eight years has headed the planning committee of Church Women United's local chapter, received a bouquet of roses at the end of this year's ecumenical service at First Presbyterian Church March 4. The gift was from members of the Fraternity of Brother Francis, recognizing Marmorato's role in the community effort.

"I have really come to know a lot of wonderful people while doing this," said Marmorato. "The enthusiasm of the 12 to 15 women who help me do this year after year really helps me."

"I am also really thankful for the support I get from St. Aloysius (Church)," she said. "This is an official ministry of our church through the Community Life commission."

The World Day of Prayer is an international event uniting Christian women in 179 countries. The first event took place in Poland in 1927. In the United States, the service is sponsored and supported by Church Women United, an ecumenical movement working to bring peace and justice.

Women from 18 churches of various denominations in the Hickory area are involved in preparation for the service each year.

The women began the service by passing out bread and salt, symbols of hospitality in Poland, to welcome those in attendance. The theme, "Let Our Light Shine," was reinforced by the Scripture readings and by the lighting of candles near the end of the service.

Dr. Emmanuel Gitlin, professor emeritus of religion at Lenoir-Rhyne College in Hickory, spoke during the service about his experiences growing up in his native Poland, and gave some information about the history, religion, and customs in the country. He led a prayer for the health of the pope, and also prayed in Polish, with the congregation repeating prayers in English.

Musicians from First Presbyterian and Zion Lutheran churches provided the music, which included a piece by the First Presbyterian handbell choir.

Catechists discuss lifelong faith formation in parishes

Conference Center March 3.

This session of parish catechetical leader in-service training was sponsored by Harcourt Religion Publishers and was coordinated by the Diocese of Charlotte's Central Region Leadership Team. It was a follow-up to last year's program with Bill Huebsch on whole community catechesis.

"I think this is the trend in the church, toward whole-community catechesis," said Carol Brown of the Central Region team.

Kehrwald based his talks on the "General Directory for Catechesis (GDC)," which speaks of getting beyond a "school-house" format of children, teachers and classes to entire-community involvement.

Times have changed, he said, since his boyhood when every room in his house had a crucifix — "even the walls catechized."

"There needs to be some sort of rootedness and right now [people] don't see the root," said Mercy Sister Carolyn Coll, director of faith formation at St. Michael Church in Gastonia.

"I see movement for the sake of movement," she said. "What I see (in society in general) is a lack of fire. How do we create a fire that enriches the community?"

more than 1,000 parishes across North America."

As an example of event-centered catechesis, Kehrwald said, "Imagine First Communion as a learning experience of the whole community. Can you imagine what it would be like if we all said, 'Wow, how incredible this Eucharist is?'"

His own parish, St. Francis of Assisi,

'The life of the parish is crucial to the faith growth of families, but families are crucial to the faith growth of the parish.'

Kehrwald emphasized learning, not teaching.

"No textbook series can provide full faith formation," he said. "All generations are crucial: parents to children, children to parents. The life of the parish is crucial to the faith growth of families, but families are critical to the faith growth of the parish. What do we bring on Sunday but what we've lived the other six days?"

In fact, Kehrwald said, community comes before texts.

"When people ask what curriculum you use, please do not give the name of a publisher," he said. "... Curriculum lies within the community. We need to know Jesus, not just know about Jesus."

The GDC backs this up: "The definitive aim of catechesis is to put people not only in touch, but also in communion and intimacy, with Jesus Christ. All evangelizing activity is understood as promoting communion with Jesus Christ" (80).

"In a learning community, we sense the presence and activity of God so, therefore, there is spiritual growth and discipleship," Kehrwald said. "This leads to outreach and mission — works of outreach and generosity for others, then ourselves. This is a sense of culture that is larger than its component parts."

Kehrwald focused on faith formation centered around events in the liturgical year, lifelong and systematic catechesis connected to real life, and intergenerational catechesis with everyone in the parish involved.

"I can tell you that they work," Kehrwald said. "We're working with recalled how God spoke to Francis, telling him to "Rebuild my church, which you see is falling to ruin." Kehrwald said parishioners prepared for the feast of St. Francis, Oct. 4, by "learning about St. Francis, Franciscan values, and how we are all called to rebuild the church. It was a terrific learning experience."

Connected catechesis, Kehrwald said, includes reflection at home before participating in services at church. For instance, he said, "It doesn't make sense to come (to Mass) on Holy Thursday if you don't take time to think and pray at home about what it means to wash each other's feet."

Kehrwald said a pastor's involvement is crucial. He suggested helping pastors to get a taste of the concept by inviting them to training sessions that focus on whole-community catechesis.

Donna Tarney of St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte said that it only takes one person to get things rolling.

"No one can stop me from arranging an event that involves all generations," she said. "Once you start, they'll come."

Students unveil ideas for new school facility

SALISBURY — Sacred Heart Church recently purchased 40 acres on which to build a new church, school and multipurpose facility.

The new property gave the eighth-grade class an opportunity to use their math skills and give some valuable input for the new school.

Students worked in pairs for three weeks to design new school plans. The teams then each submitted a scale drawing or model and a two-to-three page paper explaining the reasoning and concepts used.

The entire student body, faculty and staff were surveyed to evaluate the needs for the new facility. The students then incorporated the feedback into their designs.

The majority of the designs included larger classrooms, covered walkways, expanded parking areas and separate wings for the elementary and middle school classes.

As part of their grade, the students presented their designs to representatives of the building committee March 4.

"Although no decision has been made as to what building will be built first on the new property, I felt having students design a future school would both meet math curriculum objectives and give students a voice in the building process," said Kathleen Miller, principal of Sacred Heart School.

First- and fourth-graders at St. Ann School in Charlotte prepare 200 lunches to help feed the homeless at Urban Ministry Center in Charlotte Feb. 22. The lunches each contained two sandwiches, an apple, cookies and a bag of carrots. The students also decorated the lunch bags with personal messages of love and faith. The outreach effort was part of the school's annual Lenten "Good Deeds" service projects, which included collecting books for Thompson Child Development Center in Charlotte and dog toys for the Humane Society animal shelter, and raising donations for the school's Pennies for Patients Campaign for the Leukemia Society and Samaritan's Feet.

children gathered together," said Augustinian Father Francis Doyle, pastor. "I hope their enthusiasm will make our parishioners even more committed."

The children visited four "stations": music, with songs such as "Jesus Loves Me"; Easter stories about Jesus, his care for children, and Hebrew Scripture stories such as Noah and the Ark; activities with Bible puzzles and puppets with Bible figures; and crafts, including making colorful cross-and-bead necklaces and Easter bonnets made from paper plates and bowls.

Parents helped out with snacks and at the four stations.

"It was just that they get to know each other better, so when they start in the fall they'll know each other better," said Michelle Pipitone, who was there with her daughters Michaela, 10, and Madeleine, 8, and son 5-year-old son Nicolo.

"In church they have to be quiet, so today they could play together," said Pipitone.

The 6- to 10-year-olds helped the younger ones.

"This was their almsgiving for Lent," said Tracey Fowler of the faith formation team.

Alex and Tina Masciarelli brought their daughters: Sophia, 4, Fiona, 2, and Olivia, 1.

"It's just a chance for the kids to get together, to learn and have fun together," Alex said. "Our parish has been growing and changing, and we need this."

Tina agreed. She and her husband plan to help out.

"Our children's spiritual formation is very important to us," she said. "I think it's important for our kids to see us doing it together. We come to church together, pray together, eat dinner together every night."

Both parents work full time. Alex teaches Spanish at Waynesville Middle School; Tina is a social worker with REACH of Haywood County, which helps abused women and children.

She said that's one of the reasons that she and her husband are committed to a strong, family-oriented faith formation program, because, "being a social worker, I see what happens to kids down the road who don't have that."

individual journeys and renew their commitment to Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

"This is a joyous occasion that brings each of us the joy of serving, as well as the realization of whom we are doing it for," said Deacon Timothy Rohan, permanent deacon at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro. "The grace we receive when renewing our vows helps us to continue to faithfully serve God's people to the best of our ability."

The Mass was also a time for the deacons' wives to once again renew their promises of support for their husbands in their ministry.

"This is a wonderful occasion that brings all of God's servants together for renewal and to remind ourselves of our purpose and mission as deacons," said Deacon Jeffrey Evers, permanent deacon at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

"We came to remember what we committed ourselves to at ordination and to recommit ourselves to the next year fully renewed in spirit," said Deacon John Sims, permanent deacon at St. Therese Church in Mooresville.

Candidates for the permanent diaconate, who were instituted into the Office of Reader by Bishop Jugis during the Mass, and their wives and relatives joined in the celebration. For the candidates, the event was a major step in the long journey to ordination as deacons.

"In receiving the Bible during the rite of institution today, you candidates are to see to it that the Word of God grows strong in the hearts of Christ's people, and that it grows strong in your own hearts, too," said Bishop Jugis during his homily to the candidates.

"This was a very meaningful time for us as we go through our spiritual journey," said candidate Richard Hanners. "We, that is, all of the men in the program are grateful to serve."

"It was especially momentous because I was baptized at St. Patrick's," said candidate Kevin Williams. "It was neat to have come this far in our journey towards ordination."

"It makes everything more real about the whole process (towards ordination)," said Theresa Williams, Kevin's wife. "It's a blessing to have the entire deacon community together with the candidates."

"What the Lord asks of his servants is humility," said the bishop.

Bishop Jugis spoke about Christ's role as a model of humility right up to his total humiliation on the cross.

"Those who serve Christ must be like the Divine Master ... (they) must identify themselves with the Master in all things," said the bishop. "The Lord's people must see Christ in us ... through our deeds and in our actions, in and outside the church."

God, as man, came to seek what was lost, said Bishop Jugis.

"This is what people are craving ... they are looking to get on the path to salvation," he said. "You have the light that people want, the light of God leading to salvation. Their hearts will not be at peace until they find the light of Christ."

Bishop Jugis encouraged the deacons and candidates to "seek always to live united to Christ."

New liturgical norms for Diocese of Charlotte

Vatican says Mass norms promote reverence

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — Bishop Peter J. Jugis has promulgated new liturgical norms for the Diocese of Charlotte.

The new norms, which cover all aspects of the Mass from Introductory Rites to Communion, will take effect Holy Thursday, March 24.

The norms for celebrating Mass ensure reverence for the Eucharist and preserve the unity of the Catholic Church, according to a recent Vatican document.

"Liturgical norms are necessary because 'in liturgy full public worship is performed by the Mystical Body of Jesus Christ, that is, by the Head and by the members,'" said the document, "Redemptionis Sacramentum" ("The Sacrament of Redemption"), written by the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments.

"No one should be surprised if, with the passage of time, Holy Mother Church has developed words and actions, and therefore directives, for this supreme act of worship," said the document, approved by Pope John Paul II and released in April 2004. "Eucharistic norms are devised to express and protect the Eucharistic mystery and also manifest that it is the Church that celebrates this august sacrifice and Sacrament."

The Vatican confirmed the English translation of the General Instruction of the Roman Missal March 19, 2003. The General Instruction presents norms for the celebration of Mass.

It includes detailed instructions for each part of the Mass; for the duties of the celebrant, other ministers and the people; for differences when there are concelebrants and when a deacon is present or not; for the arrangement and furnishing of churches; and for the bread and wine, the vessels and vestments.

"The current norms, prescribed in keeping with the will of the Second Vatican Ecumenical Council, and the new Missal that the Church of the Roman Rite is to use from now on in the celebration of Mass are also evidence of the great concern of the Church, of her faith, and of her unchanged love for the great mystery of the Eucharist," said the instruction.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

The celebration of the Holy Eucharist is the "source and summit of the Christian life" (Lumen Gentium, 11). After many years of preparation, the third typical edition of the General Instruction of the Roman Missal was approved in English translation on March 17, 2003. This document provides the framework of our celebration of the Sacred Mysteries and guides us that we may celebrate the Holy Sacrifice in unity and peace. On March 25, 2004 the Holy See issued a further instruction on the Eucharist entitled, "Redemptionis Sacramentum" ("The Sacrament of Redemption") to provide greater clarity to certain matters regarding the Most Holy Eucharist and "to preserve this mystery of faith with reverence, care, devotion and love."

It is with this in mind that I have the joy of promulgating the following liturgical norms for the Diocese of Charlotte. They are outlined here for the benefit of all the Christian faithful of our Diocese and are to be considered normative for the celebration of the Sacred Liturgy on Holy Thursday, March 24, 2005, the beginning of the Triduum of Easter.

Sincerely Yours in Christ,

+ Peter J. Jugis

The Most Reverend Peter J. Jugis, J.C.D.
Bishop of Charlotte

Liturgical Norms of the Diocese of Charlotte

General Norms

1. It is the right of all of Christ's faithful that the Liturgy, and in particular the celebration of Holy Mass, should truly be as the Church wishes, according to the stipulations as prescribed in the liturgical books and in the other laws and norms.¹ The norms set forth here, therefore, are presented to insure the prayerful and worthy celebration of the Sacred Mysteries within the Diocese of Charlotte so that all of God's faithful might celebrate with one heart and one voice.

2. Any construction or significant alteration of a sanctuary requires the approval of the bishop.

3. The preference is that the tabernacle should be located in the sanctuary, apart from the altar of sacrifice in an appropriate place, not excluding an older altar no longer used for celebration. The tabernacle is to be immovable and non-transparent and locked in such a way that the danger of profanation is prevented to the greatest extent possible.² The sanctuary as defined by the General Instruction is the place where the altar stands, where the word of God is proclaimed, and where the priest, the deacon, and the other ministers exercise their offices.³

4. There is to be a crucifix permanently displayed near the altar and visible to the congregation. There should be only one crucifix prominently displayed in the sanctuary. If a processional crucifix is used, it should not remain in the sanctuary during the celebration of Mass.⁴

5. All parish churches and chapels are to have kneelers so that the faithful might kneel for both the celebration of the Sacred Liturgy and private devotion.

6. The words of prayers, responses and readings are to be utilized as they appear in the approved Mass texts. For example, The Nicene Creed, the response at the Orationes fratres, and the preface dialogue, and other Mass texts are not to be altered. No foreign elements are to be introduced into the liturgy other than those that are called for by the liturgical norms, e.g. liturgical dance.⁵

7. Sacred song is prayer "prayed twice."⁶ The people's participation in sacred song should be carefully nurtured and a parish repertory of sacred music should be developed over time. Purely secular lyrics have no place in the sacred liturgy.⁷

8. Silence can foster reverence and reflection. Before Mass begins, a time of silence is commendable in the church, the sacristy, and in adjacent areas so that all may be disposed to carry out the sacred actions in a devout and fitting manner. Sacred silence, as a part of the celebration, is also to be observed at the designated times: for example, after each invitation to pray, at the conclusion of each reading, after the homily, and after Communion.⁸

9. All presidential texts are to be spoken or sung in a loud and clear voice so that everyone might hear them. While the presiding priest is speaking these texts, the organ or other musical instruments should be silent.⁹

10. With the exception of the altar cloth, which should usually remain on the altar at all times, the altar should be as bare as possible before Mass begins. No vessels or books should be on the altar before Mass. If the altar candles block the people's view, they should be placed near, but not on the altar.¹⁰

11. When altar coverings other than white are used, the uppermost cloth must be white.¹¹ The corporal, which is the cloth placed immediately beneath the chalice and paten for the celebration of the Mass, should be unfolded and placed on the altar at the Presentation of the Gifts,¹² and should be removed from the altar at the end of the Communion Rite for proper laundering. "Permanent" corporals that remain on the altar from Mass to Mass are not appropriate. It may be necessary to use several corporals on which are placed the extra ciboria and communion cups.

12. Planning for the Mass should include providing for a sufficient number of hosts to be consecrated so that all can receive hosts consecrated during that Mass, underlining the connection between consecration and communion. Generally, reserved hosts should not be brought from the tabernacle unless needed at a particular Mass.¹³

13. The sacred vessels should be made of precious metal; Materials that break easily may not be used; e.g., glass, ceramic, porcelain, & crystal.¹⁴ Materials that are deemed precious to a region, e.g. hardwoods, may be used only if they are lined with precious metal.

14. It is a praiseworthy practice to cover the chalice with a veil, which may be either the color of the day or white.¹⁵

15. Appropriate public and private devotion to the Eucharist outside Mass should also be encouraged.¹⁶

16. It is preferable that priests who are present at a Eucharistic Celebration participate as concelebrants. If not, they should participate wearing their proper choir dress or a surplice over a cassock.¹⁷

17. Proper liturgical vesture should be used for the celebration. For priests: the alb, the stole and the chasuble. For the deacon: the alb, the stole, and the dalmatic. If there are not a sufficient number of chasubles for concelebrants, they may concelebrate with the alb and stole.¹⁸

Introductory Rites

18. The procession of the priest(s), deacon(s), and servers through the midst of the people is a striking sign of ministry in the midst of God's people and is highly recommended for Masses celebrated on Sundays and Solemnities, as well as other Masses, when practical. The Book of the Gospels may be carried in procession. This is the role of the deacon if he is present; otherwise, The Book of the Gospels may be carried by a lector. The Lectionary is never processed.¹⁹

19. When the Eucharist is reserved in the sanctuary:²⁰

LITURGICAL NORMS

- * the priests and ministers genuflect as they enter the sanctuary;
- * those carrying incense, the processional cross, or candles simply bow their heads.
- * The deacon or lector carrying the Book of the Gospels approaches the altar and places the book on it, without a bow of the head.²¹

20. When the Eucharist is reserved in a place outside the sanctuary:²²

- * the priests and ministers make a profound bow to the altar as they enter the sanctuary²³;
- * those carrying incense, the processional cross, or candles simply bow their heads.²⁴
- * The deacon or lector carrying the Book of the Gospels approaches the altar and places the book on it, without a bow of the head.²⁵

21. The Lectionary is placed on the ambo before Mass and is never carried in the entrance procession or in the recessional.²⁶

22. The Book of the Gospels may be carried in the entrance procession, slightly elevated, by the deacon, or, in the absence of a deacon, by a lector (reader).²⁷

23. The Book of Gospels is placed at the center of the altar until it is carried to the ambo by the deacon, or in his absence, by the priest who will proclaim the gospel.²⁸

24. After the Sign of the Cross and the Greeting, the presiding priest, the deacon or a lay minister may briefly introduce the Mass of the day. Only the presiding priest, however, may invite the people to take part in the penitential rite.

25. The presiding priest leads Forms A and B, both of which are followed by the (non-sacramental) absolution and the Kyrie. Neither the priest nor the people should make a sign of the cross at this point. The presiding priest, the deacon, or a cantor may lead Form C, which incorporates the Kyrie.²⁹

26. The Rite of Blessing and Sprinkling with Holy Water may replace the Penitential Rite at Sunday Mass. Other introductory rites for special occasions (e.g., the blessing of palms on Passion Sunday, or the blessing of candles on the Presentation) take the place of the Penitential Rite, which is then omitted.

27. Since the Gloria is a hymn, it should ordinarily be sung rather than recited, when required by the rubrics. If it cannot be sung, the Gloria is recited rather than omitted. It may not be replaced by any other hymn of praise.³⁰

Liturgy of the Word

28. The readings proclaimed as the Word of God must always be taken from Sacred Scripture, according to the norms laid out in the Lectionary.³¹

29. There should be only one ambo. It is used for the proclamation of the Word of God, including the Scripture readings and Responsorial Psalm, as well as the homily and Prayers of the Faithful. The dignity of the ambo requires that only a minister of the word should go up to it. Announcements, presentations, and testimonials are not to be given from the ambo.³²

30. The Responsorial Psalm should be sung, especially on Sundays and Solemnities. If it is not sung, it is recited. As the Psalms are the Word of God, they may not be replaced by songs or non-biblical texts.³³

31. The Gospel Acclamation may be omitted if not sung.³⁴

32. If a deacon is present and ministering at Mass, he should proclaim the Gospel. In his absence, a concelebrating priest may proclaim the Gospel; if there is none of the above, the presiding priest proclaims the Gospel.

33. The homily is required on Sundays and holy days of obligation at Masses celebrated with a congregation and is highly desirable at all Masses. The homily is reserved to the ordained;³⁵ only bishops, priests or deacons may preach the homily at Mass. The presiding priest should normally give the homily, which is properly a reflection on the Scriptural readings or feast of the day, applied to the concrete situation of the community. He may, however, delegate the homily to a deacon or to a concelebrating priest, for a good reason. While laypersons may not deliver the homily, they may translate the homily as it is being delivered by the ordained minister.

34. The Creed is obligatory on Sundays and Solemnities.

35. The proper Profession of Faith on Sundays and Solemnities is the Nicene Creed.³⁶ During the proclamation of the Nicene Creed, all bow at the words: "by the power of Holy Spirit... and became man"; on the Solemnities of the Annunciation and Nativity of the Lord, all genuflect during these words.

36. The presiding priest invites the congregation to join in the Prayers of the Faithful (General Intercessions), addressing the people directly, with hands folded. The deacon is the proper minister of the petitions; in his absence a reader or another member of the lay faithful may announce the petitions.³⁷ The series of intentions in the Prayer of the Faithful follows this order:

- * For the needs of the Church;
- * For public authorities and the salvation of the whole world;
- * For those burdened by any kind of difficulty;
- * For the local community.³⁸

37. The presiding priest concludes the Prayers of the Faithful with a prayer, with his hands extended.³⁹

Liturgy of the Eucharist

Preparation of the Gifts

38. The bread and wine to be consecrated, and the offerings for the Church and for the poor are to be brought up in the offertory procession.⁴⁰ The priest may be assisted by the deacon or other ministers in receiving the gifts. Only the bread and wine are to be placed by the priest on the altar; the other offerings are to be placed away from the Eucharistic table. Nothing should be placed on the main corporal until it is handed to the priest.⁴¹

39. The bread used at Mass must be made only from wheat, recently baked and, according to the ancient tradition of the Latin Church, unleavened.⁴²

40. The wine used must be "from the fruit of the grape vine," natural and unadulterated, that is, without admixture of extraneous substances.⁴³

41. The private prayers of the priest at the Preparation of the Gifts are made only in his name and are to be prayed quietly.⁴⁴ Only prayers beginning with "Blessed are you, Lord..." may be said aloud if there is no music at this point. If there is music or singing it should continue and the prayers said inaudibly. The chalice and paten are raised only slightly from the altar during these prayers.

42. The main chalice should be larger and more prominent than any other cups used; they are all prepared at this time. A drop of water is poured into the main chalice alone. At celebrations involving a large number of cups, they should be filled beforehand and brought to the altar at this time.

43. The pouring of the Blood of Christ after the consecration from one vessel to another is to be avoided, "lest anything should happen that would be to the detriment of so great a mystery." Flagons, bowls, and other vessels that are not fully in accord with the established norms should not be used as containers for the Precious Blood.⁴⁵

44. After the presiding priest washes his hands (lavabo),⁴⁶ the people are to stand when the presiding priest says "pray brethren" (Orate Fratres).⁴⁷

Eucharistic Prayer

45. In the dioceses of the United States of America, the people should kneel beginning after the singing or recitation of the Holy, Holy (Sanctus) until after the Amen of the Eucharistic prayer, except when prevented on occasion by reason of health, lack of space, the large number of people present, or another good cause. Those who do not kneel should make a profound bow when the priest genuflects after the consecrations.⁴⁸

46. The words of the Eucharistic Prayer belong to the whole Church and are not to be supplemented or altered by the presiding priest. Only approved Eucharistic prayers may be prayed.⁴⁹

47. Instrumental music is not allowed while the celebrant prays the Eucharistic Prayer.

48. The deacon(s) assisting at Mass kneel from the epiclesis until the priest shows the chalice to the people, just before the Mystery of Faith.⁵⁰ This rubric does not apply to deacons unable to kneel for reasons of health or age.

49. At the epiclesis, when appropriate, a server rings a bell as a signal to the faithful. According to local custom, the server also rings the bell as the priest shows the host and then the chalice.⁵¹

50. The presiding priest does not break the host at the time of the consecration. The fraction rite occurs later in the Mass at the Lamb of God.⁵²

51. The words of institution are to be said clearly and distinctly as their meaning demands.

52. At the final doxology ("Through him, with him..."), a deacon stands next to the priest elevating the chalice while the priest elevates the paten with the host. The deacon elevates the chalice to the same height as the priest does the host. If there is no deacon but there is a concelebrating priest, he may elevate the chalice. This elevation is of one paten and one cup. The faithful do not to join in saying or singing the final doxology with the priest.⁵³

Communion

53. Holding hands during the Our Father is not found in the Order of the Mass.

54. At the Rite of Peace following the Our Father, "it is suitable that each person offer the sign of peace only to those nearby and in a dignified manner."⁵⁴

55. The priest should ordinarily not leave the sanctuary during the sign of peace (except on special occasions, e.g. funerals and then only to greet the family of the deceased).⁵⁵ The gift of peace should not seem to flow from the ordained to the laity.

56. The fraction rite (breaking the bread) is reserved to the priest and deacon. Lay persons do not participate in this rite. The Agnus Dei litany is sung during this rite. It may be repeated until the fraction is completed, but its last petition is always "grant us peace." Other tropes may replace the phrase "Lamb of God" during such repetitions.⁵⁶

57. The fraction takes place before the showing of the host. The host is broken over the paten and should never be broken in such a way that particles of the Eucharist might be scattered or desecrated in any way.

58. The faithful kneel after the Agnus Dei.⁵⁷

59. All concelebrating priests must receive a host consecrated at the same Mass,⁵⁸ and must receive the Precious Blood consecrated at the same Mass.⁵⁹

60. Concelebrating priests genuflect before they receive from the chalice at the altar,⁶⁰ if they are able to do so.

61. The Communion Song should begin when the presiding priest receives Communion.⁶¹

62. The priest may be assisted by extraordinary ministers in the distribution of Communion, if other priests or deacons are not available and there is a large number of communicants. Extraordinary ministers in order of preference for such occasions are: duly instituted acolytes, and then others who have been deputed or commissioned for this purpose. In case of necessity, the priest may depute suitable faithful persons for a single occasion from the congregation.⁶² Pastorally, extraordinary ministers are commissioned for three years at a time. This allows others to participate-especially in large parishes.⁶³

LITURGICAL NORMS

63. Extraordinary ministers of Holy Communion should not approach the altar until after the priest receives both species, they may, however, approach the sanctuary before the priest receives Communion.⁶⁴ The location for the extraordinary ministers prior to receiving Communion is somewhat determined by the physical structure of the building.

64. Communion ministers, as a rule, should receive under both kinds.

65. Extraordinary ministers are always to receive the vessel containing either species of the Most Holy Eucharist from the hands of the presiding priest, a deacon or another priest.⁶⁵

66. Neither deacons nor extraordinary ministers may ever receive Holy Communion in the manner of a concelebrating priest. The practice of priests and extraordinary ministers waiting to receive Holy Communion until after the distribution of Communion to the congregation is not in accord with liturgical law.⁶⁶

67. If Communion is given under both kinds, the administration of the cup belongs to the deacon(s).⁶⁷ If there are several stations for the consecrated hosts and for the Precious Blood, it is acceptable for the deacon(s) to assist the priest(s) in distributing the consecrated hosts.

68. "The Church's custom shows that it is necessary for each person to examine himself at depth, and that anyone who is conscious of grave sin should not celebrate or receive the Body of the Lord without prior sacramental confession, except for grave reason when the possibility of confession is lacking; in this case he will remember that he is bound by the obligation of making an act of perfect contrition, which includes the intention to confess as soon as possible."⁶⁸

69. Catholic ministers licitly administer the Sacraments only to the Catholic faithful, who likewise receive them licitly only from Catholic ministers. Hence, in general non-Catholics are not admitted to Holy Communion in the Catholic Church, and Catholics are not to receive communion in churches that are not Catholic.⁶⁹

70. At Communion, the faithful are not permitted to take the host or the chalice by themselves, and still less to hand them on to one another.

The normative posture for the reception of Holy Communion in the dioceses of the United States is standing. However, communicants should not be denied Holy Communion because they kneel.⁷⁰

71. When receiving Holy Communion, the communicant bows his or her head before the Sacrament as a gesture of reverence and receives the Body of the Lord from the minister. When Holy Communion is received under both kinds, the sign of reverence is also made before receiving the Precious Blood.⁷¹

72. The consecrated host may be received either on the tongue or in the hand at the discretion of each communicant.⁷² When receiving in the hand, the communicant should be guided by the words of St. Cyril of Jerusalem: "When you approach, take care not to do so with your hand stretched out and your fingers open or apart,"⁷³ but rather place one hand as a throne beneath the other, then step to one side and using the lower hand receive the host taking care that nothing is lost.

73. The Communion-plate for the Communion of the faithful should be retained, so as to avoid the danger of the sacred host or some fragment of it falling.⁷⁴

74. If Communion from the chalice is carried out by intinction, each communicant, holding a communion plate under the chin, approaches the priest who holds a vessel with the hosts, a minister standing at his side and holding the chalice. Self-intinction is not permitted and one who receives Communion by intinction may never receive in the hand. The hosts that are used must be consecrated, and it is altogether forbidden to use non-consecrated bread or other matter.⁷⁵

75. As circumstances allow, after communicants have returned to their places, they may kneel or sit while the period of sacred silence after Communion is observed.⁷⁶

76. Care must be taken that whatever may remain of the Blood of Christ after the distribution of Communion is consumed immediately and completely at the altar.⁷⁷ This function is normally reserved to the priest and deacon; however, in the Diocese of Charlotte, they may be assisted if they choose by the instituted acolytes or extraordinary ministers of Holy Communion who distributed the chalices.⁷⁸

77. The empty sacred vessels are purified by the priest at the altar or credence table.⁷⁹ The deacon purifies at the credence table. If purification is delayed until the dismissal of the people, they should be placed on a corporal and covered. They are to be purified immediately after the dismissal of the people.⁸⁰

78. While it is the norm for priests and/or deacons to perform the required purification of the sacred vessels following Communion, in virtue of the indult granted to the Bishops of the United States, in cases of real necessity extraordinary ministers of Holy Communion may assist with this task.⁸¹ When the assistance of extraordinary ministers of Holy Communion is employed, the purifications should take place at the credence table immediately after Communion or immediately following the dismissal of the people.

79. The Prayer after Communion ends the Communion rite; no announcements or other activities (including second collections) that might distract from this solemn moment should be made or take place until this prayer has been offered.⁸² If a layperson offers a reflection (e.g. a missionary appeal), it should be given after this prayer is concluded. Second collections are proper either immediately following the first collection or following the Prayer after Communion.

80. Extraordinary ministers of Holy Communion being sent to care for those unable to participate with the community should be sent forth from the celebration by the presiding priest. This emphasizes the connection of the reception of Holy Communion outside of Mass by the sick with the Holy Sacrifice.⁸³

Concluding Rite

81. Only the presiding priest and the deacon(s) of the Mass kiss the altar at the end of Mass.

82. When the Eucharist is reserved in the sanctuary:

Caution tape seals off the entrance to Charlotte Catholic High School March 8, the result of storms with wind gusts of 60-70 mph that lashed across Charlotte, uprooting trees, downing power lines and causing damage to the school's roof above the entrance about 7:45 a.m. A steel wall protecting cooling equipment was ripped from its foundation and left unstable, causing school officials to send students home at 11 a.m. as a safety precaution. High winds prevented a crane and workers from repairing the damage, canceling classes March 9.

National Guardsman visits students in Winston-Salem

Capt. Almond grateful for prayers, support

BY SUSAN DEGUZMAN
CORRESPONDENT

WINSTON-SALEM — Students at St. Leo the Great School in Winston-Salem recently met a soldier who was grateful for their support.

"Your prayers and support helped me feel confident that I would come back," revealed Capt. Mark Almond to students at St. Leo the Great School.

Almond, of the 113th Field Artillery of the N.C. National Guard, visited the school Feb. 16 with a slideshow presentation of his experiences in Iraq. An uncle of one of the students, Almond was prayed for regularly by the students and faculty, along with several other relatives serving overseas.

Almond reported to Fort Bragg for active duty Oct. 1, 2003. He was deployed to Iraq last February and stationed at Kirkush Military Training Base, about 30 miles from the Iranian border.

His mission was to train, protect and support the Iraqi National Guard to take over the security of the country.

"When I first arrived I was scared to death," he admitted to the students. "I expected something bad to happen since our training prepared us for fighting."

Although trained in combat arms, Almond is grateful that he never was required to discharge his weapon in a hostile manner while in Iraq. His only encounter with combat involved enemy fire at his vehicle.

Almond showed many pictures of Iraqi children, pointing out those of close in age to the students at St. Leo the Great School.

"The Iraqi kids loved to get their pictures taken, as they seldom have the opportunity to see themselves," he said.

"These kids are not in school. We [the soldiers] would encourage them to go to school, even though they are not required to go past the seventh or eighth grade," he said. "They could choose to stay at home and work for their parents."

The U.S. troops have helped to build schools and medical facilities for the people of Iraq. Some of Almond's slides showed a facility that his unit helped to build.

"All you see right now on the news are violence and explosions. There are so many good news stories that aren't being told," said Almond.

He said there are 25 million people in Iraq and fewer than 2,000 of them are terrorists.

Some of the slides were of families working in a nearby brick factory. The workers' roles are well defined, according to Almond.

Mostly young boys and older girls do the loading and unloading of bricks on donkey-drawn carts, he said. Young girls lead the carts and the older boys work inside the factory putting the bricks into the kiln. The fathers typically stand guard nearby. The mothers stay in the home and cook the meals.

The wages, compared to U.S. dollars, are about $3.50 per day for the younger children, $4.50 per day for the older ones, and $7.50 per day for the fathers, said Almond.

"It was very rare to see a young lady in Iraq who was not covered up, even with the temperatures well over 100 degrees," said Almond.

He recalled his hottest day in Iraq reaching 145 degrees. The females typically did not speak to the male troops, he said, although they would speak to female soldiers.

Almond expressed his gratitude for the outreach efforts that St. Leo the Great School put together in the past year for the troops.

"The items you sent helped us make friends with the Iraqi people," he said.

collected for soldiers to give to Iraqi children. A collection of snacks, movies and magazines, as well as ornaments to decorate a Christmas tree at the request of an Army chaplain, were packaged and sent to the troops last fall.

When asked about his ability to attend Mass in Iraq, Almond said he was able to attend weekly Protestant services as the chaplain was not Catholic, but that a priest did visit their camp on Easter, Thanksgiving and on a few other occasions. Almond was an extraordinary minister of holy Communion and was able to distribute the Eucharist to troops.

He also told the students that he prayed every night and always carried with him a couple of rosaries; a prayer book; a prayer card from his mother; a prayer that his niece gave to him from Father Joseph Kelleher, a retired priest in Winston-Salem; and a special coin from his mentor, Col. Mabry Martin, whom the students know from a visit to the school last fall.

"Your prayers and support helped me know that you were concerned about us and cared for us," said Almond. "I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart. Please continue to pray for the troops who are there."

Almond returned a plaque presented to the school last November by Col. Mabry Martin of the N.C. National Guard. At the time the plaque was not engraved, but now reads, "From N.C. National Guard, Saint Leo the Great School, With appreciation for Outreach for Troops in Iraq Project, Fall 2004."

Dorothy Day's long-delayed biography of mentor Peter Maurin

REVIEWED BY RACHELLE LINNER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

"Peter Maurin: Apostle to the World" is Dorothy Day's biography of her mentor, now published decades after Day wrote it.

The Catholic Worker movement came into being through the providential 1932 meeting between Day and Maurin. Maurin was, quite literally, an answer to her prayer for help in finding a way to reconcile her compassion for the poor, her radical political instincts and the staunchly anti-communist Catholic Church she had joined at such a personal cost.

Day wrote that Maurin "made you feel a sense of his mission as soon as you met him and he aroused in you a sense of your own capacities for work (and) for accomplishment."

Day, in 2000 named a "Servant of God," the first step in the canonization process, always insisted that it was Maurin ("holier than anyone we ever knew") who was a "saint of his day."

In 1947, at a time when Maurin's health was deteriorating, Day set out to write a full portrait of a man commonly characterized as eccentric and to flesh out the ideas behind his aphoristic "Easy Essays." (A number of these are reprinted in this book.)

Francis J. Sicius, a professor of history at St. Thomas University, has edited Day's previously unpublished manuscript and provides a well-researched, solid explanation of the personal and philosophical influences of Maurin's early life.

Sicius is particularly helpful in explaining how Day appropriated Maurin's Christian personalism, mystical body theology and Catholic social teaching in the service of her own interest in "urban charity, labor and nonviolence." Maurin's plan included the formation of laity for their own apostolate, urban houses of hospitality and the practice of the works of mercy "at a personal sacrifice," features associated with the Catholic Worker.

Less well-known was his emphasis on the Green Revolution, "farming communes for the cure of unemployment" and the Catholic European thinkers that informed his synthesis of "cult, culture, and cultivation."

Much of this synthesis was the product of his life experience. Maurin, born in 1877, was raised in a large family in the strongly communal peasant society of southern France. He "reached young adulthood at the time in France when Enlightenment sensibilities were clashing with Catholic tradition over the best way to ameliorate the social convolutions of the 19th century."

The man Day met had the happiness of someone who "has found his vocation in life and has set out on the way and is sure of himself."

But Maurin's early and middle years were marked by seeming failure. At 14 he joined the Christian Brothers but left without taking final vows; later, he was active in the radical Catholic social movement Le Sillon, and eventually became disillusioned with its direction.

In 1909 he left France to homestead in Canada and spent two lonely years in the severe wilderness of Saskatchewan. That effort was followed by 14 years living "the life of a penniless vagabond who worked for little more than sustenance" as an itinerant in Canada and the United States.

Day writes, "He began to understand the humiliations of the very poor and by seeking them voluntarily he found peace and rest in them."

Day had a palpable respect for Maurin's integrity, meekness and humility. She is not totally successful in showing him as "human, sympathetic, and warm," and hers is, by far, the more vivid and attractive personality in these pages. But Day has accomplished the more difficult task of writing an eloquent meditation on poverty, the distinctive characteristic of the Catholic Worker "school for charity."

One cannot think about Peter Maurin without encountering this total poverty and it is through this, even more than his ideas and incessant lectures, that he taught what it meant to embrace the eternal in the midst of a worldly apostolate. He had no income, no superfluous possessions, turned the other cheek, accepted mockery over his frequently disheveled appearance, "ate what was put before him," and neither smoked nor drank.

The one treasure Maurin had was his acute mind, but his final years were marked by the great sadness and terrible stripping — through atherosclerosis, a form of arteriosclerosis — of even this gift. "His mind is tired," Day sadly reports. "He cannot think. ... He no longer talks, no longer teaches."

Peter Maurin died May 15, 1949, attended to and remembered by a community that continues to take seriously the demands of personal responsibility he lived with such fidelity.

The measure with which Dorothy Day measured Peter Maurin is the same by which we honor her.

"He has reached the poorest and the most destitute by living always among them, sharing their poverty, and sharing what he has with them. And this expression of love is rarer than one thinks."

Day has served her teacher well. Anyone who is grateful for her luminous Catholic life has reason to be grateful to him as well.

Linner, a librarian and writer, lives in Boston. She has a degree from Weston Jesuit School of Theology.

Self-emptying service key to martyrdom

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

About this time a year ago, Mel Gibson's motion picture "The Passion of the Christ" was receiving a great deal of attention. Thousands of moviegoers viewed the film, sometimes two and three times, as a way of considering the sufferings of Christ as presented through graphic imagery.

While general reaction to the film was mixed, the experience of most Christians was a shocked realization of the horror of Christ's physical torture and a profound appreciation for the depth of his anguish.

A year later, many of us learned through the local and national news media about Sister Dorothy Stang, a 73-year-old Sister of Notre Dame de Namur who was martyred in Brazil. Like Jesus in Matthew's account of the Passion, she did not resist her attackers, nor did she allow death threats to prevent her from doing the work that she believed she was sent to do.

The brutal circumstances of her death produced shock and outrage among the Christian community in Brazil and throughout the world.

Given the calamitous nature of Sister Stang's martyrdom and the dramatic circumstances of Jesus' crucifixion, it is only natural to interpret these violent deaths for the sake of the reign of God as the definition of supreme sacrifice — and so they are. However, St. Paul notes that Jesus' sacrificial giving was a process that commenced long before it culminated in the crucifixion. Likewise, Sister Stang began pouring out her life on behalf of the Amazon peoples long before her murder.

While many believers in our world today are indeed killed for their faith in Jesus, many more are spared physical martyrdom. How, then, are we to be "martyrs" — the Greek word meaning "witnesses" — for the sake of Christ?

St. Paul's epistle provides an important insight by reminding us that Jesus' entire life was characterized by self-emptying service. Each follower of Jesus, therefore, is called to engage in this same sort of activity through whatever opportunities come along, no matter how simple or small or hidden.

From allowing another driver the right of way, to changing a diaper for the hundredth time, to lightening a co-worker's burden, there are multitudes of ways to humble oneself for the sake of others and in so doing, glorify the Lord who offered his life — and his death — for our sake.

NBC-TV's 'Committed' episode defiles Eucharist

Catholic League demands 'more than an apology' from show creators

NEW YORK — The misuse and disrespect shown to the Eucharist during an episode of "Committed" has outraged Catholics nationwide.

During the Feb. 22 episode of the NBC-TV sitcom, two non-Catholics are mistakenly given holy Communion at a Catholic funeral Mass, and they try to dispose of the Eucharist and eventually drop it in a toilet.

"To say that Catholics are angry about this show would be an understatement — the outrage is visceral and intense," said William Donohue, president of Catholic League, an organization that defends the civil rights of Catholics, lay and clergy alike, to participate in American public life without defamation or discrimination.

"The complaints have come from bishops, college chaplains, pastors and the laity, and they have come from all over the country," said Donohue. "NBC has made a direct frontal assault on Roman Catholicism, choosing to mock, trivialize and ridicule the body and blood of Jesus Christ."

In the episode, two characters — one who is Jewish, one who is Protestant — do not know what to do with the Eucharist, so they make several failed attempts to get rid of it, such as slipping it into the pocket of a priest and dropping it into a tray of cheese and crackers.

The priest, who is portrayed as not knowing the difference between the Eucharist and a cracker, grabs the "cracker" but talks when he discovers it is the last one. He then changes his mind, saying, "Oh, what the hell."

According to Catholic League, the most offensive moment of the show comes when the two non-Catholic characters accidentally flush what they think is the Eucharist down the toilet.

"What happened was deliberate," said Donohue. "According to a January 2 story in the Cincinnati Enquirer, the writers for the series ... have been encouraged by NBC executives to 'push the limits of comedy.'"

"For obvious reasons, the writers of 'Roseanne,' 'Murphy Brown' and 'Ellen' chose not to push the buttons of homosexuals or some other protected group, so they decided to play it safe and stay in good standing with their bosses by bashing Catholics," said Donohue.

"More than an apology is needed," he said. "This episode should be retired for good, and that is what we will demand."

Sienna Miller and Daniel Craig star in "Layer Cake," a technically proficient but unpleasantly seamy story of a London cocaine dealer who gets caught up in the machinations of a crime kingpin and a stolen shipment of Ecstasy pills. The thriller is too complex with its difficult-to-follow plot, tricky-to-decipher accents, flashy but empty presentation, and more expletives per minute than any film in recent memory. One brief but graphic sex scene, nudity, brutal violence with attendant gore, pervasive rough and crude language, and drug use. Michelangelo exhibit traces life of St. Peter's Basilica

BY GERARD PERSEGHIN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — A new exhibit at the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center in Washington touches the very roots of the church, and the artists and architects whose work is on display are on the historical and artistic "A" list.

"Creating St. Peter's: Architectural Treasures of the Vatican," on exhibit through May 31, features Michelangelo's original model of the dome of St. Peter's Basilica. The 140-plus artifacts and original architectural drawings in the show include works by Renaissance masters such as Michelangelo, Bramante, Raffaello, Bernini and Fontana.

The 16-foot-tall, 13-foot-wide wooden study model of St. Peter's dome was built for Michelangelo in 1560, and it shows the inner and outer domes and how they function together. Tools used to build the basilica are also showcased, including a wooden winch like ones used to put the obelisk in place outside the basilica.

The 98-foot tall, 331-ton Egyptian obelisk in the square is supposed to mark where St. Peter was crucified; inside St. Peter's the main altar covers the spot where he is said to be buried.

Cardinal Adam J. Maida of Detroit, who conceived and developed the cultural center, said the exhibition offers the American public "one of the great architectural wonders. We're looking at some of (Michelangelo's) original work and how he conceived and created one of the great churches of the world."

Cardinal Maida attended a press opening along with Cardinal Francesco Marchisano, who is president of the Fabbria of St. Peter's. He oversees the physical maintenance of St. Peter's Basilica, which is visited by tens of thousands of people a day.

Cardinal Maida pointed out that the model of the dome has been "out of the Vatican only on three occasions."

When the exhibition closes, it will go back to the permanent collection in the Vatican Museums. He said the exhibition in Washington is a prelude to a Vatican celebration of the 500th anniversary of the basilica next year.

"This is a fascinating exhibition from many points of view — architecture, physics, art, history, religion, mathematics — that appeal to a wide audience, from school-children to scholars, to the casual viewer," said Msgr. William A. Kerr, executive director of the cultural center.

Schools from around the country are planning to send groups of students to Washington to see the exhibition. Seniors groups are also lining up for tours.

Cardinal Marchisano said the basilica "represents the heart of the Christian faith."

A way to put some new life into your stewardship efforts

BY BARBARA GADDY

ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT,

CHARLOTTE — Springtime in Savannah, Ga., is both breathtaking and energizing. Signs of new life abound all over this historic southern city.

The fourth Regional Stewardship Day Conference at the Savannah DeSoto Hilton on April 23 will be no exception. The conference, sponsored by the Charlotte, Charleston, Raleigh and Savannah dioceses and the Archdiocese of Atlanta will help bring the stewardship message alive with keynote speaker Father Dan Mahan, pastor of St. Louis Catholic Church in Batesville, Ind.

Father Mahan began serving as a parish priest in 1989. Since that time he has taken the stewardship message to three different churches at which he has pastored. Currently, as shepherd of a parish of 1,500 families, Father Mahan promotes stewardship as a spiritual way of life that draws his parishioners into a deeper relationship with Jesus.

Stewardship education is a priority for Father Mahan and it is exemplified by his position as faculty member and director of formation for the Summer and Winter Institutes of the International Catholic Stewardship Council.

His talk is sure to inspire and breathe new life into our stewardship efforts.

The breakout sessions will cover a wide array of topics and provide concrete ideas for promoting stewardship in parishes.

Pastors, parishioners and committee members looking for a fresh new approach after several years of promoting parish stewardship should attend a session titled "Keeping it Alive" by Dan Loughman, director of stewardship for the Diocese of Wichita, Kan. Participants are certain to get new ideas and insights.

In addition to serving as the diocesan director of stewardship, Loughman is also a member of a vibrant parish that began promoting stewardship more than 30 years ago.

Jim Kelley, director of development for the Diocese of Charlotte and internationally recognized speaker on stewardship, will cover the formation and responsibilities of the parish stewardship committee in his talk.

In response to many requests from small, rural parishes to address their stewardship needs, Father George Kloster, pastor of St. William Church in Murphy and Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Hayesville, will share his successful approach to stewardship.

Msgr. Patrick Bishop of Transfiguration Church in Marietta, Ga., will team with Deacon Bill Hampton of St. Matthew Church in Sharpsburg, Ga., to speak about hospitality from both large and small parish perspectives in their session.

The testimony of fellow parishioners who have embraced stewardship has the ability to change our lives. One session will have lay witness talks by Don Bray of Fayetteville and Laura Graban of Winston-Salem.

The education of children and youths is an important aspect of the total parish stewardship effort. Mimi Jurgielewicz, director of religious education at the Church of the Nativity in Charleston, S.C., will share her unique program of calling our young people to action in "Catholic Kids Guide to Stewardship."

A post-conference tour of the magnificent Cathedral of St. John the Baptist followed by Mass will bring prayerful closure to what is sure to be a busy, yet energizing, day.

It is the hope of conference planners that participants will return to their own parishes with a renewed emphasis on living and promoting stewardship as a way of life — a life of real Christian discipleship.

Archeologist may have found St. Paul's tomb hidden for centuries, had a hole into which the faithful could stick cloth pieces to make secondary relics, said Giorgio Filippi, the archeologist and inscriptions expert at the Vatican Museums who carried out the studies.

The tomb lies directly beneath a historic inscription that reads: "Paul Apostle Martyr." The marble sarcophagus was apparently first placed there during reconstruction of the basilica in 390 AD.

"I have no doubt this is the tomb of St. Paul, as revered by Christians in the fourth century," Filippi said as he stood next to the main altar of St. Paul Outside the Walls.

Filippi's discovery was the result of more than five years' archeological sleuthing. Surprisingly, the findings have not yet made a huge impression inside the Vatican or in ecclesiastical circles. The Vatican newspaper, for example, has yet to report on the discovery.

The sarcophagus lies several feet below the marble structure of the main altar, embedded in a platform of concrete. Filippi managed to reach the back side of the sarcophagus, but he said opening the tomb would be practically impossible without destroying the altar area.

He added that, in any case, it was not essential to check what's inside the sarcophagus. The important thing is that it was clearly venerated as the tomb of St. Paul, he said.

History uncovered

Tradition holds that St. Paul suffered martyrdom by beheading in the first century, and that his body was buried in a cemetery along the Via Ostiense, where the basilica was built. A first church was erected there in 320 AD, and a larger basilica was constructed in 390; it was remodeled several times over the centuries and almost totally destroyed by fire in 1823.

Pilgrims still come to St. Paul's, but not nearly as many as those who pour daily into St. Peter's Basilica, located some five miles away. On a recent weekday afternoon, no more than 75 people were inside the church.

Giorgio Filippi, an archeologist and inscriptions expert at the Vatican Museums, believes he has rediscovered the tomb of St. Paul.

Filippi began his detective work in 1993, when he studied the early Christian inscriptions in the cloister of the basilica and in the monastery nearby. He began asking questions of older monks and caretakers, trying to discover where some of the inscriptions and other artifacts came from.

He soon discovered that by lifting up certain pavement stones in the basilica's floor, a series of underground chambers and tunnels were accessible — most of them unmapped and forgotten. The excavations yielded a Roman sarcophagus and a wealth of other material.

In the year 2000, Filippi said, pilgrims coming to St. Paul's for the jubilee year asked for the burial place of the Apostle and were disappointed not to see and touch it.

Depths of research

After the jubilee ended, at the request of the basilica's papal administrator and on behalf of the Vatican Museums, Filippi made plans for a systematic study of the area under the altar. In 2002 and 2003, he examined, among other things, three vertical holes leading down to the lid of the sarcophagus.

The holes had been established many centuries earlier so that devotional items could be lowered to the tomb's surface. One reason the tomb ended up so far below the altar was that the altar area had been progressively raised due to changes that occurred through the centuries, Filippi said.

One of these holes — now closed with mortar — led inside the sarcophagus, apparently so that pieces of cloth could come into contact with relics of the saint. Filippi said the practice of creating these kinds of secondary relics was popular in the late fourth century, especially after the Emperor Theodosius banned the sale and distribution of corporal relics.

Theoretically, experts today could open the hole to the sarcophagus and stick a small video probe inside. But for now, no such examination is foreseen. Filippi said there's no hurry; as the last 11 years of work has demonstrated, he's happy to take one archeological step at a time.

A special anniversary

'Gospel of Life' is Gospel of Christ

March 25 marks the 10th anniversary of Pope John Paul II's encyclical, "The Gospel of Life" ("Evangelium Vitae"). This is not just another document. It is literally a celebration. It celebrates Christ, who is personally the Gospel and the Life. It celebrates humanity, love and true freedom.

The church knows how to celebrate; the world has forgotten. The church knows how to receive and give life and love. In fact, the very meaning of life is to give and receive love (see No. 81). But the world has become too preoccupied with usefulness, efficiency and productivity (No. 22). The world is too busy with its frantic flight from all suffering and death (Nos. 64, 66-67). It flees these because it has forgotten what they mean. It sees them only as things to be avoided and controlled.

Ironically, such forgetfulness envelops the world even more in the very things it tries to escape. And in the midst of its slavery to death, the world shouts about freedom, all the while fearing it will be shackled by the one who brings true freedom — namely, Christ.

The world needs "good news," that is, "Evangelium." The document begins, "The Gospel (Evangelium) of life is at the heart of Jesus' message. Lovingly received day after day by the church, it is to be preached with dauntless fidelity as good news to the people of every age and culture" (No. 1).

Life is joyful, so it is to be proclaimed (Nos. 80-82), celebrated (Nos. 83-86) and served (Nos. 87-89). The message of life is not optional, or added on to the Gospel, but is at the heart of the Gospel. "The Gospel of Life" is simply the Gospel of Christ, for he is life (see No. 29). The church is inescapably pro-life (No. 28) precisely because she is feminine. The church is the bride of Christ and mother of believers — and, in fact, of all humanity (No. 3).

The earth today is covered with innocent blood, which cries out from the ground to the God who made it (see Nos. 7-9, Gen. 4:2-16). But thanks be to God, there is another blood that cries out to heaven more eloquently (see No. 25, Heb. 12: 22, 24).

The cry of the blood of Christ brings mercy to those who shed the blood of their brothers and sisters. The shed blood of Christ teaches the meaning of love, which is to sacrifice oneself for the good of the other person. It reverses the dynamic of the culture of death, which sacrifices the other person for the good of oneself.

The blood of Christ, one drop of which can purify a billion worlds, gives us strength to carry out the "great campaign on behalf of life" which is called for by this encyclical (No. 95). The pro-life movement itself, in fact, is a sign of hope and victory (No. 26). The encyclical looks to the day when "death will be no more" (Rev. 21:4 see No. 105). That time is coming, and that promise is, in a nutshell, the Gospel of Life.

Father Pavone is national director of Priests for Life.

Celebrating the Year of the Eucharist

There's no eucharistic church without eucharistic celebration

Our poor ailing pope proclaimed this the "Year of the Eucharist." As we get older, we realize that life has to get back to basics. In his last days as pope he is calling the church to get back to basics.

The Eucharist is at the heart of Catholic spirituality.

Whenever I have been angry or disappointed in the church, it is the Eucharist that keeps me inside her embrace. It is the mystical presence of Christ. It draws us together in worship. It defines us as a people; it makes us "church." It also gives us strength. Food for the journey, both personally and as a community of faith.

Our church is based on what the Lord has given to us, namely himself. We do what he has handed on to us, as St. Paul says in the first letter to the Corinthians.

In the sixth chapter of John, Jesus told his followers that unless we join ourselves to him completely, that is "eat my flesh and drink my blood," we would not have life within us.

What is true for us as individuals is true for the church. If we do not have the Eucharist, the church has no life. At least not as a Catholic Church.

Our parish, like many others, is trying to refocus on the Eucharist this year. As usual, it is the parishioners who have taught me and been the most creative in our devotion.

At the entrance to the church we have a banner proclaiming the "Year of the Eucharist" made by two women in our parish who are great seamstresses.

At Christmas, we gave out 500 copies of the pope's letter proclaiming this year and meditating on the role of the Eucharist in our church.

Each Sunday, we entrust a different family with a "traveling chalice" to carry to their home. They are supposed to put it in a prominent place where they eat their evening meal (but not atop the television set). Each night for a week they pray for more vocations to the priesthood and the religious life and lay ministry. This is to make a connection between our eucharistic worship and the priesthood.

FATHER PETER J. DALY

If there is no one to celebrate the Eucharist, there will be no eucharistic church. The families seem to like coming forward, and it makes the work of vocations a family matter.

For several years now we have had eucharistic adoration three days per week. This year we began Lent with a week of perpetual adoration. More than 370 parishioners came to the church to pray in the first week of Lent. I think that will be an enormous source of grace and blessing to us.

In June we are making plans for a Corpus Christi procession. We have the parade permit to go around the center of our little town, past the courthouse and post office and bank and shopping center. This procession does, metaphorically, what each one of us should do each Sunday. It takes the presence of Christ that we have received in the Eucharist out into our secular world. It makes the whole world a sanctuary, a holy place.

In the bulletin each week we print quotes from the pope or church fathers on the importance of the Eucharist.

Each of these things is only a step, a way of renewing our devotion to the presence of the Lord, a way of calling our spiritual life back to the basics. The pope, even in his infirmity, has reminded us who stands at the heart of things: Christ.

Eliminating charitable deductions

Regarding Father Frank Pavone's column "Free speech in church" (March 4), I heartily agree that freedom of speech in homilies is essential and changes in the law that would allow greater freedom would be desirable.

A change in the law that Father Pavone doesn't consider is eliminating the charitable deduction in its entirety. This would allow complete freedom without any consideration of government restrictions.

As an alternative, the church could simply refuse to take the charitable deduction. The freedom attained from not accepting "Caesar's coin" (including tax deductions for donations) is tremendous. Charity may then be given where the need is perceived to be without any concern about government control or regulations.

I believe that the law allowing deduction of charitable donations from taxes is one of the most severe restrictions to charitable giving in this country. To receive a deduction a person must find an organization that approximates his or her charitable values and donate there.

This precludes making donations personally even though the need may be great.

Several years ago my wife and I decided to make donations without regard to deductibility and have found it very freeing. We now assist individuals or families and many of our donations go directly to their needs. The additional funds that could be available by claiming this deduction are offset by the lack of administrative costs of organized charities. Needs can also be addressed immediately without the delays inherent in any organization.

Voices that matter

In response to Karen Dietlein's column "Your impossible dreams" (Feb. 11), this is a very good article about the many voices that bombard us every day.

Let every one of us remember that our own minds speak both negative and positive words and thoughts to us along with the outside voices.

God also has something to say to us. Let us hear his voice.

Toxic thinking

Jesus is exterminator of evil thoughts

A recent column of mine received a lot of positive mail. (I get about 6,000 hits a month on my Web site: www.messengerofjoy.com). The column was titled "How to Be Your Own Best Friend," and the essential point was this: To be your own best friend, you must first disidentify with your own thoughts.

You have to be clear on this: You are not your thoughts; rather, you are the observer of your thoughts. This means that you have control over what you allow to come and go in your thinking process.

More than that, it means you are responsible for your own happiness. Every human being has the power to choose a happy mind-set. To wallow in the swamp of toxic thinking is to suffer needless anxiety. Jesus said, "Be not anxious."

Everything that enters your stream of consciousness is not from God. Too many good people live in a prison of self-imposed mental anguish, allowing themselves to feel they are doomed by the past.

Nonsense! God is pure mercy and forgiveness. No matter what happened in your life, his love never changes. You are under his blessed shelter, and he is always there to minister to you.

The human mind is like a living room. Some of your thoughts are like rats and mice that sneak in and take over, soiling your new rug. Get rid of those unwelcome rodents; exterminate them. Do not identify with your troubling thoughts. If you can't do this by yourself, call on Jesus, the great exterminator of evil thoughts.

Spirituality for Today

FATHER JOHN CATOIR
CNS COLUMNIST

Wallowing in hurtful memories only intensifies and perpetuates a bad habit. Don't let the past drag you down. Break free from all this emotional pain through prayer and will power. Live in the present moment, not in your own head.

The brain only has room for one set of thoughts at a time. You can replace poisonous thinking with good thoughts in the here-and-now.

Smell the roses, feel the consolation of warm water on your hands, go for a walk, breath in the fresh air. Remember, whenever you look at a beautiful sunset, it is God's way of telling you how much he loves you.

Thoughts of suicide, remorse over some terrible failure or feelings of fear and suspicion can bring with them an overwhelming sense of insecurity. These can all be washed away in the pure waters of God's love. Put yourself in his loving presence more, and trust in his mercy when you feel under attack.

Bad habits are hard to break, but don't be discouraged. There is always grace. All will be well once you begin to believe that you are solely responsible for your thoughts and actions.

Blame no one else for your present state. If you have suffered a great reversal or humiliation, do not blame your parents, your superiors, your upbringing or your environment. Realize that you made your own choices. Face up to the truth, and make those tough decisions with courage.

Pray with confidence: "Dear Holy Spirit, soul of my soul, protect me and comfort me in this present moment. Cleanse me of my toxic thoughts, and give me peace."

Everyone can adopt a happier frame of mind.

Jesus said, "I have told you all these things that your joy may be full" (Jn 15:11).

The paths to life and damnation

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

Q. In the Gospel of Matthew (7:13-14), Jesus claims the road to damnation is wide and clear, and many choose to travel it. The gate leading to life is narrow, and few there are who find it. Does this not indicate that most of the human race will be condemned to hell? (Arizona)

A. First, other places in Matthew (e.g. 8:11) speak of "many" being saved, which hints that in this passage Jesus may not be giving statistics about the population of hell.

The reference to "doors" in the passage you quote at the end of the Sermon on the Mount in Matthew is hortatory, to remind disciples who may be lagging in their Christian journey that this journey requires discipline and perseverance. It is not informational, telling us how many are to be saved.

A helpful hint is contained in Luke's passage parallel to this one of Matthew, in which someone asks, "Lord, will only a few people be saved?" (Lk 13:23)

Jesus simply ignores the question and stresses the need to try to enter the narrow gate.

As in other similar circumstances, Jesus is never interested in satisfying our nosiness by answering curiosity questions that have nothing to do with our holiness and relationship with him and the Father. So it is with the passage you quote. Jesus is not making a declaration about hell, but exhorting his followers to stay awake and disciplined on the path to life, which requires fresh determination and decision every day.

Young Catholic adults often haven't heard of Second Vatican Council

"Fifty-seven percent of young Catholic adults have never heard of Vatican II."

That was one of many startling findings reported at a Feb. 18 meeting of church researchers from the Life Cycle Institute at The Catholic University of America in Washington and Le Moyne College in Syracuse, N.Y.

When I heard this, my thoughts went back to a biblical text I had just read. It was about the Egyptians, who no longer had any memory of Joseph. Not knowing Joseph, they no longer respected his descendants, the Hebrews.

That simple narrative contains several lessons. One lesson is that time moves on; nothing lasts forever. New generations tend to focus primarily on the present and to have their own agendas.

Another lesson is that if someone or some institution isn't preserving the memory of past generations, new generations are deprived of vital roots. The new generations are, in a sense, orphaned.

The Second Vatican Council cared very much about upcoming generations. Its love for the liturgy and the spiritual strength the liturgy generates, especially in young people, encouraged it to take significant steps in the direction of renewal.

No doubt some of us remember "Black Masses" — daily Masses in which the priest, facing the altar, recited prayers in Latin for the dead. Never once did we hear a homily on the Gospel.

Although these Masses allowed us quietly to melt into our own prayer corner, they did little to inspire us to cherish the awesome mysteries we were celebrating. Active participation was minimal, depriving us of true community spirit.

Oh, we were a community and actually felt like one, but it was a community that was hierarchically top heavy and vertical in its approach, lacking that sense that there is a horizontal dimension of the church through which we are linked with others around us in the congregation and deriving a wholesome richness from being one with others like us.

Vatican II generated a spirit that said to the laity: "You are church, you are the people of God. You are just as responsible for the church as are the hierarchy. Become an active participant in the church and the liturgy, and help to bring the church's spiritual beauty to the surface."

Vatican II spoke to the modern world and its people, saying in effect: "We don't despise you. Rather, we are here to collaborate with you in making our world as God intended it to be. Science and technology are essentially good and can serve as ways to make our life reflect God's life."

In embracing the modern world, Vatican II moved away from isolation and embraced the spirit of partnership, showing us the way to generate greater unity among Christians.

These are but a few examples of the spirit of Vatican II that young Catholic adults need to "catch" in order to better appreciate the richness of their religious heritage. Thanks to Vatican II, today's Catholics have a new, improved Christian world vision like none before.

One hopes the finding that 57 percent of young Catholic adults never heard of Vatican II will be a wakeup call that motivates us to find more effective ways to root them in their Catholic tradition.

Catholic life thrives in central Mecklenburg County at St. Gabriel Church

St. Gabriel Church, located in central Mecklenburg County, has served many of Charlotte's Catholics since 1957.

CHARLOTTE — Over the course of four decades, the St. Gabriel Church community grew from 175 families to become the largest parish in the Carolinas, with 4,100 families attending Mass on a weekly basis in 1998.

Since the establishment of St. Matthew Church in 1986, St. Gabriel has lost a few hundred households to the southeast Charlotte church. However, St. Gabriel remains a thriving, active parish in what is now a central part of Mecklenburg County.

In 1955, 12 acres of land — then located one mile from Charlotte's southeastern city limits — were purchased by Bishop Vincent S. Waters, then-bishop of Raleigh, to establish a new parish. A 250-seat chapel was built, and Father Paul Byron, St. Gabriel Church's founding pastor, celebrated the first Mass in the church in September 1957, thereby beginning a pastorate highlighted by significant growth and change.

Bishop Waters dedicated and blessed the Diocese of Raleigh's newest church in November 1957, placing the church under the patronage of the Archangel Gabriel.

Under Father Byron's direction, a kindergarten was begun in 1958, followed in 1960 by a grade school staffed by Sisters of Mercy from Belmont. The school opened with 150 students; within a few years, the enrollment had climbed to 350, and a two-story gymnasium and cafeteria were built.

By the mid-1960s, parish membership included more than 500 families. Msgr. Michael J. O'Keefe, pastor, directed a major parish renovation when in 1970-71 he began an expansion project that would accommodate more parishioners at the increasingly crowded weekend Masses. When groundbreaking ceremonies took place in 1973 — a year after the founding of the Diocese of Charlotte — St. Gabriel Church was already North Carolina's largest parish, with a registered count of 690 families.

During the mid- to late-1970s, parish membership continued to grow quickly and steadily, matching the city's population growth. Membership included more than 1,000 families in 1977 when Msgr. Hugh Dolan, pastor, introduced expansion ideas that led to implementation of a master plan. That plan — developed over a number of years — consisted of parish surveys, parishioner input, committee meetings and finally, expansion and building designs that included improvements to the church, school and administrative and recreational facilities.

A fund-raising campaign was begun in 1983 during the pastorate of Msgr. Thomas Walsh, which led to the purchase of additional property at Providence Road and Sharon Lane. Construction of a new 1,100-seat church ensued in 1985.

In September 1986, Bishop John F. Donoghue, along with Bishop emeritus Michael J. Begley, and present and former pastors of St. Gabriel Church dedicated the facility, which included a daily chapel, fellowship hall, meditation chapel, family room and music room.

Expansion continued through the 1990s, both in the number of registered families and physical growth. In May 1990, Father Edward Sheridan, pastor, began an extensive capital campaign. The result was a 79,000 square-foot parish center, which Bishop Donoghue dedicated in December 1992. The building became the new home for the school, the faith development center offices, a gymnasium and cafeteria.

In 1997, plans were put in place to construct a three-story ministry center to house the parish faith formation offices, meeting space, nursery and ministry offices. Ministry outreach highlights parish life at St. Gabriel Church, with more than 100 ministerial opportunities, including groups such as the disability ministry and health care ministry joining a host of other teams addressing specific and common needs of St. Gabriel's parishioners.

In May 2002, Msgr. Richard Bellow, then-pastor of St. Gabriel Church, dedicated a 280-niche columbarium on the grounds of the church.

In January 2004, Bishop Peter J. Jugis dedicated an expanded eucharistic adoration chapel at the church. St. Gabriel Church and Maryfield Chapel in High Point offer the only perpetual adoration of the Eucharist in the Diocese of Charlotte.

In July 2004, Father Sheridan returned to St. Gabriel Church once again to shepherd the parish he had served as pastor from 1989-98.

For nearly half a century, St. Gabriel Church has ministered to the spiritual needs of many of Charlotte's Catholic families, who then reach out to help their neighbors in need.

CHARLOTTE — Diocese of Charlotte schools and other local Catholic organizations were among the 95 groups that marched in the ninth annual St. Patrick's Day Parade in uptown Charlotte March 12.

This year's morning parade, the largest ever, which ran along Tryon Street and was viewed by an estimated 30,000 people, was followed by a free community festival that ran until 10 p.m. The festival, which also grows bigger each year, featured live entertainment.

St. Patrick's Day actually falls on March 17, but Charlotte events traditionally take place on the Saturday before the 17th.

SPECIAL TO

THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

CHARLOTTE — A television station video crew showed up at several Masses celebrated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis over the past few weeks.

WBTV News of Charlotte will use the footage in a half-hour documentary on the bishop that will air on Easter Sunday and the following day.

The program, "Maureen O'Boyle and Bishop Peter Jugis," will include an extensive interview with the bishop by O'Boyle, a news anchor at the station.

O'Boyle is familiar to viewers from her role as anchor of the syndicated programs "A Current Affair" and "Extra" during the 1990s. She is a Charlotte native whose daughter attends a Catholic school.

Although Bishop Jugis is regularly quoted in the pages of The Catholic News & Herald and has been interviewed by secular newspapers in the diocese, this is his first extensive television interview.

The interview took place at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte. Among other topics, O'Boyle asked the bishop about the growth of the Catholic Church and the influence of Hispanics who have moved into the diocese during the last decade.

No subject was off limits and O'Boyle asked the bishop about the national sexual abuse scandal involving clergy as well as his pastoral statement, "Worthy to Receive the Lamb: Catholics in Political Life and the Reception of Holy Communion." The document says that Catholic politicians who persistently support abortion may not be admitted to holy Communion in the diocese.

Bishop Jugis also addressed the current controversy over the placement of Ten Commandment monuments on state-owned property and the differences between Catholic and public schools. In addition, he answered questions about his background as a Charlotte native and how growing up Catholic in North Carolina at a time when Catholics made up less than one-half of one percent of the population influences his ministry as bishop.

"We felt it was important for a religious leader and a community leader to be heard and we are interested in doing those sorts of programs," said Ron Bilek, executive editor of WBTV News.

Bilek said that television is a great medium that lets a large audience get to know someone.

David Hains is director of communications for the Diocese of Charlotte.

WANT TO WATCH?

"Maureen O'Boyle and Bishop Peter Jugis" airs on WBTV News at 12 p.m. on Easter Sunday, March 27, and 7:30 p.m. on Monday, March 28.

Since WBTV's programs cannot be seen in all parts of the Diocese of Charlotte, the diocesan Office of Communications is investigating the possibility of making DVD copies of the program with Bishop Jugis available. Look for more information in an upcoming edition of The Catholic News & Herald.

Dominican activist released from jail; she refuses to pay restitution

POULSBORO, Wash. (CNS) — Undeterred by more than two years in prison, Dominican Sister Jackie Hudson returned home March 6 determined to continue her peace activism while refusing to pay restitution money to the federal government because she said it would be spent on violent means.

Sister Hudson and two other Dominican sisters were ordered to pay $3,080 for cutting through a 32-foot section of fence on Oct. 6, 2002, to gain access to a Minuteman III missile silo site in northern Colorado as part of an anti-nuclear weapons protest.

They hammered on the silo cover and the adjoining tracks, and poured their own blood in the form of a cross, before they were arrested. They were later convicted on sabotage charges and sentenced to 30 to 40 months in prison.

Sister Hudson, 70, served 26 months of her 30-month sentence, receiving time off for good behavior.

After being welcomed at the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport by a small group of supporters, she told reporters she would not pay her part of the $3,080.

"When that money would go to increase the number of nuclear weapons at Bangor" in Washington state, she said, or "to increase the violence in Afghanistan or Iraq, I cannot possibly do that. My own conscience will not allow that."

She added that the other two women religious share her resolve.

In lieu of paying monetary restitution, Sister Hudson asked supporters to offer "alternative restitution" to the government in the form of volunteering with social services. So far, $150,000 worth of services has been donated by supporters around the world, she said.

FROM THE VATICAN

With formality or familiarity, tens of thousands e-mail pope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — With the greatest formality or the most relaxed familiarity, tens of thousands of people sent e-mail messages to Pope John Paul II.

They offered prayers for the pope's health, expressed hope that he would be released soon from Rome's Gemelli hospital — which he was — but also asked to be remembered in his prayers.

The pope was hospitalized Feb. 24 and underwent a tracheotomy to help ease breathing difficulties; he returned to the Vatican March 13.

The Vatican Secretariat of State reported that between March 1-10, more than 43,500 e-mail messages had been sent to the pope's six electronic addresses.

They begin "Your Holiness," or "My very, very dear John Paul II," "Esteemed Holy Father," or simply "Hola" (Hello).

With no dedicated address for Polish writers, the Vatican said it is impossible to give an accurate count of messages from the 84-year-old pope's compatriots; their messages are scattered throughout the six inboxes.

The messages are distributed to the appropriate language desk in the Vatican Secretariat of State. Each one is read, a summary is prepared for the pope and sample messages are printed for him.

The e-mail messages come from individuals, families and groups, including ones from a seminary in South Africa, a retreat center in Ireland and the staff of a parish in Mexico.

A woman from the Archdiocese of Atlanta wrote, "I know that you are going through many struggles, but you are an amazing man and God has surely given you the grace to carry on the good fight."

Vatican official says displaced Africans, refugees need more help

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Facing hunger, rape and death, refugees and displaced people in Sudan's Darfur region and throughout Africa must be given greater assistance by the international community, a Vatican official said.

"The precarious and tragic condition of these millions of persons forcibly uprooted from their villages and their lands calls for concrete and prompt decisions," Msgr. Fortunatus Nwachukwu told the executive committee of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

Msgr. Nwachukwu, a staff member at the Vatican's observer mission to U.N. agencies in Geneva, spoke to the committee March 10.

On March 11, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan told the U.N. Security Council that the Sudanese government and rebels had not made any serious attempt in the past month to resolve the Darfur conflict.

The government, Annan said, has not stopped Arab-led militias from attacking civilians, nor has it made progress to stop human rights abuses in the region.

The secretary-general also criticized rebels for harassing relief workers and for firing on relief-agency helicopters delivering food and other emergency supplies.

The United Nations estimates that more than 1.8 million people are internally displaced in Darfur or are living across the border in refugee camps in Chad.

In his speech to the U.N. refugee agency, Msgr. Nwachukwu said progress made last year in assisting refugees around the world "is clouded now by insufficient funding and by the worsening of violence and ill-treatment of the displaced population of Darfur, where the humanitarian situation is critical."

The attacks on civilians are "brutal and violent, and human rights violations are a daily occurrence. Particularly vulnerable are women subjected to rape and other forms of degradation," he said.

Msgr. Nwachukwu said the situation calls for stronger leadership on the part of the United Nations and the designation of one agency to coordinate the work of all the nongovernmental agencies trying to assist the refugees and displaced people.

"This involvement in protection and human rights issues will require larger human and financial resources and, above all, the political will to act" to intervene and to disarm the aggressors, he said.

California Catholic Conference wants same-sex ruling overturned

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (CNS) — The executive director of the California Catholic Conference has expressed hope that the California Supreme Court will overturn a lower court ruling permitting same-sex marriages in the state.

The ruling, which declares that state law banning same-sex marriage is unconstitutional, violates sacred church traditions and a fundamental aspect of civil society, said Ned Dolejsi, executive director of the conference, the public policy arm of the state's Catholic bishops.

The ruling was made March 14 by San Francisco Superior Court Judge Richard Kramer, who said that the current situation of denying marriage licenses to gay and lesbian couples is discriminatory.

"Simply put, same-sex marriage cannot be prohibited solely because California has always done so before," said the ruling.

The choir received many compliments on their vocal talents after the Saturday, Feb. 12, Mass and were asked by Father Joseph Ayathupadam, pastor, to sing again at the Sunday, Feb. 13, Mass. The choir is now scheduled to sing during both the Saturday vigil and Palm Sunday Masses, March 19-20. The choir consists of Mark Brannan, Bob Zollo, Kurth Dohmann, Gordy Hirshman, Bob Ladousier, Sal Romolo, Steve Beatty, Tony Brunner, Pete Ferrara and Don Richmond. Deacon Richard Kauth, permanent deacon at Holy Spirit Church, conceived the idea of the Knights choir at the church.

Cardinal joins fight for Schiavo's life

the woman to be taken off the tube.

Michael Schiavo — who remains legally married to Terri Schiavo but now has two children with another woman — says his wife would want the feeding tube removed. Her parents, Bob and Mary Schindler, say their daughter would want to live, in part because of her Catholic beliefs.

The cardinal said he, like the Florida bishops, prayed "that those who hold power over Terri Schindler Schiavo's fate will see that she 'continues to receive nourishment, comfort and loving care.'"

Cardinal Keeler quoted from Pope John Paul II's 2004 talk to a conference in Rome, in which the pope said even patients in a persistent vegetative state have "the right to basic health care (nutrition, hydration, cleanliness, warmth, etc.)."

The pope said it is "morally obligatory" to provide water and food, even by artificial means, "insofar as and until it is seen to have attained its proper finality, which in the present case consists in providing nourishment to the patient and alleviation of his suffering."

The cardinal said "there are times when even such basic means may cease to be morally obligatory because they have become useless or unduly burdensome for the patient."

"Deliberately to remove them in order to hasten a patient's death, however, would be a form of euthanasia, which is gravely wrong," he added.

Pinellas County Circuit Court Judge George Greer ruled Feb. 25 that Michael Schiavo could order doctors to remove the feeding tube at 1 p.m. March 18.

In January, the U.S. Supreme Court refused without comment to review a lower court decision overturning the Florida law that allowed Gov. Jeb Bush to order reinsertion of the woman's feeding tube when it was removed for six days in 2003.

Terri Schiavo, 41, has been impaired for the past 15 years. She can breathe on her own but requires nutrition and hydration through a feeding tube.

A resident of a nursing home in Pinellas Park, she has been receiving food and water through a feeding tube since 1990, when she collapsed at her home in St. Petersburg because of what doctors believe was a potassium imbalance. Her brain was deprived of oxygen for several minutes.

Franciscan Brother Conrad Richardson leads intercessory prayers during a rally for Terri Schindler Schiavo March 12 across from the hospice where the 41-year-old woman resides in Pinellas Park, Fla. More than 200 people gathered to pray and speak out against the removal of Schiavo's feeding tube, which was scheduled under court order for March 18.

Vatican bioethicist says removing tube is 'direct euthanasia'

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Removing the feeding tube from Terri Schindler Schiavo or other patients in a similar condition amounts to "direct euthanasia," a "cruel way of killing someone," said the Vatican's top bioethicist.

Bishop Elio Sgreccia, president of the Pontifical Academy for Life, said the academy usually does not comment on specific cases before courts, but "silence in this case could be interpreted as approval."

The bishop said March 11 that withdrawing Schiavo's gastric tube would not be a matter of allowing her to die, but would "inflict death."

Judge George Greer of Florida's Pinellas County Circuit Court ruled Feb. 25 that Michael Schiavo, Terri Schiavo's husband, could order doctors to remove the feeding tube March 18.

Her parents have opposed their son-in-law's efforts.

Bishop Sgreccia spoke to Vatican Radio the day after Greer ruled the state's Department of Children and Families could not intervene in the process.

Bishop Sgreccia told Vatican Radio, "Terri Schiavo must be considered a living human person, deprived of full consciousness, whose juridical rights must be recognized, respected and defended.

"The removal of the gastric tube used for nourishing her cannot be considered an 'extraordinary' measure or a therapeutic measure," he said. "It is an essential part of the way in which Mrs. Terri Schiavo is nourished and hydrated."

"As far as we are concerned, denying someone access to food and water is a cruel way of killing someone," he said.

"Taking into account only medical and anthropological considerations," he said, "we feel an obligation to affirm that such a decision violates the rights of Terri Schiavo and, therefore, constitutes an abuse of judicial authority."

Bishop Sgreccia said he also was concerned about the precedent the court's decision could set in the United States, creating a situation in which euthanasia is seen "as a right."

Bishop Sgreccia said the Catholic Church does not support keeping people alive at all costs, going to extraordinary and even painful means to postpone death.

However, he said, keeping a patient clean, warm, fed and hydrated is not the same thing as "therapeutic obstinacy" or the refusal to accept death.

Feeding and hydration are "signs of respect for the human person," whether young or old, healthy or sick, he said.

CREATING STEM-CELL LINES

Scientists believe stem cells could repair diseased or injured tissues. The Catholic Church opposes stem-cell research that involves the destruction of human embryos.

Catholics fight embryonic stem-cell research

"Our research community stands on the threshold of great advances in the fight against disabling childhood and degenerative diseases, but has been held back by cloudy legal policy on stem-cell research," said Senate President Robert Travaglini in introducing the legislation.

"Massachusetts must act now to maintain its prominence in the industry," he said.

"The issue of stem-cell research is one that has drawn interest because of the hope it offers to those suffering physical illness or injury," said Maggi Nadol, director of the Respect Life Office for the Diocese of Charlotte, in response to the legislation.

"However, we must draw the distinction between embryonic stem cells, which require the sacrifice of a human being, and adult stem cells, which may be obtained in an ethical manner," she said.

Father Tadeusz Pacholczyk, a neuroscientist who is director of education at the National Catholic Bioethics Center in Philadelphia, sees the rush to get in on embryonic stem-cell research as part of a "modern secular fairy tale."

People want to believe that science can "push back the frontiers of death itself," the priest said in an interview. But the hopes of those promoting embryonic stem-cell research are "much bigger than what's supported by science," he added.

States' responses to the debate over embryonic stem-cell research range from that of California, where voters in November approved an initiative mandating $3 billion in state spending on embryonic stem-cell research, to South Dakota, which bans all research that destroys a human embryo, unless the research was intended to preserve the life and health of that embryo.

A group in Florida is collecting signatures to amend the state constitution to permit such research, while New Jersey political leaders have already given $11.5 million to the state's new stem-cell institute and proposed spending another $500 million over the next 10 years.

"We believe it is more important than ever to stand for the principle that government must not treat any living human being as research material, as a mere means to benefit others," said the Catholic bishops of New Jersey after acting Gov. Richard J. Codey proposed funding the stem-cell institute with $200 million in unspent bond money and asking voters to approve the additional $30 million annually for 10 years.

The bishops also urged reflection on "whether the high cost of embryonic stem-cell research and the lack of cures from such research have made venture capitalists reluctant to invest in human cloning technology."

"We believe this raises profound moral questions, not the least of which is whether state government should subsidize and force morally opposed taxpayers to subsidize research that requires the destruction of human life," they added.

Similarly, the Massachusetts bishops called on legislators to join the United Nations, which approved a declaration March 8 calling on member states to "prohibit all forms of human cloning inasmuch as they are incompatible with human dignity and the protection of human life."

"This international move demonstrates that the debate cannot be reduced to a disagreement between religion and science," the bishops added.

In Washington the same day, President Bush applauded the U.N. action, which was supported by the United States.

"Human life must not be created for the purpose of destroying it," Bush said.

A study published in the Journal of Clinical Investigation said researchers at Tufts University isolated a stem cell from bone marrow that they think might have as much potential to become different kinds of cells as embryonic stem cells do.

"I think embryonic stem cells are going to fade in the rear-view mirror of adult stem cells," said Dr. Douglas Losordo, lead researcher for the Tufts study.

Contributing to this story was Donis Tracy in Boston and Editor Kevin E. Murray.

Stem-cell basics explained

WASHINGTON (CNS) — So what are stem cells and why should you care?

The foundational cells for all life, stem cells can be coaxed into becoming a wide variety of tissues and even organs, scientists believe.

Two characteristics distinguish stem cells from other types of cells:

— They are "unspecialized cells that renew themselves for long periods through cell division."

— Under certain conditions, "they can be induced to become cells with special functions" such as heart muscle or the insulin-producing cells of the pancreas.

Based on successful research on animals, scientists have theorized that stem cells could play a role in preventing or curing a variety of diseases, conditions and disabilities including Parkinson's and Alzheimer's diseases, spinal cord injuries, stroke, heart disease, diabetes, arthritis and burns.

But since researchers discovered in 1998 how to isolate and develop human embryonic stem cells, no human disease or condition has been successfully treated with them.

The only definitive advances in treating humans have come using adult stem cells, such as the blood-forming stem cells in bone marrow, used to treat leukemia, lymphoma and several inherited blood disorders.

The U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-

Life Activities calls the claims about the potential of embryonic stem cells "largely speculation."

"Embryonic stem cells have never treated a human patient, and animal trials suggest that they are too genetically unstable and too likely to form lethal tumors to be used for treatment anytime soon," said a release.

"This kind of exaggerated 'promise' has misled researchers and patient groups before — most obviously in the case of fetal tissue from abortions, which a decade ago was said to promise miracle cures and has produced nothing of the kind," it said.

Embryonic stem cells come from living embryos that have been frozen after creation for in vitro fertilization procedures or, less frequently, created by cloning specifically for research. Harvesting stem cells from them always kills the embryos.

Adult stem cells come from three sources — pregnancy-related tissue such as umbilical cords, placentas and amniotic fluid; adult tissues and organ systems such as bone marrow, liver, skin, intestine, brain and even fat; and, rarely, postmortem human brains up to 20 hours after death.

Pope reminds Catholics of need to go to confession

Only those with no mortal sins may receive body of Christ, says pope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Catholics must remember that they may not receive Communion if they have committed a serious sin and have not gone to confession, Pope John Paul II said.

In the year the church has dedicated to the Eucharist, it is important to remind people of the importance of going to confession, the pope said in a message sent from Rome's Gemelli hospital.

The pope's message, released at the Vatican March 12, was addressed to priests taking a course at the Apostolic Penitentiary, a Vatican court dealing with matters related to confession and questions of conscience.

"Only one who has a sincere awareness of not having committed a mortal sin can receive the body of Christ," the pope said in his message.

The prayers of the Mass underline the need for "purification and conversion," he said, citing the initial penitential rite, the sign of peace and the prayers immediately before the reception of the Eucharist.

The pope said the Gospel readings of Lent "help us to better understand the value of this unique priestly ministry."

"They show the Savior while converting the Samaritan woman, becoming a source of joy for her; he heals the man born blind, becoming a source of light for him; he raises Lazarus from the dead and shows how life and resurrection defeat death, the consequence of sin," the pope wrote.

"His penetrating gaze, his word and his judgment of love enlighten the conscience of those he meets, provoking their conversion and profound renewal," Pope John Paul said.

The pope said that in an age when people seem to forget about God and ignore the reality of sin priests and religious educators must work even harder to help people understand that Christ is calling them to conversion, "which presupposes a conscious confession of their sins and the request for forgiveness and salvation."

The pope also told the priests that people will not approach them unless they model their lives and behavior on Christ, "the teacher and pastor, healer of souls and bodies, spiritual guide and just and merciful judge."

Deo Gratias

UNDERSTANDING THE MYSTERY OF THE MASS, PART 11

We mentioned last week that the Liturgy of the Word offers us the opportunity to listen to the voice of the good shepherd, who still guides his church from his throne in heaven.

At each Mass, the eternal Word of the eternal Father unfolds the mystery of our redemption from the Old Testament to the New Testament, and finally into the present day. He constantly reveals the divine plan of our salvation.

And last week we continued our examination of the Liturgy of the Word by following this revelation from our first reading from the Old Testament, the Responsorial Psalm, New Testament Epistle, and finally the holy Gospel. This week we continue our discussion by inspecting the homily or sermon that follows the reading of the Gospel.

At the conclusion of each reading from sacred Scripture, there is a ritual indicating that the reading has ended. The Lector proclaims, "Verbum Domini" ["The word of the Lord"] and we respond, "Deo Gratias" ["Thanks be to God"].

It is truly fitting that this ritual follow the retelling and the recounting of the events of salvation history found in Scripture. Indeed, our souls and our minds ought to respond with great joy to the proclamation of Scripture in gratitude and thanksgiving for what God has accomplished through His beloved Son. The whole of Sacred Scripture is Good News to us who are in desperate need of God's abundant mercy and love.

The Liturgy of the Word reaches its summit in the proclamation of the Gospel, marked by the use of incense; the joyful Alleluia chant (which in itself is a shout of praise at the resurrection and victory of the Lord); and standing at attention, for the words and deeds of Our Lord are about to be spoken.

Following this reading, another ritual response is exchanged, "Verbum Domini" ["The Gospel of the Lord"], "Laus tibi Christe" ["Praise to you, Lord Jesus Christ"]. The faithful are then seated once again.

Until now, the Mass has maintained a strict ritual, including the ritual responses at the conclusion of each reading. But here, the celebrant departs somewhat from a formal structure in order to explain and instruct. In other words, following the Gospel, the homily or sermon, is the first unstructured response of man to God's saving activity in salvation history.

FATHER MATTHEW BUETTNER
GUEST COLUMNIST

And so, the homily extends our response to the readings; the homily is an extended Deo Gratias for what God has accomplished and continues to accomplish in bringing about our salvation.

It is important to note that only those in Holy Orders — deacons, priests and bishops — may proclaim the Gospel and preach during the holy sacrifice of the Mass. Why? Not only do these men receive years of theological training, but they are officially consecrated by Holy Mother Church to preach in the name of Christ: they are not to give their personal opinions and views, but rather they speak on behalf of the Church as an instrument of Christ (Cf. Redemptionis Sacramentum No. 65-67).

As we just mentioned, the celebrant may give either a homily or a sermon. There is a slight distinction between them: a homily generally focuses on the readings from sacred Scripture, whereas a sermon usually focuses on a particular topic or theme, such as the Seven Deadly Sins or a sermon on charity.

It is also important to note the distinction between preaching and teaching. The object of preaching is to increase faith, whereas the object of teaching is to increase knowledge. The ultimate purpose of the homily or sermon is to increase faith, although elements of catechesis should be included to accomplish that goal.

Unfortunately, one of the difficulties about preaching in our day is an unreasonable expectation of the homily. We may expect the homily to provide us with our weekly dose of Catholic faith and life: history, theology, philosophy, spirituality, liturgy, morality, Scripture analysis, etc. And we want it in five minutes or less!

I will never forget one Dominican motto: "One homily cannot cover everything." Deo Gratias! Thanks be to God!

Next week we will conclude our discussion of the Liturgy of the Word as we take a look at the Profession of Faith and General Intercessions.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Irish saint not really so Irish

ST. PATRICK CONVERTS IRELAND TO CHRISTIANITY

St. Patrick, Ireland's favorite saint, wasn't actually Irish. Nor did he drive the snakes out of Ireland.

Instead, he was born in Britain as the pampered, far-from-faith-filled son of a Roman nobleman around 385 A.D. Patrick's real name is believed to have been Maewyn Succat, and his baptismal name was Patricius.

In his teens, his plush lifestyle ended when his village was attacked and slave traders kidnapped and sold him to an Irish chieftain. Serving as a shepherd on a lonesome hillside, the distraught youth gradually turned to prayer and, after six years, made a daring escape to Gaul (now France) and eventually returned home.

But memories of the Irish haunted him and Patrick felt God wanted him to preach the Good News in pagan Ireland. Ordained to the priesthood, he sailed back to Ireland in 432 A.D. and in essence converted the entire populace. That this was accomplished without resorting to violence is a historical rarity.

Patrick's success at winning converts upset the Celtic Druids. They arrested Patrick several times, but he escaped each time.

Patrick established monasteries across Ireland, which were instrumental in preserving Western civilization's literary traditions through the Dark Ages. He also set up schools and churches, which would help him in his conversion of the Irish country to Christianity.

It is believed that Patrick raised people from the dead, though this cannot be substantiated. He is also said to have given a sermon from the hilltop that drove all the snakes from Ireland. Because no snakes were ever native to Ireland, many scholars believe this is a metaphor for the conversion of the pagans to Christianity.

Patrick's mission in Ireland lasted for 30 years. After that time, Patrick retired to County Down. He died on March 17, 461 A.D. The day has been commemorated as St. Patrick's Day ever since.

Though originally a Catholic holy day, St. Patrick's Day has evolved into a secular holiday, often celebrated with parades and festivals.

Mercy Sister Patricia Durbin, director of the diocesan Media Resources Office, contributed to this story.

Legend of the shamrock

The shamrock, a three-leafed clover, is the national emblem of Ireland. It is widely believed that St. Patrick used the shamrock to illustrate the doctrine of the Trinity, but the idea cannot be proven.

The shamrock was a sacred plant in ancient Ireland because it symbolized the rebirth of spring. By the 17th century, the shamrock had become a symbol of emerging Irish nationalism.

As English seized Irish land and made laws against the Irish language and practice of Catholicism, many Irish wore the shamrock as a symbol of their heritage and displeasure with English rule.

Pope formed ideas for book during years of meetings

BY JONATHAN LUXMOORE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WARSAW, Poland — A Polish philosopher who provided material for Pope John Paul II's latest book, "Memory and Identity," said the pope was helped to formulate ideas by contacts with leading philosophers over many years.

"Our talks focused on the 20th century's experience of evil, as the pope had seen it — we wanted to act as catalysts, helping the pope tell his own story," said Krzysztof Michalski, rector of the Austrian-based Institute of Human Sciences.

"So the conversations were often very personal, about times and people," said Michalski. "Philosophy appeared in the background, sometimes as a signpost, sometimes a hindrance."

Michalski said that as early as 1980 he and the pope's longtime friend, the late Father Jozef Tischner, helped arrange discussions with leading thinkers at the pope's summer home in Castel Gandolfo. He said discussions included the late German philosopher Hans-Georg Gadamer, Canadian philosopher Charles Taylor, the late French mathematician Rene Thom and Polish philosopher Leszek Kolakowski.

Michalski said the pope later agreed to discuss his "life and insights" at separate meetings with him and Father Tischner.

"We asked how he'd viewed prewar, occupied and communist Poland, and then Europe and the world," he said. "We wanted to show Karol Wojtyla's ideas in his life context, as motives for his behavior."

The pope acknowledges his debt to Michalski and Father Tischner in "Memory and Identity," which was published in Italian Feb. 22. A Polish edition by Krakow-based Znak is to be launched March 14 in Warsaw.

Michalski said the pope had encouraged an "exchange of ideas" between Catholics and non-Catholics while he was archbishop of Krakow in the 1970s and had later "taken his intellectual interests to Rome."

He added that the pope viewed Nazism and communism "mostly through the experiences of people he met" and said the pope's Polish identity helped him appreciate human sufferings.

"He said his Polish experience had helped him, as pope, better understand societies that were hurt, struggling for independence or economic justice," Michalski said.

Resurrection story offers hope, joy

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Clean and vacant in the morning sunlight, the yellow house stood in sharp contrast to the unspeakable violence that had exploded inside its once peaceful walls.

Little evidence of life remained in the surrounding yard except for a few struggling perennial remnants. The occupant of this modest residence, now empty, had been a widow, a mother, a mother-in-law and a grandmother — a disciple of Jesus and finally, ironically, a murder victim.

Irene's family had gathered for the last time in front of her yellow house. I walked toward what had once been a clump of irises. At my feet lay three dehydrated leaves with roots partially exposed. Rescuing these pathetic leaves became my mission, for somehow they had become my fragile connection to Irene, the woman who planted them — my mother-in-law.

During the next nine years the irises flourished but did not bloom. My husband and I babied them. We consulted plant books. Nothing happened. Hope faded. Perhaps they were just too sad to bloom.

Then one morning in early April I went out for my daily iris inspection. Expecting nothing, I was shocked by joy; there among the leaves a bud stalk was shooting upward. Soon it would reveal the glorious purple petals now tightly wrapped like a splendid gift.

For my husband and me, the iris had become a labor of love and healing — a sign of resurrection.

On this Sunday of the Easter Triduum, we return to the empty tomb once again. We join the women and men as they try to grasp the great mystery of what it means to rise from the dead. They soon will know that it is a quest that takes a lifetime, accompanied by the risen Lord, a journey that will surely end in unspeakable joy.

Thousands flock to Denver cathedral to venerate relics of Passion

CATHOLIC, GREEK ORTHODOX CHURCHES SHARE TRADITION, SAYS PRIEST

BY ROXANNE KING
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

DENVER — Several thousand people flocked to the Cathedral Basilica of the Immaculate Conception in Denver March 5-6 to venerate items associated with Christ's last hours.

Some waited up to an hour to view the "Relics of the Passion" exhibit, which began its 2005 tour to six cities in February in Honolulu. The tour will end in Los Angeles during Holy Week.

Sponsored by the Apostolate for Holy Relics, the exhibit included a piece of the true cross discovered by St. Helena; full-size replicas of the nails used in Jesus' crucifixion made with shavings from the actual nails; remains from the crown of thorns worn by Jesus; and a portion of the "sindonis," the cloth believed to be the exterior wrapping in which the burial cloth of Jesus was kept when it was not being venerated.

Additional relics were an artist's rendition of Veronica's veil that had been touched to the veil itself; a piece of the column of flagellation used in Jesus' scourging; a relic of the table of the Last Supper; and a bone fragment of St. Longinus, the centurion who pierced Christ's side and proclaimed, "Indeed, this was the Son of God."

The display drew Catholics, non-Catholics and people from both inside and outside the Denver Archdiocese. Their reaction to the relics was a mixture of curiosity, excitement, reverence and awe.

"Today is my birthday, I had to come," said Greek Orthodox Father Ambrose Mayas, 58.

Clad in the tall black headdress and robes of his faith, the priest bowed and blessed himself several times before the relics, which were under the watchful eyes of caped Knights of Columbus.

Noting that the veneration of relics is an ancient tradition shared by the Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox churches, he said, "They are heavenly images that bring us closer to God."

He said the display reminded him of last year's blockbuster movie, "The Passion of the Christ," a recut version of which opened in Denver March 11. The display, like the film, brought to life the Gospel events of redemption, he said.

Deeply touched by the close relationship between Jesus and his mother depicted in the film, the 58-year-old priest said he was also struck by the manner in which Christ accepted his cross.

"In love and compassion he embraced the cross for all of us to set us free," Father Mayas said, thrilled that the display included a fragment of the true cross.

Jim Lucero, 54, an Anglican who became a Catholic nine years ago, said the relics are tangible reminders of Christ's passion, death and resurrection.

"I love the church because it has so much history and the relics are part of that history," he said. "By faith I do believe those relics are part of Our Lord's history. It's incredible we have that physical matter we can identify with Our Lord."

The relics on display were all authenticated in Rome, according to Tom Serafin, president of the Apostolate for Holy Relics, a nonprofit organization dedicated to the guardianship and promotion of relics that operates with the approval of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles.

But he emphasized that their veneration is not a question of proof, but an act of faith — even if curiosity drives a person to see them.

"The intention is still pure," he said. "The action of the people that venerate them validates the relics themselves, whether an act of thanksgiving, hope, reparation or an act of love for Christ's crucifixion."

Many of those praying before the sacred items took rosaries, religious medals or scapulars to be touched to the relic of the true cross.

Serafin said he was particularly moved by those who asked him to touch their wedding rings to the relic, calling his ability to do so for them "a privilege."

Catholic school honors basketball teams

CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — A recent day at Asheville Catholic School ended with an impromptu assembly to honor the boys' and girls' basketball teams.

The players were met with cheers from their fellow classmates as they entered the gymnasium March 1. Both teams won first place during the annual Shamrock Basketball Tournament held at Catholic schools in Charlotte Feb. 25-27.

Thirty-four teams from schools in North and South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia participated in the tournament.

After playing six games in less than 48 hours, Asheville Catholic's girls' team topped their undefeated season with first place in the tournament, playing in both large- school and small-school divisions.

Asheville Catholic's boys' team, which had only one loss all season, took first place in the boys' small-school division.

Mary Evans, Asheville Catholic's athletic director, praised both teams for their dedication and hard work as well as girls' team coach Charlene Reeves and boys' team coaches Steve Cogburn and Tommy Gassaway.

"They were the most unselfish teams in giving up the ball and letting everyone have a chance," said Evans.

All tournament players were treated to a dance March 26, giving them a chance to meet each other in a non-competitive setting.

A collection of columns, editorials and viewpoints

The Easter hero: St. Thomas

Saint shows doorway to Jesus

Having celebrated Easter with lilies and alleluias, we have also turned a new leaf into full bloom with the conversion process, which has already begun (I hope) and will continue until we die.

Nature, in this time of the year, does just that. If we are not in this spirit, it's never too late to begin. So we pray that Easter may not simply be a day on the calendar, but a way of life. Faith is not just a present memory of past events in a distant land, but is a living presence and a guiding power.

The stone of selfishness has been rolled away, the tomb is empty of pride and Jesus' resurrection is not the grand finale. That same Jesus is in our midst today, knocking at the doors of our lives. God forbid we dare to celebrate only what has already happened, the pages of faith already written, the miracles already performed.

We celebrate our journey today and the miracles of our daily lives. So, Easter is not over and will never be over. During this season, the doubting Thomas is our guide.

What do we know about St. Thomas? He was one of the Twelve Apostles. His name in Aramaic means "twin." Since the question "who's twin was he?" cannot be answered, I let the scholars have fun with it.

My fascination for St. Thomas is based on the fact that his story is our story: we want to see, to touch; we want reasons to believe. There is a Thomas in each one of us. He didn't quit, but he experienced failure, fear and disappointment. He makes us understand that we cannot stay in our own tombs of selfishness and greed. It's time to come out and soon.

Thomas was an outsider for not being with the Apostles when the Lord appeared, but soon became an insider for having had the privilege of seeing and touching Jesus with his own eyes and his own hands. Until we are able to touch the wounds of our sisters and brothers, we will never appreciate the greatness of loving and the risk of believing.

Thomas was locked out because of fear, pessimism and grief. The doors were shut and he was outside. His doubts paralyzed his love for the Lord.

Some people can certainly understand Thomas' drama when they feel imprisoned by fear. God seems only a myth, justice is relative and Jesus is a fairy tale. Thomas was a believer who wanted proof. His analytical mind demanded more than hearsay. He was the first who sensed trouble ahead and said, "Let us also go that we may die with Him" (Jn.11:16); but the hostility and the crucifixion heaped so heavily on him that his rock-like courage was cracked into pieces.

The door of fear is so powerful that it can lock you out of faith. Another door that shut Thomas out was pessimism. He knew things were going badly. He feared the worst and it happened. The arrest, trial, execution and death of his beloved master greatly disturbed him to the point of feeling defeated and full of doubts and fears. If they did this to Jesus, whom can you trust?

How many times have we been defeated by our own fears, discouraged by our doubts and eventually become cynical? Thomas' story is our story.

The third door that locked Thomas out was grief. There is no doubt that Thomas loved Jesus, but when what he feared really happened, it broke his heart. Jesus was everything to him, but when he

Why humility is such an attractive virtue

Being humble begets honesty and vice versa

Humility is an attractive quality, isn't it?

The word "humility" comes from the Latin "humus," meaning "earth." Humble people are down to earth. To avoid becoming too lofty, they plant their feet firmly on the ground by knowing who they truly are and admitting that without God they wouldn't be here or have what they have. They unabashedly submit to a higher power.

Part of the reason for humility's outstanding attractiveness is its honesty, a virtue that has been revered by all great civilizations. Take, for example, the Romans. During Rome's golden age, senators customarily had marble busts made of themselves. Artisans employed the time-consuming task of hand polishing the marble until it was smooth.

As the demand for busts increased, artisans learned they could speed up the process by filling in flaws with wax rather than polishing them smooth. This worked well until one hot Roman summer. The baking sun began melting the wax, and all of a sudden young, handsome-looking senators lost their youthful, smooth looks.

The senators immediately employed their legal powers to rectify the situation, passing the law that said: "All marble works of busts must be sculpted without wax." The word for "without" in Latin is "sine," and for "wax," it is "cera." This is where we get our word "sincerity."

When we are sincere, there is no waxing over what we say or do. We tell it as it is and don't try to make ourselves out to be something we're not. We humbly admit limitations, especially our own, and accept them.

was killed, life faded away for Thomas as well. He was in such a deep grief that he could not be with anyone. He had to be alone.

There are times when sorrow needs silence and solitude. The greatness of Thomas is that he got out of this mess with three positive steps: Christian fellowship, truth and faith.

The Gospel tells us that on the next appearance, the disciples were in the upper room. The doors once more were locked, but this time Thomas was inside with the others. Thomas realized his first big mistake was withdrawing from the fellowship of the disciples.

The next positive step taken by Thomas was his uncompromising honesty. He refused to say he understood what he didn't or that he believed what he couldn't. He would not quiet his doubts by pretending they did not exist.

The third positive step was faith to counteract his doubts. Thomas did not air his doubts for the sake of mental gymnastics. He doubted in order to be

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

So humility begets honesty, and vice versa.

There is something else to mention about humility. When we are humble, we aren't afraid of what others think of us. We are ourselves without pretenses. What others see in us is authentic; they can take it or leave it.

Today's society is becoming increasingly concerned about the games so-called reputable people play. So people are crying out for the virtue of humility in the church, government and, for that matter, society as a whole. There is a growing sense that manipulating, hiding and falsifying the truth could destroy our nation.

Society hungers more than ever today for people of character who know their humble beginnings and limitations, and speak truthfully. We want to see humility, honesty and sincerity in society. Repeatedly, the church is being reminded to imitate Christ's love of humility, sincerity and truth.

Jesus praised the humility of the tax collector who confessed his sins. He did not wax over things when teaching, and he asked us to follow him as the way, the life and the truth.

sure and when he was sure, he committed himself totally and completely: "My Lord and my God."

Doubting our doubts is a sign of wisdom and maturity. Faith, on the other hand, must be embraced as is without hesitation or fear. Of course, faith has a variety of stages and we may experience the frail faith of a superficial believer or the strong faith of a saint.

Faith is the eye by which we look to Jesus. A blurry eye is still an eye and so is a weeping and smiling eye. Faith is the hand with which we lay hold of Jesus. A trembling hand is still a hand. Faith is the foot by which we go to Jesus. A lame foot is still a foot.

Thank you, Thomas, for teaching us how to become insiders and how we can open the door to Jesus, wishing to enter into our history. You have shown us the way: "Don't wait to be perfect in order to love and believe, because you never will."

Deca-logic

HOW DIFFERENT LIFE WOULD BE IF WE FOLLOWED THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

Learned any good words lately? If you are a regular consumer of the news, you've no doubt added the word "Decalogue" to your vocabulary. Decalogue, a proper noun, is Greek for "ten words." It is a media substitution for the Ten Commandments. Why they don't just say "The Ten Commandments" is, well, Greek to me.

The Ten Commandments are in the news because of a Supreme Court case. The Justices will try to answer the burning question of whether our republic will survive the placement of monuments bearing God's dictation to Moses on the tree-shaded lawns of state capitols and county courthouses.

Everyone knows that replicas of the stone tablets that Moses carried from the mountain are the Ten Commandments. But let's be honest, who can recite all 10? Sadly, these monuments, most of which are about 50 years old, have been unread and unnoticed until this case, a sad fact that the Court's decision probably will not change.

The larger question is the issue of the state promoting religion. It's a constitutional "no-no" that has fueled ACLU cases from Maine to San Diego. Of course, the last time I checked, most governments were having serious problems with some of their basic services such as teaching children how to read and fixing potholes.

The idea of elected officials and bureaucrats effectively encouraging the complex notion of eternal salvation through religion should raise an eyebrow in mirth, not concern. But there is no law against bringing a lawsuit.

What if the Court decided to toss aside the Constitution and make Christianity our official religion? That would make the Ten Commandments the law of the land. Let's look at how different the media would be with the Decalogue as its point of reference:

1. I am the Lord thy God, thou shalt have no other gods before me.

Instead of endlessly promoting money, sex and power, the focus would shift to faith, service and compassion. Not a bad start.

2. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image.

Although close to No. 1, Scripture indicates that this is a physical image of an idol or false god. Posters of surly, overpaid athletes and underdressed teen "celebrities" would be banished.

3. Thou shalt not take the name of God in vain.

This would severely limit the vocabulary of many cable-TV channels and they might go off the air.

4. Remember the Sabbath day, keep it holy.

With no "big" games on TV on Sundays, families discover that communication and time spent together are more rewarding.

5. Honor thy father and thy mother.

Kids would plan activities for their parents instead of the other way around. Walt Disney World closes, Epcot thrives.

The next four Commandments are already on the books. What would happen to the media if they were actually obeyed?

6. Thou shalt not kill.

This would be good news for everyone except for TV news people. Without murder and mayhem, local TV newscasts would have almost nothing to report. Commercials for car dealers would fill the extra time.

7. Thou shalt not commit adultery. "Entertainment Tonight" goes off the air. Jerry Springer is seen at the unemployment office.

8. Thou shalt not steal. See number six above since this represents the balance of local news.

9. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

The shorthand for this is called lying. With no false witness to bear, all of the court TV shows would be replaced by cartoons. As an added bonus, the IRS would have more money than Bill Gates.

10. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods.

The last Commandment covers greed and jealousy that, while difficult to codify in law, are not very nice. Suffice it to say that if you were following the first Commandment, then this one would be automatic.

Of course if the high court rules that the monuments must be removed, then the media will be unchanged except for extensive "live" on-the-spot coverage and analysis of the protests that take place when the bulldozers arrive.

Understanding the 'Mystery'

I just wanted to say how beneficial Father Matthew Buettner's series on the Mystery of the Mass has been. It's both a refresher for me, a cradle Catholic, and a learning experience for my husband, a Protestant.

Thank you.

Immigrants should take legal route

With all due respect to Bishop Thomas G. Wenski of Orlando, Fla., I vehemently disagree with him in regard to illegal immigrants and workers ("Farming support," March 11).

I legally immigrated to this country in January 1954; five years later I became a naturalized citizen of the United States of America. Of course, I had to learn the language of my adopted country.

Bishop Wenski's contention that these people — illegal workers in this country who have invested equity — deserve "legal immigration status" does not make any sense to me.

As a taxpayer ... I have all the compassion and understanding — economic and otherwise — for the millions of people who would do anything to enter into this country. But I would say to these people: apply for it legally and learn the language of this country.

A film whose theme transcends life

Meaningful existence stems from sacrifice

Clint Eastwood is gifted, but he will never be one of the great directors because he chooses themes for his movies that deal with murder in one form or another. His work always serves the culture of death.

One of the greatest directors of all time, Akira Kurosawa, on the other hand, usually chooses themes that transcend life and elevate his audience to idealism. One of his classics, "IKIRU" (which means "to live"), won universal praise as one of his greatest movies. In it he asks his audience, What does it mean to live a worthwhile life?

As the story begins, a 50-year-old, low-level office worker named Watanabe-san, is looking at an X-ray showing a large white growth in his stomach. He learns that he has only six months to live. We all are confronted with the question, What would you do if you had only six more months to live?

Watanabe-san is of course devastated. He sinks into darkness and self-pity, regretting that he worked half his life away and never took the time really to live. Life is so short.

We stay with him in his misery for a while, but soon he begins to feel the need to make up for lost time. A friend sympathizes with him, and the two go on a pleasure-seeking rampage, which only leaves him more depressed.

Then he meets a young girl who is full of youthful joy. He tells her his story and gets her to feel sorry for him. Her efforts to cheer him up take their toll, and she soon tires of him. He in turn realizes that he cannot find meaning by living vicariously through another.

Suddenly, there is an epiphany. He comes to his senses and understands that a meaningful life is only possible if one is willing to sacrifice himself to help others. He sees the importance of leaving this world a little better than it was before one entered upon the scene of life.

The movie's irony is that too often only by a radical confrontation with death does one come to realize true liberation.

A familiar theme to Christians is: It is in giving that we receive and in dying to self that we are born to eternal life.

Watanabe-san's spirit begins to soar as he devotes himself to helping a group of mothers who had been trying to get a park built for their children on the site of a filthy lot near their homes. The bureaucrats had resisted them for months.

As his health fails, Watanabe-san decides to battle the system right up to the office of the mayor. He continually is disrespected and rejected.

Then he learns that a group of gangsters want to buy the land and turn it into a bar. He goes respectfully to the head gangster and pleads his case. The sinister figure threatens to kill him if he persists. Watanabe-san suppresses a smile and stares him down.

Surprisingly, the politicians cave in, not out of any sense of idealism, but because it was an election year. The racketeers even back off, and the park is built. Watanabe-san then dies a peaceful death.

In the next scene we are at the wake. On the closed-casket a picture of Watanabe-san is placed for all to see. The grieving mothers come in, full of gratitude, and pay their respects.

In Kurosawa's work idealism triumphs over apathy, and sacrifice prevails over selfishness.

St. William Church serves Catholics of western North Carolina for five decades

FILE PHOTO

St. William Church, nestled in the Appalachian Mountains of Cherokee County, has served as the spiritual home for Catholics in western North Carolina for 50 years.

MURPHY — In a state where today Catholics compose less than four percent of the population, the faith was thriving in the western extremes of North Carolina more than 60 years ago.

In 1936, Father Howard Lane assumed the pastorate of the Waynesville parish of St. John Church. The parish boundaries included the seven westernmost counties of the state. Father Lane offered a weekly lecture series at the Cherokee County Courthouse in Murphy for two months in 1937, after which several other Diocese of Raleigh priests periodically celebrated Mass in Murphy.

A resident's home, a funeral parlor, a theater and a hotel dining room all served as sites for Masses in Murphy over the years. In the early 1950s, local parishioners — with St. John Church's pastor, Father Lawrence Newman — began a church building campaign. A call for help was issued to families across the nation with the surname Murphy to assist in building a Catholic church in the mountain town. The campaign raised $5,000, which the Catholic Extension Society doubled with a matching contribution.

Construction was underway in 1952, and the new St. William Church, including a parish hall and priest's living quarters, was dedicated by Bishop Vincent S. Waters in August of that year.

In December 1954, Glenmary Father Joseph Dean became the first Glenmary Home Missioner to serve the parish. Father Dean — the first resident pastor of Cherokee County — and his successors went to work evangelizing throughout the western mountain regions of North Carolina. They established several missions during the 1950s and '60s, including Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Hayesville, which today remains in the pastoral care of St. William Church.

Glenmary Sisters also served the area beginning in 1958. They established a home nursing service — today's Good Shepherd Home Health and Hospice Agency — and assisted in fervent missionary work.

St. William Church and the Catholic population of the surrounding area continued to grow markedly during the 1960s into the late '80s. The Glenmary Missioners offered their spiritual leadership to many people, and were instrumental in evangelizing, educating and ministering to people living in the western extremes of the state. Churches were built or enlarged, a Bible Center was constructed, a parish in Andrews was established and a pastoral center was opened to instruct Glenmary priests and brothers.

In autumn of 1984, under the direction of the Diocese of Charlotte's founding shepherd, Bishop Michael J. Begley, ground was broken for a new church in Murphy. The new St. William Church, complete with a parish hall and offices, hosted its first Mass on Christmas Eve, 1985. Almost 300 people attended then-Bishop John F. Donoghue's dedication ceremony in April 1986.

In June 1987, Father Bernard Manley became the first diocesan priest to serve the parishioners of St. William Church. He remained until June 1991, when Father Edmund Kirsch succeeded him. Father George Kloster assumed the pastorate of St. William Church in 1998 and serves there today.

In 1999, the diocesan office of Catholic Social Services established the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) in Murphy. St. William parishioners are actively involved with the agency, which seeks to create a collaborative, community-driven effort to achieve economic justice in Cherokee, Clay, Graham and Swain counties.

As a member of the Cherokee County Ministerial Association, the parish strives to maintain a healthy spirit of ecumenism, as well, in the western mountains. The Catholic population continues to grow in Cherokee County, with dozens of visiting faithful from Florida and elsewhere spending their summer months in the mountains.

"LAST KISS" by Rich Staley

"'Last Kiss' by Richard Staley is the superbly written story of Patrick, an ordinary man who is always busy...perhaps too busy to give one last kiss to one near and dear to him. Yet an extraordinary angel shows him the importance of never taking people for granted in this often chaotic and ever-changing world. 'Last Kiss' is commended as an especially thoughtful, original, and heartwarming novel."

CHARLOTTE — Priests must be willing to sacrifice in order to be good shepherds of Christ's people, said Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

"Whether a priest is celebrating the sacraments, or teaching in a classroom, he is in all of those instances gathering Christ's flock around him, and they hear him and respond as he feeds them on the Word of Life and the sacraments," said Bishop Jugis.

The bishop offered these words during the chrism Mass, one of the Church's most solemn Masses, at St. Patrick Cathedral March 22. During the annual Mass, priests rededicate themselves to their priestly ministry, and the bishop blesses the oils to VATICAN CITY — Terri Schindler Schiavo has been condemned to die "an atrocious death" in a society that is "incapable of appreciating and defending the gift of life," said the Vatican's newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano in its March 23 edition.

A judge in the United States "has decided that Terri's life is not worth living, at the same time condemning the woman to an atrocious death: death by starvation and thirst," the paper said.

The paper gave its reaction to the case of the severely brain-damaged Florida woman in a front-page editorial.

ARMED WITH FAITH

Marine Gen. Peter Pace, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, talks with Marine Lance Cpl. Douglas Curl Jr. during a visit earlier this year to Camp Fallujah, Iraq. Pace presented the Purple Heart to Curl and several other Marines who were wounded in area fighting.

High-ranking Catholic Marine sees no conflict between military, faith

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A photo of Guido Farrinaro still sits on the desk of Marine Gen. Peter Pace in his Pentagon office.

"He was the first man killed doing something that I asked be done," said the four-star general, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He is the second-highest-ranking military man in the nation.

The photo, he said, is not only a reminder of Farrinaro, but of all those who have died under his command while serving their country.

It also reminds him to act in ways his Catholic faith requires him to act and recalls the moral lessons imparted to him by the nuns who taught him.

"I struggled real hard not to lash out and be vindictive" after Farrinaro's death in Vietnam, Pace said. "That would have been counter to what the nuns taught me. I can't imagine how I would live with myself had I succumbed to something contrary to what they taught me."

The School Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis, who staffed his boyhood parish in Bogota, N.J., taught him morals that "are my anchor and the time to hold onto that anchor is the time you are least prepared to do so."

After joining the Marines, Pace was sent to Vietnam in 1968 and put in command of a rifle platoon that experienced heavy casualties.

His time in Vietnam, he said, "drew me closer to God. The most memorable Masses I ever attended were in the field, with bomb craters as gathering places and artillery crates as an altar."

Pace said his Catholic faith and belief in God are fundamental to what he does today.

"Without God, you could start to believe that the power you have belongs to you," he said. "It does not belong to you. It belongs to God and you borrow it."

"As a general you can do good things, you can use your power to make things right. When you report to the next life, you had better be able to report that you used your power to serve the people."

His Catholic faith does not conflict with his military career, he said.

"I am very comfortable with the United States military and what we do. We do not keep territory. We go in, do what we need to do, free the people and leave," said Pace.

"We never conquer and we never subjugate the people. What we do is fundamentally good — we free people and their lands."

CRS collects $121 million in tsunami aid

BALTIMORE (CNS) — Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. bishops' overseas relief and development agency based in Baltimore, has collected $121 million for tsunami relief operations as of March 16, said Elizabeth Griffin, CRS media relations director.

Griffin said that the amount of tsunami contributions will continue to rise as many dioceses still have not reported how much money they have collected. The Diocese of Charlotte raised more than $420,000.

The sum collected so far means CRS can extend its programs in the disaster areas as the amount exceeds the agency's $80 million program commitment, said Griffin.

The March 17 issue of The Chronicle of Philanthropy listed CRS as the U.S. charity that has collected the second highest amount for tsunami relief programs. Listed first was the American Red Cross.

Griffin said that CRS is now trying to educate donors to send contributions that are not earmarked for tsunami relief so that other programs can be developed in the tsunami-stricken countries for chronically poor villages spared by the natural disaster.

A disparity is developing because in some areas a poor village of fishermen unaffected by the tsunamis is not getting help, but a nearby resort village where the people are better off economically is getting aid because it was hit in the disaster, she said.

CRS is still accepting money earmarked for tsunami relief but stopped actively soliciting tsunami funds at the beginning of February, she said.

The Dec. 26 tsunamis left hundreds of thousands homeless in Indonesia, Sri Lanka, India, Thailand, Malaysia, Myanmar, the Maldives, Bangladesh and East Africa. More than 170,000 people were killed and several thousand more are still missing.

Vatican official says church must be committed to life at all stages

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Catholic Church's commitment to justice must include a commitment to protecting human dignity at every stage of human life, said Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger.

The church rightly is praised for its work on behalf of the poor, but when it comes to protecting the life of the unborn, it often is ridiculed, said the cardinal, prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

Cardinal Ratzinger was the main celebrant and homilist at a March 18 Mass at a Vatican conference marking the 40th anniversary of "Gaudium et Spes," the Second Vatican Council's Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World.

The day's Gospel reading was the account of Jesus' enemies wanting to stone him to death for blasphemy because he claimed the miracles he performed were the result of his special relationship with God.

Cardinal Ratzinger said "Gaudium et Spes" pushed the church to be actively involved in promoting justice in the world, while at the same time remembering that justice promotes human dignity, which is a gift of God.

"When the church commits herself to works of justice on a human level — and there are few institutions in the world which accomplish what the Catholic Church accomplishes for the poor and disadvantaged — the world praises the church," he said.

"But when the church's work for justice touches on issues and problems which the world no longer sees as bound up with human dignity — like protecting the right to life of every human being from conception to natural death, or when the church confesses that justice also includes our responsibilities to God himself — then the world not infrequently reaches for the stones mentioned in our Gospel today," Cardinal Ratzinger said.

Priest's words at consecration must guide way he lives, pope says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The words a priest recites when consecrating the Eucharist must be the words that guide the way he lives, Pope John Paul II said.

Thanksgiving, self-sacrifice, a desire to show others the way to salvation, remembering Christ's saving work, holiness and hope must mark not only a priest's celebration of Mass, but his whole life as well, the pope wrote March 13 in his annual Letter to Priests for Holy Thursday.

The pope quoted parts of the eucharistic prayers and explained how those words should shape the life of a priest. Jesus' first words at the Last Supper, he said, were words of thanksgiving.

A priest "must cultivate a constant sense of gratitude for the many gifts he has received in the course of his life," the pope said.

"We have our crosses to bear — and we are certainly not the only ones — but the gifts we have received are so great that we cannot fail to sing from the depths of our hearts our own Magnificat," the Blessed Virgin Mary's hymn of praise, he said.

Modeling his life on Christ who gave himself for others, the pope said a priest must "offer himself as a gift, placing himself at the disposal of the community and at the service of anyone in need."

"This is exactly what Jesus expected of his apostles," the pope said, and it is what "the people of God expect of a priest."

Priests are called to be heralds of the good news that on the cross and through the Eucharist Jesus shed his blood for the salvation of all people, Pope John Paul wrote.

"Yet unless we sense that we ourselves are saved, how can we be convincing heralds?" the pope asked.

Credibility, he said, comes from knowing that one has been saved, living a holy life and demonstrating that one truly believes that Christ will come again.

"Vocations will certainly not be lacking if our manner of life is truly priestly, if we become more holy, more joyful, more impassioned in the exercise of our ministry," he said.

Editor's note: The text of the pope's letter can be found on the Vatican's Web site at: http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/letters/2005/documents/hf_jp-ii_let_20050313_priests-holy-thursday_en.html.

Weaving faith

Schiavo's death 'atrocious'

brain-damaged for the past 15 years, can breathe on her own but requires nutrition and hydration through a feeding tube.

On March 22, U.S. District Judge James Whittemore refused to order the restoration of Schiavo's feeding tube, which had been removed March 18 by order of a Florida state judge. A 2-1 ruling by the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta confirmed that decision.

Schiavo's parents had appealed to the federal judge after U.S. President George W. Bush signed emergency legislation March 21 allowing them to do so.

But Whittemore said he refused to order restoration of Schiavo's feeding tube because the woman's parents had not established a "substantial likelihood of success" at trial on the merits of their arguments.

The Vatican newspaper called the reasons behind the court decision "absurd and chilling" and said Schiavo's "destiny" based on a court decision was not unlike the death sentence facing the men and women sitting on death row.

However, in this case, "Terri has not committed any crime, other than that of being 'useless' in the eyes of a society that is incapable of appreciating and defending the gift of life," it said.

"A human being, not a vegetable, is slowly dying" and instead of "provoking a wave of pity or solidarity," the "authentic drama" of Schiavo is "smothered by the indecent race to arrogate the right to decide on the life and death of a human creature," the paper said.

Schiavo's suffering recalls the "the agony of love" that comes when one remembers to help those who are "more fragile and needy," said the paper.

"The slow, heart-rending agony of Terri" is "the agony of humanity," it said.

Rededication of priestly ministry be used throughout the diocese in the upcoming year.

Bishop Jugis, along with concelebrants Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin, Abbot Placid Solari, OSB, abbot of Belmont Abbey, Abbot Patrick Shelton, pastor of St. James Church in Hamlet, and other clergy of the diocese, gathered with about 100 priests, permanent deacons and seminarians for the diocese to celebrate the liturgy with the people of faith whom they serve.

During his homily, the bishop welcomed the priests who were retiring and those who were celebrating anniversaries of priesthood ordination.

The recommitment ceremony, which followed the Liturgy of the Word, included the priests' renewal of their dedication as ministers of Christ, striving to be more like Christ and being faithful to their sacred ministry.

"We priests will renew our priestly promises with a dialogue of two questions," said Bishop Jugis. "The first question we are asked is if we are willing to sacrifice ... our own pleasure and ambition in order to carry out the responsibilities of the priesthood ... in order to promote only Christ."

The second question deals with the ministry the priests perform — the ministry of the sacraments, the ministry of teaching and the ministry of shepherd, said the bishop.

"It's a life where everything is placed at the service of Christ," said the bishop. "Are we willing to sacrifice all?"

A sign of a priest's commitment and total surrender to Christ is the prostration which takes place during the rite of ordination, said Bishop Jugis.

In each of the ordination rites — for deacon, for priests, for bishop — there is the prostration, the sign of his total surrender to the Lord in which he says, by that very posture, 'all is yours. I surrender everything to you. All belongs to you. Take and receive,'" said the bishop.

"The other time prostration shows up in the sacred liturgy of the church is the prostration of Good Friday, the celebration of the Lord's Passion, where the priest and deacon, as they approach the altar, are 'prostrate on the floor once again, recalling our Lord's total surrender of himself in his Passion.'"

"The priest, in the midst of his people, by his prostration is giving a sign of the primacy of Christ's love," said Bishop Jugis, "not only in the life of the church, but in his own life personally as a priest."

"It's Christ's love, Christ's grace, that gives life to the ministry, because apart from him, we can do nothing," he said.

The bishop stated that in Pope John Paul II's new book, "Rise, Let Us Be On Our Way," the Holy Father "makes a connection between the Lord's Passion and the rite of ordination. Christ the Good Shepherd lays down his life for his sheep ..."

A powerful and practical sign that the priest is a figure of Christ the Good Shepherd is when the priest is surrounded by his flock, said the bishop.

"The shepherd stands in the midst of his flock, as they listen to him, they recognize the voice of the good shepherd," he said.

Priests gather around Bishop Peter J. Jugis to concelebrate the eucharistic prayer during the chrism Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte March 22.

Priests receive the grace of the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands and the prayer of consecration, said the bishop.

"How many graces pass through the priest's hands as he ministers to God's people, and how marvelous is that anointing that we receive at our ordination, and in which we remain steadfast everyday in our prayer," said Bishop Jugis.

"In this Mass of commitment to priestly service, and the blessing of the oils and consecration of the sacred chrism, let the example of total surrender of the good shepherd, which we entered into at our ordination, be now our inspiration and our guiding light," he said.

Also during the Mass, Bishop Jugis blessed three oils used in sacramental and liturgical practices for all of the faithful throughout the coming year.

The oil of the sick, used to anoint the ill and dying, was blessed first. Next came the blessing of the oil of catechumens, which is used during the rite of baptism. The consecration of the chrism — a duty that belongs to the bishop alone — took place near the close of the Mass. Chrism — perfumed with balsam, an aromatic oil derived from trees — is an oil of consecration used after baptism and during confirmation, the ordaining of bishops and priests, and the blessing of churches and altars.

Vials of the oils are dispensed to every parish and mission church in the diocese. With the sacred oils — and having recommitted themselves to the mission they share with their bishop — the priests re-

YEAR OF THE EUCHARIST

Credo

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 12

In the Liturgy of the Word, Christ the great teacher and good shepherd instructs us through the faithful proclamation of Scripture. The events of salvation history are unfolded from the Old Testament promise of a Savior to the New Testament fulfillment in Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Following the particular Scripture lessons is the homily or sermon, wherein the celebrant inspires, encourages and admonishes the faithful to apply the truths of Scripture to their lives in seeking the Kingdom of God. The homily or sermon is, in fact, a response to the lessons of Scripture presented in the Liturgy of the Word with the purpose of increasing faith.

As a further extension of our response to the Word of God, the Profession of Faith and the General Intercessions complete the Liturgy of the Word and are the focus of this week's catechesis on the Mass.

The Profession of Faith is otherwise known as the Creed (from the first word in Latin, "Credo," that is "I believe"). The Creed is an ancient summary of Christian beliefs. It is a compendium of the truths of Scripture.

It is historical fact that the Profession of Faith was not originally formulated for use in the holy sacrifice of the Mass. Rather, the Profession of Faith was framed in the early Catholic Church for a two-fold purpose: 1) as a list of affirmations recited by the believer before his or her baptism; and 2) as an antidote to the confusion and doubt caused by heresy, or false teachings, about Christ and the articles of faith.

The Apostles' Creed was one of the earliest and most concise sets of beliefs. However, due to rampant heresy and theological confusion, the elements of each symbol of faith were elaborated and given further explanation. Thus, the church proposed the list of truths at the Council of Nicaea in 325, added to it at the Council of Constantinople in 381, with the final composition at the Council of Chalcedon in 451.

It was this more explicit symbol of faith that first entered the Mass at the Council of Toledo in Spain in 589: "Let the Creed resound, so that the true faith may be declared in song, and that the souls of believers, in accepting that faith, may be ready to partake, in Communion, of the body and blood of Christ." From Spain, the entrance of the Creed in the Mass spread to Western Europe, where it was eventually placed after the Gospel.

Like the Gloria, the Profession of Faith can be distinguished into three parts: 1) a confession of faith in God the Father as creator of heaven and earth; 2) a confession of faith in one Lord, Jesus Christ, the only Son of God; and 3) a confession of faith in the means of salvation, supplied by the Holy Spirit through the Church.

These three parts of the Creed unite to form a body of truths that establish the foundation of orthodox Christian faith and ultimately, give witness to the marvelous history of God's love.

And, as a further response to the events of salvation in Scripture and in recognition of the ongoing work of salvation in the world, the faithful speak on behalf of the church in interceding for the needs of the church and the world. It is important to note that the General Intercessions are by definition "general," that is, they refer to the broad needs of the universal church and the world.

By definition, they are also "intercessions" or petitions, rather than prayers of thanksgiving or praise. The church orders the sequence of intercessions: for the needs of the church, for public authorities and the salvation of the world, for those oppressed by any need and for the local community, including the faithful departed.

The General Intercessions bring closure to the Liturgy of the Word and bring to completion our verbal response to the Word of God. But the Mass is not ended. The Word must again become "flesh and dwell among us." The one, true sacrifice of Jesus Christ the high priest must again be presented.

Next week we begin the second part of the Mass: the Liturgy of the Eucharist.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Refugee resettlement directors convene in Charlotte

CSS resettles, assists thousands of refugees

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — Dozens of Catholic directors involved in immigration and refugee resettlement throughout the Southeast and Southwest recently gathered in Charlotte to discuss and share ideas about the ministry.

Elizabeth Thurbee, executive director of Catholic Social Services in the Diocese of Charlotte, and Cira Ponce, director of CSS's Refugee Resettlement Office in Charlotte, were among the 40 participants attending the Migration and Refugee Service's 2005 Regional Convening, themed "Strategies for a New Reality," held at the Omni Hotel in Charlotte March 3-5.

Since 1975, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Migration and Refugee Services (MRS) has coordinated the resettlement of more than 800,000 refugees in dioceses throughout the country. MRS periodically convenes program directors from various regions to discuss strategies and report on the various aspects of their ministries.

"It's an opportunity to bring together those who provide the services to discuss problems and the creative ways they have found to address the problems so the resettlement process can happen more effectively," said Thurbee.

"It gives us an opportunity to speak with national offices about concerns and strengths in our diocese and to network with other dioceses about their resettlement programs," said Ponce.

Topics included management issues, advocacy, resource allocation and the reception and placement program for the thousands of refugees resettled legally in the United States.

Since 1975, the diocesan Refugee Resettlement Office has assisted in the resettlement of more than 8,400 refugees from 28 nations and serves as a link between the refugee population, service agencies and the local community.

Through combined efforts of paid staff and volunteers, the diocesan Refugee Resettlement Office provides assistance with housing, social services, health care, social security registration, school registration and cultural and community orientation. It also provides employment orientation and placement, interpretation and initial transportation to appointments.

Instruction in English as a Second Language is available through group classes and in-home volunteer tutors.

during the 1990s, according to Thurbee. But recently there has been a rise in refugees from Africa, particularly from Sudan and Somalia, she said.

The majority of refugees are victims of political strife and unrest in their homelands, said Thurbee.

"All the refugees we assist are here legally and often have spent one to 10 years in resettlement camps," she said.

With each group of refugees, there are particular issues to address in the community, said Thurbee.

Those issues are not only financial, she said, but also include support from the community such as supplying apartments, home furnishings and automobiles; serving as mentors and translators; and assisting with job placement.

Mary Morton, MRS grants and programs administrator, remained in the diocese after the conference to give a presentation at St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte March 6 to solicit volunteers and other community support.

"According to the U.S. bishops, Catholic social teaching says that 'the measure of every institution is whether it threatens or enhances the life and dignity of the human person,'" said Ponce.

Life, she says, was all about her.

But two weeks before the start of her freshman year, she stumbled. Brigitte was pregnant and single. The college career was cancelled, her future was in doubt and, obviously, it was no longer only about her.

Today, thanks in part to the Catholic Social Services Hand to Hand Program, Brigitte is the proud mother of 2-year-old Isaiah, a working mom and a full-time student. Her goal is to be a social worker and someday be in a position to help others.

As the first Catholic Social Services Awareness Week takes place April 3-9, Brigitte's story is a reminder that thousands of people in need of assistance and understanding are helped each year by CSS.

"Many people in our diocese are not fully aware of the outstanding work done by CSS," said Bishop Peter J. Jugis. "Catholic Social Services Awareness Week will provide an opportunity to inform all parishes of the great good that CSS does among us and for us."

Since 1947, before the Diocese of Charlotte was established in 1972, CSS has helped hundreds of thousands of people in North Carolina by expanding and adapting programs to better respond to the needs in the communities, said the bishop.

"Even today, CSS is challenged to do more and reach further because of the needs of parishioners," said Bishop Jugis. "Rooted in the Eucharist and reaching out with the help of CSS, we can better serve the many people in our diocese who need our help."

Hand to Hand

The Hand to Hand Program is a non-sectarian program providing mentoring and supportive services to teen-agers who are pregnant or parenting for the first time. More than 1,500 teens have received services from the Hand to Hand program since it began in 1988.

"When the program first started, the focus was more on adoption assistance than parenting support," said Katisha Blackwell, a program supervisor in the CSS Piedmont Triad Regional Office. "However, over the years the focus has shifted to parenting support."

"At present, program services include case management, parenting education, mentoring, transportation assistance and a peer support group," said Blackwell.

Over the last 17 years, more than 1,500 girls in Forsyth County aged 10 to 21 have gone through the two-year Hand to Hand program.

"When they enter the program, they are overwhelmed with the new responsibility of being a parent," said Blackwell. "When they exit, they are much more confident in themselves and better able to consistently make responsible decisions, and more confident in their abilities as parents."

Brigette talks excitedly about how she was encouraged to communicate with Isaiah when he was only a year old.

"I asked him about his day and he answered me; then I asked him something else and now we talk all the time," she said.

Amazed that a one-year-old could communicate, Brigette said, "He knows more than I think he knows."

Another primary mission of Hand to Hand is to prevent repeat pregnancies. The classes and in-home visits put an emphasis on peer support among the young mothers, said Blackwell.

"I get a lot of encouragement (from CSS). They are showing that they care for me," said Brigette. "It tells me that I don't need to (get pregnant) again."

Better tomorrows

According to Blackwell, the feeling of caring and belonging is a critical element of Hand to Hand. Before entering the program, Brigette said that, other than her mother, she had little support for her situation. Isaiah's father is not participating in the baby's life.

The classes and individual meetings with a social worker have changed her.

"I drew closer to the Lord and renewed my relationship with Him," she said.

Brigette said the best thing about Hand to Hand is that she never felt she was being judged by anyone.

"People can look at a pregnant single woman and say, 'she has messed up her life,' but Hand to Hand made me feel welcomed and at peace," said Brigette. "I was excited to be part of the group."

Despite the help and encouragement, life still is not always easy for Brigette. When the brakes on her car failed and her telephone was stolen, she had no money left to apply for college. Hand to Hand came through with the $40 application fee.

Now she spends a full day in class at Winston-Salem State University before going to her job as a night clerk in a motel. She is often tired, but says her priorities are in order.

Her baby is the center of her life, she said, and both she and Isaiah are "trusting in the plan that God has for us."

Italian cardinal: 'Da Vinci Code' plays on anti-Catholic sentiment

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — The success of Dan Brown's novel, "The Da Vinci Code," is the result of a marketing strategy playing on anti-Catholic sentiment, said Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone of Genoa, Italy.

The cardinal told Vatican Radio he was particularly concerned about the fact that the book, first published in Italian in 2004, now is available in paperback and is popular among high school students.

"There is an idea circulating in the schools that one must read this book to understand the dynamics of history and all the manipulations carried out by the church in the course of history," Cardinal Bertone told Vatican Radio March 15.

"This is truly sad and terrible," he said, explaining why he had scheduled a public discussion about the book in Genoa.

Cardinal Bertone said the most ridiculous premise in the novel is the Catholic Church's alleged "obliteration of the feminine aspect from the Gospel narratives and in the life of the church."

"There is nothing more false," he said, pointing to the importance the church gives to the Blessed Virgin Mary and to the attention the Gospels pay to Jesus' female disciples, including the women who announced to the male disciples that Jesus had risen.

"There is nothing more false than the need to rediscover a — how can I say it — an 'amazon' Mary Magdalene in order to recuperate the presence of women" in the church, he said.

"The more mystifying element" of the book, Cardinal Bertone said, is its "denial of the death and resurrection of Jesus."

Cardinal Bertone, calling the book a "castle of lies," said he thinks promotion of the book is an anti-Catholic reaction to all the positive attention paid to the Catholic Church and the Christian faith during the Holy Year 2000.

The cardinal said it seems acceptable to be anti-Catholic; "I ask myself what the reaction would be to a similar book, full of lies, about Buddha or Mohammed or if a novel came out manipulating the whole story of the Holocaust, the Shoah."

Part of the book's marketing strategy, he said, is to try to convince people "that one is not an adult Christian if one has not read this book. But I say, 'Do not read it and, especially, do not buy it.'"

In Jesus' presence, all will become believers

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

"Glenn! Glenn!" 14-year-old Kenny shouted as he broke out of a circle of 48 teen-agers.

He ran across the room to embrace his adult retreat leader. Locking Glenn in a bear hug, eyes glistening, Kenny grinned and said: "I just want to thank you for getting me here. Otherwise I would've missed the greatest weekend of my life!"

Glenn told me that story after a weekend retreat for ninth- and 10th-graders. He didn't have to explain to me what had gone on or why it was Kenny's greatest weekend.

I knew that Kenny had been "locked away" on retreat with a group of disciples of Jesus and many reluctant seekers like himself. While he was there, Jesus had stood in their midst, recognized Kenny's doubt, and invited him to touch him. Drawn to a wounded, open hand, Kenny touched God and believed.

Kenny's dad practically had to drag him to the retreat site. Like the other young teens, Kenny was uncomfortable and fearful. Slowly, though, he allowed caring friends to guide him — to set him up — to meet Jesus.

During the retreat, adults and youth shared stories exposing their own wounds to reveal Jesus' saving presence. They were stories of hurt and healing; stubbornness and patience; sinfulness and mercy; death and new life. Kenny could relate, and he found in that body of believers a Jesus who actually touched him and loved him and valued his unique gifts.

Kenny's moment closely mirrors Thomas' moment in this weekend's Gospel. Along with the Old Testament passage, they show us how Jesus brings his people to belief.

The community of believers gathers, in faith, to encourage one another and strengthen themselves by pooling their gifts. Because they each have personal experience of Jesus, when he comes and "breathes" life on them they recognize him and exchange knowing glances. They invite others to come be with them, trusting that Jesus, in their midst, will offer himself.

Transformed by the personal touch of God, the new believer is affirmed by the knowing community and becomes a part of it.

WASHINGTON — It's not exactly a case of life imitating art.

The characters played by the two young actors in the new movie "Millions" go to a Catholic school in the north of England. In reality, though, only one of the youngsters does.

Lewis McGibbon, who plays older brother Anthony, is in his first year at Cardinal Newman High School in Warrington, England.

“We have priests who teach us in class about religious education, and we have Mass,” said Lewis, 13.

Alex Etel, who plays younger brother Damian in the movie, attends a public school. But it was at an open casting call at his school in Gatley, England, that he was first spotted and, ultimately, cast.

Lewis' first introduction to acting, he recalled, came at age 6, when he was "fascinated by people on TV. I told my mum I would love to do something like that."

In "Millions," Damian (Alex) finds a suitcase full of money. He also has conversations with saints, who appear to him, and discusses with them such matters as what to do with the money. While Anthony (Lewis) wouldn't mind an occasional splurge amid some prudent investments, Damian sets out to give money to the poor — as only an 8-year-old could define "poor," such as Mormon missionary neighbors whose townhouse lacks some modern amenities.

"I don't really know the lives of the saints that much. It was on the script," Alex confessed while in New York to promote the movie, which opens March 11 in some U.S. cities.

Lewis said that having faith “helps you in life. It makes you a better person. You start to learn things that you don’t know about.”

Because his character wrestles with the responsibility of dealing with so much money at his disposal — the lads never tell their widowed father about it until they absolutely have to — Alex said he has been asked questions about money. He said he didn't know whether filming "Millions" has changed his approach to it.

"No one really cares about money," he said. "You just throw it away. But you really need to keep on (top of) it. It's a big part of your life."

One thing both young actors agree on is their favorite scene from the movie: They are somewhat magically swept away to an African beach at film's end. Director Danny Boyle said the scene should not be regarded as a fantasy sequence, but as something real that happens through the power of Damian's faith.

The U.S. bishops' Office for Film & Broadcasting gave "Millions" a classification of A-II — adults and adolescents — for "a couple of mildly crude expressions, some intense episodes of menace, a momentary sexual situation, religious stereotyping, slight irreverence, and a brief scene where the brothers look, with boyish curiosity, at a Web site for women's bras."

Harry Forbes, director of the office, said the “quirky and charming” movie is “ideal entertainment for older adolescents and up.”

Many work to abolish death penalty

group of 38 N.C. state representatives signed House Bill 529 that calls for a two-year suspension of executions so a commission could study North Carolina's capital punishment system.

"House Bill 529 simply provides for a study of the documented flaws in our death penalty system and a necessary and finite delay of executions," said Rep. Joe Hackney, a Chapel Hill Democrat. "The bill also allows for capital trials and appeals to proceed during those two years that executions are halted."

Bolstered by this kind of trend in public policy, as well as new polling data showing Catholics increasingly oppose capital punishment, the U.S. bishops on March 21 kicked off Holy Week by launching a Catholic Campaign to End the Use of the Death Penalty.

The United States Conference of Catholic bishops have spoken out against the death penalty several times since the 1970s, and individual bishops and state or regional church organizations also have issued dozens of statements and pastoral letters on the topic.

In March 2004, Bishop Peter J. Jugis of Charlotte wrote a pastoral statement in support of moratorium legislation in North Carolina.

"The Holy Father, Pope John Paul II, has considered it a hopeful sign, and a testimony to society's growing recognition of the dignity of all human life that so many societies have ended the use of capital punishment all together," wrote Bishop Jugis.

"The Church's teaching on the death penalty is based on the principal that all life is sacred, made in the image and likeness of God, and that if the innocent of society can be protected from aggressors with non-lethal means, then indeed, such means are preferable to the use of lethal force," he wrote.

Recently, the bishop wrote Gov. Michael Easley of North Carolina to ask for him to sign any moratorium legislation passed by the General Assembly.

Catholic opinion

The national campaign hopes to bring "greater urgency and unity, increased energy and advocacy and a renewed call to our people and to our leaders to end the use of the death penalty in our nation," said Cardinal Theodore E. McCarrick of Washington at the press conference where the campaign was announced.

Cardinal McCarrick said the campaign will include educational efforts through schools, parishes, universities and seminaries; advocacy with Congress and state legislatures and before the courts; working to change the debate about the death penalty and challenging the notion that justice allows "an eye for an eye"; as well as prayer and reflection.

Pollster John Zogby presented data from his two recent polls showing nearly half of Catholics now oppose capital punishment, a shift of about 20 percent from polls as recent as 2001, when 68 percent of Catholics polled by CBS supported the death penalty.

He said he found the Catholics most likely to oppose the death penalty are those who go to church most frequently. Fifty-six percent of those who attend Mass at least weekly oppose the death penalty, compared to 50 percent of less frequent churchgoers, he found.

A phone survey of more than 1,700 Catholics interviewed in November 2004 found 48 percent of all Catholics supported the death penalty, and 47 percent opposed it. A follow-up survey in March of about

FROM THE COVER

CAMPAIGN, from previous page

1,000 Catholics found supporters and opponents split at 48.5 percent and 48.2 percent, respectively, Zogby said.

Broader polls done by Gallup and Quinnipiac University last fall found Americans overall supported capital punishment by 66 percent and 62 percent, respectively. Both the Gallup and Quinnipiac reports said those figures represented a decrease in support of several percentage points from the most recent previous polls.

Until recently, Catholics have tended to support capital punishment by about the same percentage rate as the general public.

Zogby said the shift in opinion among Catholics seems to be that they are hearing and taking to heart the church's teaching that fundamental respect for human life includes even those guilty of crimes. Pope John Paul II and the "Catechism of the Catholic Church" say that while the state has the right to resort to capital punishment in order to protect society, in the modern world the death penalty is unnecessary because such circumstances are essentially nonexistent.

"For us this is not about ideology but respect for life," said Cardinal McCarrick. "We cannot teach that killing is wrong by killing. We cannot defend life by taking life."

"These (Zogby) poll results demonstrate that the consistent message of our Church, that human life is sacred and worthy of protection from conception to natural death, is sinking in and being recognized as a foundational moral teaching of our Church," said Joe Purello, director of the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace.

"It's becoming impossible, for both Catholics and non-Catholics alike, to ignore the Catholic Church's prophetic stance that 'life must be chosen over death,'" he said.

Shifting momentum

John Carr, director of the bishops' Department of Social Development and World Peace, which is coordinating the campaign, said one of the factors that seems to be changing people's support for the death penalty may be that "we've been executing a lot of people and we don't feel better."

Capital punishment will eventually be gone from the United States, Carr said, but it won't be because of a single court ruling or law passed by Congress, but the combination of lots of smaller events, such as the recent Supreme Court rulings saying it is unconstitutional to execute people who are mentally retarded or who committed their crimes as juveniles.

Local initiatives

In North Carolina, the moratorium bill does not call for the end of the death penalty, according to Rep. Paul Luebke of Durham.

"On the contrary, this bill calls for a reform of a system that is in dire need of repair so death penalty supporters can have confidence it is serving its intended purpose," he said.

Stephen Dear, executive director of People of Faith Against the Death Penalty (PFADP), said momentum for a moratorium has built steadily over the last several years.

"We believed we had the votes in the House last year, but the vote did not come to the floor," said Dear. "We're hopeful that we will get a positive outcome in the House this year."

If the bill passes the House, it will be sent on to the Senate for consideration.

Concerned North Carolinians should now contact their legislators to urge their support for the bill, said Dear.

"This will not happen without people calling, visiting, and writing their legislators," he said.

"The numerous pastoral statements from Pope John Paul II and the U.S. bishops, as well as the work of countless activists in our communities and parishes advocating for life - whether for the unborn, those in hospital beds, or those on death row - are contributing to building our Church's counter-cultural message that says violence and death must not be the response to difficult challenges society and individuals face," said Purello.

"As sacred Scripture said, we 'choose life, so that we and our children may live,'" he said.

The North Carolina Coalition for a Moratorium, of which PFADP is a member, will hold a Moratorium Day on March 30 in Raleigh to give organizations, congregations and individuals an opportunity to meet with their legislators.

Those wishing to participate in Moratorium Day can find information about buses leaving from various cities in North Carolina at www.pfadp.org.

Unusual mother, remarkable child — an Easter story

When I learned the inspiring account of an unusual mother, holding the hand of her AIDS-afflicted child, traveling a Lenten journey to the cross and beyond, I knew I was immersed once more in the Easter love story.

Several years ago I saw an article in Readers' Digest by a reporter I knew from my hometown, Paul Grondahl. He told the story of Mercy Sister Mary Ann LoGuidice and her adoption of Barbara, a young child who was HIV-positive and whose mother was dying of AIDS.

Sister Mary Ann was executive director of Community Maternity Services, an agency in Albany helping pregnant teens, children with AIDS and others. With the blessing of Albany's Bishop Howard J. Hubbard and her religious community, Sister Mary Ann became Barbara's mother, caring for her nearly five years until her death from AIDS at age 8 in 1993.

The story was deeply moving, so honest about the excruciating pain and the faith struggle this nun-mother endured at the loss of her beloved child. I related.

A few years ago I sought out Grondahl to talk to him about an astounding series he had written on high-tech prisons. I asked him about Sister Mary Ann. He told me they now had collaborated on a book and that the story was being considered for a television movie.

I got their book, "That Place Called Home," and truly couldn't put it down.

At first I thought I was reading my own story. Her father, like mine, was an immigrant from southern Italy, a butcher who owned a grocery store in Albany and never sent anyone hungry away; she went to Blessed Sacrament School, the first Catholic school I attended, and to my college, the College of St. Rose.

Her big Italian family spanned 23 years, like mine, and was devoted to children. I related so strongly to her and really understood why, nurtured in love herself by family and Christ, she had become Barbara's mommy and given this beautiful child the home she yearned for.

Sister Mary Ann explained that Barbara "drifted into my world like an autumn leaf carried on the wind and transformed me, my family and a community of friends with her extraordinary life force and amazing grace."

Easter means new life — and that's what the child Barbara gave to the world in her legacy of having touched so many lives with joy. Even her physician marveled at how this child accepted her diagnosis from a place of utter faith in God's will and with remarkable courage.

Those who knew her affirmed she had an awe of life, was excited about God's gifts, from butterflies to dandelions to sunsets. She showed us "a glimpse of God."

While Sister Mary Ann is still "haunted" knowing that 8.2 million children worldwide are orphaned by AIDS-afflicted mothers, her work in human services for youth takes on a special sacredness because of Barbara.

Barbara's funeral was held in the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception, my parish, the church I practically lived in until I was married and moved away. Bishop Hubbard presided, saying, "Barbara's is truly a fantastic love story — a triumph of the human spirit and the conquest of goodness over the forces of ignorance, fear, sickness, suffering and even death."

Indeed, this is an Easter story that I pass on with joy!

More info required on stem-cell research

I was glad to see the articles "Catholics fight embryonic stem-cell research" and "Stem-cell basics explained" in the March 18 issue.

Many people are confused and misled by the national media. Although your articles covered the basics, what they did not mention were the ethical implications. People must be made aware of the ethical dimension that adds to the movement into our "culture of death" and the utilitarian use of human life.

Recently I have developed an interest in the stem-cell issue and have been amazed at the number of diseases that are being treated with adult stem cells.

Letters to the Editor

This great news is, for some reason, being suppressed in the interest of advancing a theoretical promise based on killing a human being. The ethical implications of this issue are staggering.

If pursued we can expect a co-modification and commercialization of human life, and creating a class of humans who exist only as a means to achieve the ends of others.

When we became known as 'Catholics'

Q. When and how did Catholics become known as Catholics? Why was that name chosen? What were we called before that? (Michigan)

A. The title "catholic" for the followers of Jesus Christ was first used by St. Ignatius, bishop of Antioch in Syria, who died about the year 107. In his letter to the Christians in Smyrna, on his way to martyrdom in Rome, Ignatius said that "where Jesus Christ is, there is the catholic church."

At the time, the designation "catholic" would not have referred to the Catholic Church in distinction from other Christian groups, which for all practical purposes did not yet exist. It is derived from the Greek word "katholikos," signifying general or universal, which would have been the meaning intended by Ignatius.

The term has since taken on several meanings. It is used of the universal church, as distinct from local Christian communities. It also applies to the faith of the whole church, believed everywhere and by everyone.

In the period after the final division of Eastern and Western Christianity in 1054, the church in the West tended to refer to itself as "Catholic." Those in the East usually called themselves "Orthodox" (meaning correct belief).

In more recent times, those in the East who are united to the bishop of Rome generally call themselves "Catholic" as well, while "Orthodox" is used of those not in union with Rome.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

The Protestant designation is used for those who generally base their theology and ethics in the Bible, as interpreted by the principal leaders of the Reformation in the 16th century.

We have it on the authority of St. Luke (Acts 11:26) that, also in Antioch, disciples of Jesus Christ were called "Christians" for the first time, decades before St. Ignatius introduced the word "catholic."

At least in some areas, Christianity was known as "the Way" (e.g. Acts 9:2, 19:9), implying the Christian belief that the truths revealed by Jesus were not simply a set of propositions but a way of life. Beyond that, we don't know much about how early Christians were identified.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about the sacrament of penance is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to.

Questions may be sent to Father Dietzen at Father John Dietzen, Box 3315, Peoria, Ill. 61612, or e-mail: jjdietzen@aol.com.

Those who stand with the accused

People deserve compassion, not contempt

There are plenty of high-profile court cases to weigh in on these days.

Scott Peterson was given the death penalty in the brutal murder of his wife Laci and unborn son Connor.

Martha Stewart has been released from prison and is now on home detention until August with some restricted travel allowed.

Michael Jackson is battling accusations of child molestation.

What disturbs me about these cases is what they bring out in people. Too much of it is ugly.

Peterson's half-sister Anne Bird has written a book, "Blood Brother: 33 Reasons Why My Brother Scott Peterson Is Guilty."

I've heard Stewart called unflattering names because she's spent time in jail. Even so, people with nothing better to do are rallying to walk in her shoes, trying on home-detention monitors and coveting the shawl she wore when released.

Jackson continues to be a favorite brunt of comedians and late-night talk show hosts.

I wonder: Do family members and friends loyal to defendants and convicted felons deserve the public's consideration? Are their sword-pierced hearts, their grief for what has happened to someone dear to them reasons for critics to refrain from jeers and name-calling?

I can hear one of my more cynical friends saying: "Give me a break! You mean I can't call a creep a felon or bimbo jailbird simply because his mother may be somewhere in the world listening?!! Come on!"

My answer would be, "Well, yes." For every cruel pronouncement one makes lambasting another, regardless of whether or not the other is guilty, he makes a statement about himself. He broadcasts his own lack of humility.

Humble people are well aware of their own faults, like the Good Thief crucified with Jesus. Humble people have a good idea how much they have been forgiven by the Almighty. Humble people are ever mindful that, but for the grace of God, "there go I."

No one act represents all there is to an individual, but a particularly heinous act can overshadow all good in the eyes of others. Because they've grown to love a person, family members and true friends hold out despite terrible odds for a resolution that will promote growth and continued life.

Bridging Gaps

CAROLE NORRIS GREENE

Always at Stewart's side is her daughter Alexis. Peterson's parents and others have remained present for him and were disconsolate at his sentencing. Jackson, too, is continually surrounded by his famous parents and siblings.

(I find it interesting that, while the Jacksons reportedly are Jehovah's Witnesses, it is a Christian minister, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who counsels and prays with them by phone almost daily to help diminish their anxiety before court.)

Some years ago, outside Superior Court in Washington, a friend and I saw a young woman crying her heart out. We stopped and asked her what was so wrong.

"My brother just got 40 years in jail," she wailed.

We said sincerely: "We are so very, very sorry. We'll be praying for you and your brother."

Our compassion made her stop crying for the moment. Then she disappeared into a sea of people oblivious to her heartache.

I believe people like her should matter. They deserve our compassion, not our contempt.

A tip of the hat to the youth ministers who labor long and hard in parishes across the country — some paid, some not; some full-time, some not; some young themselves, some not.

Having known a handful pretty well, however, I can venture that:

—A youth minister is someone who at times feels like he or she is doing battle with the mighty forces of culture and peer pressure with a coat-hanger sword and a smile.

—A youth minister is someone who marvels at how powerful Jesus can be when wielding a pipe-cleaner sword and a smile.

—A youth minister is someone who aches for the adolescent struggles he or she witnesses.

—A youth minister is someone who rejoices deeply when a troubled teen takes a positive turn toward maturity.

—A youth minister is someone who hurts when he or she watches a gifted youth who seems bent on squandering those gifts.

—A youth minister is someone who often is humbled by the innate wisdom of young people.

—A youth minister is someone torn by what to do with confidences shared by those in his or her care.

—A youth minister is someone who thanks God for the times she or he is able to help a youngster carry a burden.

—A youth minister is someone who sleeps with a thin blanket and socks for a pillow on a hard gym floor during a 48-hour youth ministry fast in solidarity with the poor.

—A youth minister is someone who praises God when a young person moves from feeling that Mass is an unbearable obligation to experiencing it as a joyful celebration and encounter with God.

—A youth minister is someone who enjoys challenging young minds to grasp truths, traditions and teachings that are rooted in all time.

—A youth minister is someone who comes to understand acutely the power of example.

—A youth minister is someone who is caught off guard when a parent or a pastor puts an arm around his or her shoulders and says: "You are doing a great job. We are blessed by you."

Well, youth ministers, you are. And we are.

Lost and found

Life is too short to hold grudges

"Your sister just called. She's coming home!" my mother shouted with excitement.

Oh great, I thought cynically. First she steals money and runs away, turning our parents into crazy people as they try to find her. Now she returns as if nothing happened.

To make it worse, they'll probably make a big fuss over her like she's some conquering hero returning from battle.

But I didn't say that. I just mumbled, "I'll be in my room."

"I've been here all along, and they barely notice me," I thought to myself as I skulked up the stairs. What about me? Why don't I get more attention? I tried to say that to my parents one time, but my mother just told me to read the story of the Prodigal Son.

You know, the prodigal son. That's the story about the brother who wastes his inheritance, then returns home in shame to beg for forgiveness. Instead of punishing him, however, his father throws a party. The older brother complains that he doesn't get as much attention as his troublesome kid brother, but nobody seemed to care.

It sounds like my family. I do the right things without reward while my sister gets a celebration just for showing up. Where's the fairness in that?

My sister and I were in high school. I was two years older and always had been a goody-two-shoes with glowing report cards and friends who said "please" and "thank you."

My sister was the type who loved to push the boundaries to see how much she could get away with. She hung around with people who never looked you in the eye, who smelled of smoke and didn't play sports or make it home by curfew. She was the kind of kid I didn't like. She didn't like me very much either.

It didn't start out that way. When we were little we used to play games together with the kids in the neighborhood, and we'd whisper in bed after the lights went out. But as my sister grew, so did her rebellion. It was hard to watch, especially because she seemed so unhappy.

Gradually she went her way, and I went mine. My sister's path took her down dark alleys and lonely abandoned lots, eventually leading to drug addiction and alcoholism. The thing was, the worse her situation became, the more sympathetic I was.

It wasn't till we were out of high school that I began to understand addiction and how incredibly strong its pull can be. That made it easier to stand by her when she entered drug treatment or got in trouble with the law. I guess it made me see that she was still my baby sister even though we walked vastly different roads.

Our best times together were years later when she was dying. She was clean of drugs and alcohol, so that outrageous sense of humor was back. She always made me laugh. I knew we didn't have much time left, so perhaps that softened me and made me more willing to forgive the past and try to make the best of the little time we still had.

That's what we did. Sometimes we laughed ourselves silly. Often we cried about stupid things we'd done. I forgave her for the trouble she had caused, and she forgave me for being so self-righteous.

It was long after she died that I realized what had happened. I was no longer the whiny older brother to the prodigal. I had welcomed my brother home.

KANNAPOLIS — In the first half of the 20th century, the Catholic population in North Carolina was largely a missionary group. Northern Cabarrus County Catholics, like many others in the state, had to travel for Mass, and it was partly from that need for more churches that Bishop Vincent S. Waters of Raleigh decided to establish a parish in Kannapolis.

In 1944, Bishop Waters invited the Redemptorist Fathers to begin priestly work in Kannapolis. Before that ministerial presence, locals traveled to Concord or Salisbury for liturgies. Redemptorist Father Francis Funk was named the first pastor of St. Joseph Church and was handed the task of locating a site for a church. Masses were celebrated in a private home in the meantime.

Father Funk was successful in his quest, and a building on the six-acre site was furnished as a chapel. The first Mass in the chapel was celebrated on Christmas Day, 1954. Sixteen parishioners made up the charter congregation.

With a new parish taking root in Kannapolis, Bishop Waters established a mission in Mooresville and placed it in the care of St. Joseph Church's clergy. The Kannapolis priests also ministered to Catholics at the Mecklenburg County Tuberculosis Sanitarium in Huntersville.

Tragedy struck St. Joseph Church on Holy Thursday in 1949 when a fire destroyed the chapel. While parishioners made plans to replace their church, they gathered for Masses in a funeral home chapel and school auditorium.

A military chapel on the North Carolina coast was purchased by St. Joseph Church in September 1949. The structure was transported to Kannapolis and was assembled in time for Christmas Eve midnight Mass that year. About 120 Catholics lived in Kannapolis at the time.

Diocesan clergy assumed the pastorate of St. Joseph Church and its mission, St. Therese Church in Mooresville in August 1954, interrupting for a time the Redemptorist presence. St. Therese Church gained parish status in 1956.

As Kannapolis grew, so did St. Joseph Church. Industry and businesses have added to the congregation, and a number of converts have complemented its growth as well, prompting the need for additional facilities.

A parish hall was built during the 1950s. Modular classroom space for religious education was added in the 1980s and a parish activity center was constructed in the early '90s.

In August 1969, the community of St. Joseph Church became a mission of St. James Church in Concord.

Father Alvaro Riquelme, pastor of St. Joseph Church, is a native of Chile who was raised in the United States. The predominantly Hispanic parish has a ratio of three Hispanics to one Anglo.

Father Riquelme has seen tremendous growth in the Spanish-speaking population of his parish.

"When I worked as a seminarian in this area in 1995, there was just one Spanish Mass per month with 75 people attending," he said.

By 2001, more than 500 Hispanic families were worshipping regularly at St. Joseph Church, while about 160 Anglo families were registered. St. Joseph Church now has two Spanish Masses each week with 800 to 1,000 worshippers.

One of St. Joseph Church's most active groups is the charismatic prayer group, which draws up to 100 parishioners to its weekly services.

A bilingual staff, including Father Riquelme; Josh Gilliam, youth minister; and Sylvia McGill, parish nurse, help bridge the gap between the Hispanic and Anglo parishioners.

McGill, one of only a few parish nurses in the Piedmont area, serves the growing parish by providing essential medical services and information.

With such growth, additional space for worship was required and, on Oct. 6, 2001, then-Bishop William G. Curlin dedicated a new 1,000-seat St. Joseph Church, built on the site of the small, white church that had served the parish since 1949.

Pope John Paul II was world's conscience, modern-day apostle

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II, who died April 2 at age 84, was a voice of conscience for the world and a modern-day apostle for his church.

To both roles he brought a philosopher's intellect, a pilgrim's spiritual intensity and an actor's flair for the dramatic. That combination made him one of the most forceful moral leaders of the modern age.

As head of the church for more than 26 years, he held a hard line on doctrinal issues and drew sharp limits on dissent. For many years he was a tireless evangelizer at home and abroad, but toward the end his frailty left him unable to murmur a blessing.

The first non-Italian pope in 455 years, Pope John Paul became a spiritual protagonist in two global transitions: the fall of European communism, which began in his native Poland in 1989, and the passage to the third millennium of Christianity.

CHARLOTTE — As people flock to the Vatican to bid farewell to Pope John Paul II, members of the Diocese of Charlotte are mourning their pontiff.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated Mass at St. Patrick Ca-

"Someone has asked me what direction the church will take now that the Holy Father has passed away," said Bishop Jugis. "The direction the church takes in every age is the direction of Jesus Christ."

"The church always looks to Jesus. He is the way in every era and every day of the church's life," he said.

The bishop recalled how Pope John Paul II responded when he was asked what direction

NEW TRADITIONS

Pope invented his own variety of papal customs

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — If there's anything Pope John Paul II loved more than following traditions, it was inventing new ones.

During his pontificate, the Polish-born pontiff filled his calendar with annual events of every variety: hearing confessions, baptizing babies, visiting Rome parishes or holding youth rallies, to name a few.

That's on top of the traditional papal ceremonies he inherited when elected in 1978. Only when his health and mobility seriously declined in his later years did he cut back — reluctantly — on several of these self-styled customs.

In 1980, he instituted the practice of hearing confessions in St. Peter's Basilica on Good Friday, apparently becoming the first pope in history to hear the confessions of ordinary Catholics.

The year before, he began writing an annual Holy Thursday letter to priests of the world, as a sign of his special concern for the priesthood and the burdens of pastoral ministry.

Visible presence

The pope liked to move around, and in 1979 he revived the practice of leading an Ash Wednesday procession on Rome's Aventine Hill, before placing ashes on the foreheads of cardinals, bishops and religious at the Basilica of Santa Sabina. The Lenten season "cannot pass unnoticed," he remarked during the ceremony.

For many years on March 19, feast of St. Joseph, he traveled to an Italian factory or other workplace to highlight church concerns about the world of labor.

"In some of these events and meetings, the pope wanted to be more visible," said one Vatican official, adding that the pope's presence gave events "a sense of a 'happening.'"

The pope also wanted to be seen engaged directly in pastoral action, not sitting behind a desk in his private library.

Founding Father

The events often had a sacramental character. Soon after he was elected, he began ordaining bishops in a lengthy liturgy in St. Peter's Basilica on the feast of the Epiphany. Later, he made an annual tradition of baptizing babies from around the world in a Mass marking the feast of the baptism of the Lord.

pope in 1986, has become one of the most popular international celebrations on the church calendar. Every two or three years, Pope John Paul presided over a megagathering of young people.

The pope also established the World Day of the Sick Feb. 11, feast of Our Lady of Lourdes, for which he prepared an annual message.

In 1997, he instituted a World Day of Consecrated Life, celebrated Feb. 2, feast of the Presentation of the Lord, and celebrated Mass to inaugurate it.

One of Pope John Paul's biggest innovations was his pastoral visits to Rome parishes. Pope Paul VI paid occasional visits to churches in his diocese, but this pope made it systematic, calling on more than 300 parishes. In 2002, when ailing health made such visits too cumbersome, he amended the tradition to have representatives of Rome parishes visit him at the Vatican. It was a natural choice for the Polish pope — he had visited parishes week after week as archbishop of Krakow and considered it one of the best parts of his job.

For many years, the pope also revived the custom of a Dec. 31 papal visit to a Rome church to offer a year-end "Te Deum" of thanksgiving.

Another tradition Pope John Paul brought to the Vatican was a simple one that resonated with Catholics all over the world: a Christmas tree and a Nativity scene in St. Peter's Square, just below the papal window. Like thousands of others, he visited it during the Christmas season.

Private moments

Not all the pope's new traditions were publicized, however.

On his birthday, he usually invited cardinals in Rome who were over age 80 to a lunch and some open talk about church issues. It was a sign that he appreciated their input, even though he maintained the rule excluding them from a conclave because of their age.

For many years, just after Christmas, the pope often paid a couple of barely noticed visits to two other groups: He met with garbage collectors at a small office near the Vatican and with nuns and homeless people at a shelter operated by Missionaries of Charity in the Vatican.

Small traditions — but, like the big ones, Pope John Paul made room for them on his calendar.

An estimated 1.5 million youths from 80 countries attended the first international World Youth Day. OUTSPOKEN AND REVERENT

As dominant figure on world stage, pope used his moral leadership

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II spent more than 26 years as a dominant figure on the world stage, using his moral leadership to promote human rights, condemn ethical failings and plead for peace.

He had the ear of presidents, prime ministers and kings, who came in a steady stream for private audiences at the Vatican. Although the pope's fading health in later years made these one-on-one meetings less substantive, his encounters with U.S. and Soviet leaders in the 1980s and '90s gave a spiritual impetus to the fall of European communism.

More than any previous pontiff, he pushed religious teachings into the center of public debate, arguing that universal moral norms — such as the sanctity of life — are not optional for contemporary society.

The pope's bold words and gestures won acclaim, but not from all quarters. As his pontificate wore on, his message increasingly went against conventional thinking on issues like abortion, gay marriage and genetic research.

When it came to war, the pope gave no comfort to those pressing for the use of military force.

His outspoken opposition to the U.S.-led war on Iraq in 2003 was based on the conviction that both sides should have done more to settle the dispute peacefully. He mobilized an unprecedented, though unsuccessful, diplomatic effort to help prevent hostilities and to preserve the role of the United Nations in global peacemaking.

Following the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks by extremists acting in the name of Islam, the pope led a spiritual campaign against all violence in the name of religion. He convened a meeting of Muslims, Christians, Jews and others in Assisi in early 2002; the gathering produced a joint statement against terrorism.

Fighting for life

Pro-life issues brought out a fighting spirit in the Polish-born pontiff. In 1994, for example, he challenged U.N. population planners on abortion and birth-control policies and steered an international development conference toward a moral debate on life and family issues.

Pope John Paul II addresses the United Nations in New York during his first visit to the United States in October 1979.

The pope and his aides took some flak for that. But as he aged, he seemed more determined than ever to speak his mind, applying church teaching to technical questions such as economics, biology and demographics, and prodding individual consciences on what he has called a worldwide "moral crisis."

"The Gospel of Life," his 1995 encyclical on pro-life issues that he addressed to "all people of good will" and sent to government leaders around the globe, reflected the pope's sense of resolve.

"To speak out on an issue like abortion confirms this pope's leadership in a dramatic way," said Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls. "If a pope doesn't try to awaken ethical responsibility, what is his value?"

The pope's pro-life stand also virtually excluded the death penalty, and he made frequent appeals against executions in the United States. After one dramatic plea during his visit to St. Louis in 1999, the sentence of a Missouri death-row inmate was commuted.

Global stage

During jubilee celebrations in 2000, the pope continually prodded and pressured global financial powers to forgive at least part of the Third World debt — a request that added a moral dimension to the issue and helped bring about debt relief for some of the poorest nations.

The pope conferred with presidents, stood up to tyrants and preached to crowds of more than a million people. Almost immediately after his election in 1978, he began using the world as a pulpit: decrying hunger from Africa; denouncing the arms race from Hiroshima, Japan; and promoting human equality from caste-conscious India.

As Poland's native son, he had a special interest and a key role in the demise of European communism. For years he criticized the moral bankruptcy of the system, to applause in the West. His visits to his homeland helped light the fire of reform, which eventually led to the first noncommunist government in the Soviet bloc.

In an astute political move, he cultivated an ally in Mikhail Gorbachev, whose "glasnost" policies set the stage for the breakup of the Soviet Union — and the return of religious freedom.

But the pope was also a sometimes-unwelcome critic of capitalism, warning that the profit motive alone would never bring justice and cautioning about the effects of "globalization" in the post-communist era.

Modern leadership is often a question of personal rapport, and Pope John Paul met with world figures across the spectrum. During his pontificate, every U.S. president made a pilgrimage to the Vatican, including President George W. Bush in 2001, 2002 and 2004.

The pope's door almost always was open to the world's powerful, a policy that brought controversial figures to his private library — among them Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, Cuban President Fidel Castro and former Austrian President Kurt Waldheim.

Many observers, including former U.S. ambassadors to the Vatican, said Pope John Paul's influence on world events was tremendous. They praised his political savvy, reflected less in the public realm than in behind-the-scenes efforts by Vatican diplomats.

The pope's tenure saw a near-doubling of the number of countries with which the Vatican holds diplomatic relations.

At the same time, his flair for the dramatic gesture helped make him the most-televised pontiff in history. That was a form of global influence that this pope never underestimated. Millions watched him walk through crowds of African poor or visit a shantytown family in Latin America. As the pope once said, one reason he kept returning to these places was that he knew the cameras would follow, spotlighting human problems around the globe.

Relentless efforts

The pope was a consistent critic of war and a booster of peace, and during his pontificate the Vatican issued major statements calling for disarmament. His aides successfully headed off a shooting war between Chile and Argentina in 1978.

But sometimes the pope's peace efforts went unheeded, to his bitter disappointment. That was true not only in Iraq; his warnings about conflagration in the Balkans and his horror at ethnic fighting in Africa illustrated the limits of papal influence.

When Pope John Paul first addressed the United Nations in 1979, he emphasized that harmonious international relations were deeply tied to a proper understanding of freedom and respect for moral precepts. That was a message he honed over the years, in face-to-face meetings with world leaders and in public speeches.

Returning to the United Nations in 1995, frailer but just as forceful, he again insisted that the "family of nations" must be founded on strong moral principles and warned of "unspeakable offenses against human life and freedom" in today's world.

The pope never stopped prodding the world's conscience, nor did he shy away from appealing directly to heads of state.

Visiting Cuba in 1998, he challenged Castro's government to allow freedom of expression and a wider church role in society.

In these and other interventions, the pope felt certain that he acted in the name of civilians who had little or no voice in world events.

GLOBETROTTING FOR GOD

Slowed by age, pope refused to give up world travels

BY JOHN THAVIS

CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Although slowed by age and infirmity before he died, Pope John Paul II refused to give up one of his favorite pastoral duties: traveling the globe.

Visiting 129 countries on 104 trips outside Italy, he redefined the nature of the papacy and its once-stable ministry. Earlier popes were carried on chairs at the Vatican; this one jetted around the world, taking the universal church to such out-of-the-way places as Papua New Guinea, Madagascar and Alaska.

Averaging four major trips a year, the pope logged more than 700,000 miles and spent about 6 percent of his papacy outside the Vatican and Italy.

Every year his aides told him to slow down — and every year the pontiff penciled in more trips. In 2002, despite summer heat and declining health, the pope crisscrossed North and Central America for 11 days to meet with youths in Toronto and canonize saints in Guatemala and Mexico.

Perhaps the most personally satisfying trip was his Holy Year 2000 pilgrimage to biblical lands, which began in Egypt with a visit to Mount Sinai and continued with stops in Jordan, Israel and the Palestinian territories. The pope walked in the footsteps of Christ and the Apostles and made a historic visit in Jerusalem to the Western Wall, Judaism's holiest place.

A year later, extending his biblical pilgrimage, he made unprecedented papal stops in Greece and Syria, meeting with Orthodox in Athens and visiting a mosque in Damascus, Syria.

Even when his failing health made it difficult for him to walk and speak, the pope plowed ahead with trips to out-of-the-way places like Azerbaijan and Bulgaria, where he was pushed on a wheeled platform and lowered from airplanes on a modified cargo lift. In 2004, when he no longer could walk, he visited Switzerland and Lourdes, France.

Around and back again

From the beginning, Pope John Paul made it clear he enjoyed being out of the Vatican and mingling with the faithful. He treated reporters to unprecedented flying news conferences, strolling through the press section of his plane and fielding dozens of questions.

Asked about his globe-trotting papacy in 1983, he replied: "Yes, I am convinced ... that I am traveling too much, but sometimes it is necessary to do something of what is too much."

On other occasions, he said simply, "I must visit my people."

His top aides said the pontiff aimed to strengthen the links between the church in Rome and particular church communities around the globe. From the mountains of Peru to the plains of India, he spoke the local languages, gave pep talks to local pastoral workers and canonized local saints.

His speeches, sermons and liturgies often were televised in the host countries, giving him a unique opportunity to evangelize and stand up publicly for minority Catholics.

Some of his warmest receptions came in Africa, a continent where his 14 visits helped spur a period of tremendous growth for the church. He once told reporters he kept returning to Africa in order to bring the journalistic spotlight to its sufferings. A crowd in Burkina Faso held up a banner in 1990 that welcomed him as "a great friend."

In a 1980 trip to Latin America, he underscored the church's commitment to the poor by walking into a shack in a Rio de Janeiro slum and chatting with the residents. Moments earlier, in a spontaneous gesture, he had taken off his gold papal ring and offered it to the poverty-stricken local parish.

He visited with victims of Hansen's disease in Guinea-Bissau and blessed young AIDS sufferers in Uganda and the United States. These stops provided rare glimpses of papal emotion, and his hugs for the sick were often front-page pictures in newspapers around the world.

The pope's seven trips to the United States featured festive celebrations and emotional highlights, such as the time he met the 375,000 young people who visited Denver in 1993 for World Youth Day.

The pontiff and politics

From a pastoral point of view, some of his toughest trips were in Europe, a continent the pope declared in need of re-evangelization. In places like the Netherlands in 1985, he got an earful from Catholics unhappy with church positions on issues such as birth control and priestly celibacy.

International politics sometimes colored Pope John Paul's travels. In Nicaragua in 1983, the pope tried to shout down Sandinista activists who began chanting political slogans during a Mass. In Haiti on the same trip, he delivered a stern rebuke to dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier, who eventually was forced out of office.

In his native Poland, the pope's early visits — which drew massive, politically energized crowds — were credited by many for re-igniting the pro-democracy movement that broke the communist hold on power in 1989.

During his 1998 visit to Cuba, one of the last bastions of communism, he strongly defended civil and church freedoms and said he hoped the visit would bear the same fruits as his Polish trips.

Yet even after the fall of European communism, invisible walls kept Pope John Paul from visiting his flock in several places. At the top of the list was Russia, where Orthodox leaders kept saying the time was not ripe, and China, where the government refused to recognize the pope's authoritative role.

Whether in Muslim Morocco, Buddhist Japan or Catholic Spain, the pope pushed a simple message through his words and presence: that the Gospel is not out of place in any country.

PAPAL TRAVELS

In U.S. visits, pope urged Catholics to use freedom responsibly

BY CAROL ZIMMERMAN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — In Pope John Paul II's seven visits to the United States, he continually urged Catholics to use their freedom responsibly and to preserve the sacredness and value of human life.

In football stadiums in New York and California, a Hispanic barrio in Texas, a historic farm in Iowa and dozens of cathedrals, the pope challenged Americans to rediscover their country's religious roots, which sought to guarantee individual freedom and human dignity.

He frequently quoted long-standing icons of American culture, including the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, words of Thomas Jefferson, the Pledge of Allegiance, and even the song "America the Beautiful."

During his September 1987 visit to South Carolina, he praised the American tradition of freedom, but called on Americans not to lose sight of freedom's "true meaning."

"America: You cannot insist on the right to choose without also insisting on the duty to choose well, the duty to choose in truth," he said at an ecumenical service that drew 65,000 people to Williams-Brice Stadium in Columbia, S.C.

Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro, and David Hains, director of communications for the Diocese of Charlotte, were television commentators during the pope's visit.

Challenging changes

The pope first came to the United States in 1979, visiting Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Washington and Des Moines, Iowa.

He met with church and civic leaders, including President Jimmy Carter at the White House, but he also took the time to personally greet many of the thousands who flocked to the sidelines, hoping for a handshake or even just a glimpse of him.

But the pope's first U.S. visit also was not without tension. During the last day of his trip he met with about 7,000 women religious in Washington and was challenged by one of them to expand women's role in the church.

Although the pope had stopovers in Alaska in 1981 and 1984, his next major visit to the United States was not until 1987, when he visited Columbia, S.C., Miami; New Orleans; San Antonio; Phoenix; Los Angeles; Monterey and Carmel, Calif.; San Francisco; and Detroit.

That year, the pope told Americans at a departure ceremony at the Detroit Metropolitan Airport: "The ultimate test of your greatness is the way you treat every human being, but especially the weakest and most defenseless ones."

During a visit in 1995, the pope reminded his listeners at Giants Stadium in New Jersey not to forget the words emblazoned on the base of the statue, symbolizing the nation's initial willingness to care for the poor and immigrant.

"Is present day America becoming less sensitive, less caring toward the poor, the weak, the stranger, the needy?" he asked.

And with a challenging response to his own question, he replied, "It must not."

Meeting the masses

He not only spoke to huge crowds, but addressed smaller groups of religious leaders, black Catholics, Native Americans, Catholic educators and Catholic health care workers.

In Los Angeles, he noted that many Catholics "are selective in their adherence to" church moral teachings. He said it was wrong to think that dissent poses no obstacle to Catholic participation in the sacraments.

In San Francisco, the pope ignored the conventional wisdom of the day to reach out and touch AIDS patients, shaking their hands and embracing a 4-year-old boy who had contracted the deadly disease through a blood transfusion shortly after birth.

At World Youth Day in Denver in 1993, the pope spoke to hundreds of thousands of young people and encouraged them to bring Christ to the world.

"At this stage of history, the liberating message of the Gospel of life has been put into your hands," he told them.

During his three-day stay in Denver, the pope also met with President Bill Clinton.

In 1995, in a visit just to the East Coast, the pope stopped in New York City; Brooklyn, N.Y.; Baltimore and Newark, N.J. He celebrated Mass in New York's Central Park and various sports stadiums, including a racetrack in Queens.

In a formal talk to the U.N. General Assembly and in off-the-cuff remarks to schoolchildren, the pope urged people to work and pray for peace.

He also took an unexpected detour down Fifth Avenue to greet the throngs of people eager to see the pontiff up close.

Spreading the light

In a prayer service in Newark the pope thanked God for the "extraordinary human epic that is the United States." And before leaving, he again urged Catholics to "love life, cherish life, defend life, from conception to natural death."

The pope returned to the United States in 1999 for a pastoral visit to St. Louis.

In his 31-hour stay in the country's heartland, the pope met Mark McGwire, home run champion for the St. Louis Cardinals, prior to leading a prayer service for youth in the city's hockey arena. The next day he celebrated Mass at an enclosed football stadium for 120,000 people in what has been described as the largest indoor Mass in the country.

He challenged young people not to delay living out their faith.

"You are ready for what Christ wants of you now. He wants you — all of you — to be light to the world," he told them.

He strongly urged American Catholics to be "unconditionally pro-life" in taking stands against abortion, euthanasia and assisted suicide, capital punishment and racism.

In usual fashion, he also urged St. Louis Catholics to take up a renewed spirit of their "one nation, under God, with liberty and justice for all."

Pope John Paul II looked closely at role of women in church

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — In authoritative theological documents and in heartfelt pastoral letters, Pope John Paul II looked at the role of women in the church and in the world more closely than any other pope in modern history.

On topics as diverse as the priesthood, motherhood, abortion, work, religious life and peacemaking, women were a recurring and often controversial subject for the pope.

During his more than 26-year pontificate, as women consolidated their place in some of the highest echelons of temporal power, the pope and the Catholic Church were the objects of continuous criticism about the status of women in the church.

The issue of women and the priesthood generated discussion and dissent within the Catholic Church and became a major ecumenical stumbling block when some churches in the Anglican Communion began ordaining women.

Nevertheless, during Pope John Paul's pontificate, women took over pastoral and administrative duties in priestless parishes, they were appointed chancellors of dioceses around the world and they began swelling the ranks of "experts" at Vatican synods and symposiums.

In 2004, for the first time, the pope appointed two women theologians to the prestigious International Theological Commission and named a female Harvard University law professor to be president of the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences.

Equal and different

While defending women's rights and their "equal dignity" with men, the pope also highlighted the ways women are and should be different from men.

Women and men have complementary natures, he taught, and their "diversity of roles" in the church and in the family are a reflection of that reality.

The pope's teaching on complementarity formed the basis for the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith's 2004 document on male-female collaboration in the church and society. Describing discrimination against women and male-female rivalry as results of sin, the document said the differences between the sexes are part of God's plan for creation — not social constructs — and that church and society benefit when the gifts of both are recognized.

While decrying discrimination against women and urging their promotion in all spheres of community and social life, the pope unequivocally reaffirmed the teaching that the church cannot ordain them to the priesthood.

'The Dignity of Women'

The basic elements of his teaching on women are found in his 1988 apostolic letter, "Mulieris Dignitatem" ("The Dignity of Women"), his 1994 apostolic letter, "On Reserving Priestly Ordination to Men Alone," and his 1995 "Letter to Women."

But his thoughts on women also could be found in significant segments of his weekly general audience series on sexuality and on the structure of the church, his 1988 apostolic exhortation on the laity, his 1995 message for World Peace Day, and his messages to the leaders of the U.N. conferences on population and on women.

Even one of his annual heart-to-heart letters to the world's priests dwelt on the topic of women — mothers, sisters and friends — in the lives of priests.

The starting point of "Mulieris Dignitatem" was what Scripture had to say about women, especially Eve and Mary, and Christ's attitude toward women in the New Testament.

In the letter, the pope argued against outdated cultural views that God meant women to be subject to men. Both were created in God's image and likeness with equal dignity, he said.

The fact that God chose a woman, the Virgin Mary, to play such an important role in the world's salvation leaves little doubt about the God-given dignity of women, the pope wrote.

In his 1994 apostolic letter on ordination, Pope John Paul said the church's ban on women priests is definitive and not open to debate among Catholics.

The all-male priesthood, he wrote, does not represent discrimination against women, but fidelity to Christ's actions and his plan for the church.

The pope's document reaffirmed the basis for ordaining only men: Christ chose only men to be his Apostles, it has been the constant practice of the Catholic and Orthodox churches, and the magisterium's teaching on the matter has been consistent.

Working for change

Pope John Paul took his teaching directly to the world's women in a 1995 letter in which he thanked them for all they have done, apologized for the church's failure to always recognize their contributions and condemned the "long and degrading history" of sexual violence against women.

Evaluating the women's liberation movement as being generally positive, the pope called for changes to make women's equality a reality in the world. He called for equal pay for equal work, protection for working mothers and fairness in career advancement.

But he also mentioned a growing concern in his thinking and teaching: a belief that modern societies were denigrating motherhood and penalizing women who chose to have children.

While the pope carefully avoided discussing women exclusively in terms of their possible roles as virgins or mothers, he exalted the virtues of both.

He repeatedly pointed to women's potential as bearers of life as part of the "feminine genius" that the world so desperately needs as it struggles against the "culture of death" marked by war, abortion and euthanasia.

During his papacy, pope published 14 encyclical letters

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II published 14 encyclical letters:

1. "Redemptor Hominis" ("The Redeemer of Man"), 1979: On Jesus Christ and the dignity his redemption brings to the human race.

2. "Dives in Misericordia" ("Rich in Mercy"), 1980: On God the Father and the meaning of God's mercy.

3. "Laborem Exercens" ("On Human Work"), 1981: Social encyclical on workers' rights and dignity marking the 90th anniversary of Pope Leo XIII's encyclical "Rerum Novarum."

5. "Dominum et Vivificantem" ("Lord and Giver of Life"), 1986: On the living presence of the Holy Spirit in the church and the world.

6. "Redemptoris Mater" ("Mother of the Redeemer"), 1987: On Mary's role in the mystery of Christ and in the church.

7. "Sollicitudo Rei Socialis" ("On Social Concerns"), 1987: Second social encyclical, marking 20th anniversary of Pope Paul VI's social encyclical "Populorum Progressio."

8. "Redemptoris Missio" ("The Mission of the Redeemer"), 1991: On spreading the Gospel as the central and permanent mandate of the church.

9. "Centesimus Annus" ("The Hundredth Year"), 1991: Third social encyclical, analyzing the social situation in the light of communism's collapse on the 100th anniversary of "Rerum Novarum."

10. "Veritatis Splendor" ("The Splendor of Truth"), 1993: First papal encyclical in history on the foundations of moral theology.

11. "Evangelium Vitae" ("The Gospel of Life"), 1995: On abortion, euthanasia, embryonic experiments and other threats to human life, its sacredness and dignity.

12. "Ut Unum Sint" ("That All May Be One"), 1995: On the importance of striving for Christian unity.

13. "Fides et Ratio" ("Faith and Reason"), 1998: On philosophy.

14. "Ecclesia de Eucharistia," 2003: On the Eucharist in its relationship to the church.

History may see pope as catalyst of communism's demise

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — In the view of many political commentators, history will best remember Pope John Paul II as the spiritual godfather of communism's demise.

Although he refused to claim personal credit for the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe and its decline elsewhere around the globe, the pope was keenly aware that his moral prodding — especially in his native Poland — helped redraw the ideological map in the late 20th century.

"I think the crucial role was played by Christianity itself: its content, its religious and moral message, its intrinsic defense of the human person. All I did was recall this, repeat it and insist on it," the pope said in a 1993 interview.

His election in 1978 as the first pope from behind the Iron Curtain immediately sparked interest in Washington and apprehension in Moscow, two poles of a renewed Cold War.

For decades the Vatican had followed a policy of quiet negotiation with communist regimes, in order to win realistic concessions on religious rights. Many thought the new pope would throw out this "Ostpolitik" in favor of more aggressive approach.

But in the end, Pope John Paul made "Ostpolitik" his own. He kept up the quiet negotiations, but in documents and speeches around the world he began making not-so-quiet pronouncements about communist ideology and practice.

In 1984, for example, the pope publicly criticized Moscow for not letting him go to Lithuania for religious celebrations. The same year, a Vatican document approved by the pope referred to communist regimes as the "shame of our time."

The real testing ground of East European freedom was Poland. When the pope visited his homeland in 1979, he helped ignite a sense of spiritual purpose that nurtured the political hopes of the Solidarity labor movement. After martial law was imposed and Solidarity outlawed, the pope returned to a discouraged nation in 1983, but in talk after talk raised the country's morale and political resolve.

Back once again in 1987, he repeatedly praised the original Solidarity ideals, hammered the government's labor record, called for religious freedom and said Marxism had lost credibility.

"Save your strength for the future," he told a crowd of millions in Gdansk, where the pro-democracy movement had begun.

Two years later, a revived Solidarity swept to political power in historic free elections, and European communism unraveled.

Crowds cheer in the streets of Warsaw, Poland, on June 4, 1979, waiting for the arrival of Pope John Paul II on his first visit to Poland as pope. The pontiff's visits gave energy to the Polish people and helped to eventually topple communism in Poland.

From 1980 onward, the United States sent high-level officials to brief the pope about Soviet policies in Poland and elsewhere. The Vatican never denied that these meetings took place, but denied the claim of a U.S.-Vatican "holy alliance" to thwart communism.

In fact, when the first big cracks appeared in the European communist facade, the pope turned East, not West, for help. His overtures to Soviet reformer Mikhail Gorbachev culminated in their historic meeting at the Vatican in 1989 and led to the restoration of church rights throughout the Soviet bloc.

When the Soviet Union disintegrated, the Vatican took advantage of the situation by quickly establishing diplomatic relations with the newly independent countries. As the pope remarked, it was clear that Marxist ideology was "completely exhausted."

A key part of the pope's strategy was to encourage communist countries to sign human rights accords, then insist that they live up to them. The Vatican, for example, repeatedly invoked the Helsinki Agreement and the 1989 Vienna follow-up accords when discussing the human rights situation in Eastern Europe.

Another factor working for the pope was that the Vatican's "blessing" was important to countries seeking economic and political favor in the West. As communist ideology weakened, the regimes sometimes advertised their more liberal approach by offering concessions on religious freedom.

The pope adopted the same strategy during his historic pastoral visit to Cuba in 1998, encouraging President Fidel Castro to make political and religious reforms while urging the international community to stop isolating the Caribbean nation.

While much of the world was caught off-balance by the rapid disintegration of communism, the Vatican seemed better prepared. The pope spoke the languages of many of the region's people, and that made a huge difference.

The pope realized that the moral victory over communism marked the start of a delicate reorganizational phase for the church and its pastoral mission. In the space of a decade, he called two special synods for Europe to discuss evangelization plans in the wake of the Soviet collapse and emphasized that the demoralizing effects of a half-century of communism could not be erased overnight.

He also rejected ideological triumphalism. Rather than dance on communism's grave, he preferred to warn that unchecked capitalism held its own dangers — especially in the countries emerging from Marxist shadows.

He made a point to visit 18 former Soviet republics or satellites in the years before his death.

POPE'S DEATH BRINGS UNPRECEDENTED OUTPOURING OF JEWISH THANKS, PRAISE

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The April 2 death of Pope John Paul II brought an unprecedented outpouring of condolences, praise and blessing from religious leaders of the Jewish community.

Their comments indicated how deeply Catholic-Jewish relations have been affected worldwide by the Catholic Church's first Polish pope — who as a youth personally experienced the tragedy of the Nazi Holocaust of the Jewish people in World War II and as pope transformed that experience into an intense Catholic theological reflection on God's eternal covenant with Jews and the sinfulness of Christian anti-Semitism.

Many consider what Pope John Paul II did to advance reconciliation between Catholics and Jews as one of the hallmarks of his papacy. Four moments stand out particularly for their symbolism:

— 1979. In Poland, he prayed at the Auschwitz concentration camp. He paused at the Hebrew inscription commemorating the Jews killed there and said, "It is not permissible for anyone to pass by this inscription with indifference."

— 1986. He went to a Rome synagogue to pray with the city's Jewish community. Noting Christianity's unique bond with Judaism, he said, "You are our beloved brothers ... you are our elder brothers" in the faith of Abraham.

— 1994. He attended a Vatican-hosted concert commemorating the Holocaust, Hitler's World War II effort to exterminate all Jews.

— 2000. After meditating at Jerusalem's Western Wall, he placed in the wall a written prayer to God expressing deep sadness for all wrongs done to Jews by Christians. It ended, "Asking your forgiveness, we wish to commit ourselves to genuine brotherhood with the people of the Covenant."

Under Pope John Paul, the Vatican published guidelines on how Catholics should teach and preach about Jews and Judaism and issued a major document on the Holocaust that expressed repentance for the Christians' failure to oppose the persecution of Jews.

In 1985, the pope went to the Great Synagogue of Rome. It was believed to be the first time since Peter that a pope had entered the Rome synagogue, and symbolically it marked a watershed in Catholic-Jewish relations.

During his jubilee pilgrimage to the Holy Land, the sight of the aging, stooped pope praying as he pressed a trembling hand against the ancient stones of the Western Wall struck a chord with Jews around the world.

At the pope's urging, the Vatican established diplomatic relations with Israel in 1994.

the church might take with his pontificate.

"We can do no more than the Holy Father did from the beginning of his pontificate in 1978 than to look to Jesus for direction, for wisdom, for comfort," said Bishop Jugis. "Jesus Christ is the way for the church and also the way for humanity."

As prayers and Masses were being scheduled and offered for the pope in all 92 parishes and missions of the Diocese of Charlotte, Bishop Jugis asked "all people of good will to join in prayer at this time."

Bishop Jugis studied for the priesthood in Rome and was ordained by Pope John Paul II in St. Peter's Basilica in 1983. Bishop Jugis has traveled twice to the Vatican since becoming bishop in 2003. During his 2004 "ad limina" visit, the bishop had a private audience with the pope.

"I came away from the meeting awed and humbled," said Bishop Jugis. "It was a very holy moment."

"For 26 years, the Holy Father has shepherded the church with great wisdom," said the bishop. "His faith and confidence in Christ have inspired countless numbers of people around the world to a deeper love for God. His zeal to make Christ known has taken him to all areas of the globe."

The pope visited the United States seven times. Msgr. Anthony Marcaccio, pastor of St. Pius X Church in Greensboro, recalled the crowd's reaction to the pope during his visit in Baltimore, Md.

"The whole place went to its feet, wild with anticipation, knowing the liturgy was about to begin," said Msgr. Marcaccio.

"The people's sentiment for their shepherd is hard to describe — somewhere just short of an electric shock," he said. "Their love and affection so permeated the stadium that we all felt very much 'alive.'"

Msgr. Marcaccio also accompanied Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin on his "ad limina" visit to the Vatican in the 1990s.

"I'll never forget the intimacy of that moment with the Holy Father and Bishop Curlin," said Msgr. Marcaccio.

During the visit, Bishop Curlin mentioned the monsignor's mother had been diagnosed with cancer.

"Then the Holy Father made the sign of the cross on my forehead and, with the utmost paternal affection, held my face and pronounced he would pray for my mother," said Msgr. Marcaccio. "His tenderness at that moment, in the midst of a busy schedule, had a profound impact on me."

"During my years as a bishop, I was fortunate to have had several private meetings with Pope John Paul," said Bishop Curlin. "He was always concerned with the pastoral information offered to him."

"What a privilege to have occasions to concelebrate Mass with him in his private chapel in the Vatican," said Bishop Curlin. "He was totally absorbed in his awareness of the presence of the Lord in the Eucharist."

"One of my cherished memories was to be privileged to be able to celebrate Mass with the Holy Father and one other priest, and then to proclaim the Gospel to the pope," said Father James Hawker, pastor of St. Luke Church in Mint Hill and vicar for education in the Diocese of Charlotte.

In the early 1990s, Father Hawker was a consultant to the Vatican Congregation for Clergy and traveled to the Vatican several times. He concelebrated Mass with Pope John Paul II three times.

"It was quite an experience to talk with him," said Father Hawker. "As a man of deep spirituality and enviable scholarship, he reflected the mind and the heart of the Lord Jesus. He was a magnificent witness; truly a witness of hope who lived his commitment to the Gospel of Life."

Father Hawker vividly recalled the pope's 1979 visit to Boston, where he spoke to the youths during a heavy rainfall and offered them the "option" of Jesus Christ.

"For the pope, Jesus was the only option — Jesus was the way, the truth and the life," said Father Hawker. "But in the culture, in today's society ... he was speaking to young people within the context of their living of life. And it was a powerful homily, especially in the pouring rain."

"He has encouraged and enlivened the youth to take their place of responsibility," said Father Roger Arnsparger, pastor of St. Barnabas Church in Arden.

Father Arnsparger traveled to the Vatican to be present at the pope's funeral.

The pope's death, he said, means for the Catholic Church "a greater understanding of the holiness of life and the holiness of death."

"It teaches us to place our eternal life at the top of our priorities," he said. "It teaches us that God will continue to lead us to eternal life as the next pope takes the place of service to the church."

Bishop Jugis decided to celebrate three observances to "pray for the repose of the soul of the Holy Father" — Masses at the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville April 7 and St. Patrick Cathedral April 8 and solemn vespers at St. Patrick Cathedral April 10.

"We ask Our Lord Jesus Christ to grant to our beloved Pope John Paul II the reward of everlasting life promised to all His faithful servants," he said.

Statements from area bishops on pope

The Catholic Church has lost a most faithful pastor and teacher with the death of Pope John Paul II.

For more than 26 years, his was a voice of clarity and constancy in proclaiming the Gospel of Jesus Christ, in calling humanity to live in and to work for peace, in challenging the men and women of our world to both recognize our dignity as children of God and to promote the inalienable rights that flow from that human dignity from conception to natural death.

He visited and encountered more people in his missionary outreach than all of his predecessors combined. He was a giant in the religious world and his passing brings great sorrow to the hearts of all Catholics.

— Archbishop Wilton D. Gregory of Atlanta

Pope John Paul II has often been acknowledged as one of the most influential leaders in the 20th century. He played a major role in the fall of communism. Millions have seen and heard him preaching the Gospel during his worldwide pilgrimages. His defense of the sanctity of all human life has proven a light in a world darkened by the culture of death.

His death fills my heart with memories of this good and holy priest of God. May the Lord grant him eternal peace and joy. And may the Holy Virgin, so dearly loved by Pope John Paul, welcome him into the company of the blessed in heaven.

— Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin of Charlotte

To the world's billion Catholics, he was a shepherd, their Holy Father.

He was the voice of conscience on moral and ethical issues: war, the death penalty, abortion and euthanasia. Having lived under two totalitarian governments, fascism and communism, he never stopped speaking out on behalf of the millions of people who never have a voice in global affairs.

Increasingly he emphasized in his writings and pronouncements the power of prayer and his conviction that personal holiness can change the world. Above all he felt called to be the servant of the Gospel for the hope of the world.

He was never more faithful to his calling than by the witness of his own life. He inspired the whole world to see the dignity and worth of all human beings, especially those challenged by sickness, infirmity, suffering and age. With patience, fidelity and serenity he showed us how to rest our hope for our ultimate triumph over death and suffering in the eternal and unconditional mercy and love of God.

— Bishop Joseph Gossman of Raleigh

He will be remembered as the man who almost single-handedly toppled communism, especially in his native Poland. He was always concerned with the rights and dignity of the human person. He was also a promoter of peace, a peace brought about by dialogue, not by military power.

Pope John Paul II was a moral leader for the ages. That was what attracted so many young people to this man, even in his 80s, when he was crippled with illness. He said what he meant and he meant what he said. Young people sensed that the advice he gave them was intended to help them live happy, productive lives.

Even as his health and mobility declined, Pope John Paul continued a rigorous schedule. As he entered his final illness, he was determined to demonstrate the value of suffering when it is placed within the context of how Christ suffered for us.

He was a man of vast accomplishments. But perhaps he will be best remembered as a man of prayer and as someone who ardently promoted the dignity of the human person.

— Bishop J. Kevin Boland of Savannah

Today we mourn the passing of this great and holy man, our spiritual leader representing Jesus Christ on earth, our Holy Father. And we also celebrate his life, a life of love, of witness to the hope and truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

He was unstoppable, a man of great spiritual energy, even in time of serious illness. In the face of two bullets from an assassin, in the face of arthritis and Parkinson's disease, he still felt compelled to travel to various parts of the world. He suffered tremendously, but always linked his sufferings with the sufferings of the Lord.

As one takes to heart the words of the pope, one can begin to understand the reason behind the greatness of Pope John Paul II, his life, his suffering, and his death.

North Carolinians recall Pope John Paul II

"My greatest respect for Pope John Paul II was his interest in the values and ideals of youth. I have had the fortunate opportunity to meet several politicians, entertainers and actors, but meeting him surely has been a highlight of my life.

"My grandmother died the following year (after I met the pope) and I had the rosary that I was handed by him placed in her hand so that she could be buried with it. I was told that I would later regret it, but I have the memory of meeting him, and my grandmother has the gift that he gave me."

— David Bradin, 1995 graduate of Charlotte Catholic High School

"Pope John Paul II was a very holy and prayerful man. You cannot help but feel the essence of the holiness just being around him.

"Two of Pope John Paul II's greatest legacies for the Catholic Church are the gift he has given us of enduring pain and his acknowledgement of the youth.

"Pope John Paul II was loved by everyone. He has given the world an image of not only what religion should be in an individual's life as it is practiced, but how religion is practiced by someone who is a leader in the world."

— Deacon Ben Wenning, director of permanent diaconate for Diocese of Charlotte

"I wouldn't have traded the experience of seeing Pope John Paul II for anything ... being in his presence was amazing. I still get choked up thinking about it."

— Amy Blakley, director of religious education, St. Stephen Church in Elkin.

"Never have I witnessed the outpouring of love, devotion and affection of such enormous crowds as everywhere Pope John Paul II was seen.

"When the pope entered the room ... it appeared that he was surrounded by a special light, but it was the radiance of his face that caused that effect. I will cherish that memory forever."

— Peggy Wesp, executive director, Charlotte Sister Cities

"I traveled to Rome in 2000 for a short Jubilee pilgrimage with a friend from church. After visiting St. Peter's, we stopped in the gift shop. We had not been there long when suddenly the sister announced they had to close quickly for security because the pope was coming by to speak to a special group of pilgrims visiting. Sister told us to go in and get a seat and we could see him.

It was such an unexpected privilege and blessing! I will never forget that most very special day to be so close in the Holy Father's presence."

— Gina Parsons, finance accounts payable, Diocese of Charlotte

"I remember how awestruck each member of our group was to be in Pope John Paul II's presence. He was a busy man but still took the time to ask us where we were from and what we were studying before blessing the group.

"Although our encounter lasted just moments, he left a lasting impression on me. I feel privileged to have had the opportunity to meet and to shake the hand of the Holy Father.

"My meeting with Pope John Paul II was one of the most amazing encounters of my life. I can recall my excitement the night before, when we learned of our audience the following day. I'm not sure

Every five years, bishops from around the world are required to make "ad limina" visits to the Vatican to report on the status of their respective dioceses. The "ad limina" visits bring the entire U.S. episcopate, including bishops from the Diocese of Charlotte, to Rome in 14 regional groups.

During the last round of "ad limina" visits, which began in March 2004 and ended in mid-December, U.S. bishops spent more time meeting than praying, but the mood of the visit was set by the concelebrated Masses and individual time with Pope John Paul II.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis, making his first "ad limina" visit in late March 2004, shortly after his ordination, said he was "very much in awe" at being alone with Pope John Paul II, but described the meeting as a "very human exchange and conversation."

FAREWELL, PONTIFF

Pope John Paul II

Leader of Roman Catholics around the world, this then little-known Polish Cardinal was elected in 1978. Since then, he oversaw the first revision to the Catholic catechism in 462 years, maintained a conservative stance for the church, and worked to improve relations with other faiths. The world's most traveled Pope, he will be missed by millions.

ism, and the pope convened interfaith leaders to renounce violence in the name of religion. While condemning terrorist attacks, he urged the United States to respond with restraint, and he sharply criticized the U.S.-led war against Iraq in 2003.

As pastor of the universal church, he jetted around the world, taking his message to 129 countries in 104 trips — including seven to the United States. He surprised and pleased millions by communicating with them in their own languages, until his own powers of speech faltered toward the end of his life.

At times, he used the world as a pulpit: in Africa, to decry hunger; in Hiroshima, Japan, to denounce the arms race; in Calcutta, India, to praise the generosity of Mother Teresa. Whether at home or on the road, he aimed to be the church's most active evangelizer, trying to open every corner of human society to Christian values.

Within the church, the pope was just as vigorous and no less controversial. He disciplined dissenting theologians, excommunicated self-styled "traditionalists," and upheld unpopular church positions like the pronouncement against artificial birth control.

At the same time, he pushed Catholic social teaching into relatively new areas such as bioethics, international economics, racism and ecology.

Pushing forward

In his later years, the pope moved with difficulty and tired easily, all symptoms of a nervous system disorder believed to be Parkinson's disease.

By the time he celebrated his 25th anniversary in October 2003, aides had to wheel him on a chair and read his speeches for him. Yet he pushed himself to the limits of his physical capabilities, convinced that such suffering was itself a form of spiritual leadership.

He led the church through a heavy program of soul-searching events during the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000, fulfilling a dream of his pontificate. His long-awaited pilgrimage to the Holy Land that year took him to the roots of the faith and illustrated the church's improved relations with Jews.

He also presided over an unprecedented public apology for the sins of Christians during darker chapters of church history, such as the Inquisition and the Crusades.

In a landmark document, the apostolic letter "Novo Millennio Ineunte" ("At the Beginning of the New Millennium"), the pope laid out his vision of the church's future and called for a "new sense of mission" to bring Gospel values into every area of social and economic life.

Over the years, public reaction to the pope's message and decisions was mixed. He was hailed as a daring social critic, chided as the "last socialist," cheered by millions and caricatured as an inquisitor. The pope never paid much attention to his popularity ratings.

Pope John Paul's personality was powerful and complicated. In his prime, he could work a crowd and banter with young and old, but spontaneity was not his specialty. As a manager, he set directions but often left policy details to top aides.

His reaction to the U.S. clerical sex abuse scandal in 2001-02 underscored his governing style: He suffered deeply, prayed at length and made forceful statements emphasizing the gravity of such a sin by priests.

He convened a Vatican-U.S. summit to address the problem, but let his Vatican advisers and U.S. church leaders work out the answers. In the end, he approved changes that made it easier to defrock abusive priests.

The pope was essentially a private person, with a deep spiritual life — something that was not easily translated by the media. Yet his pontificate has been captured in some lasting images. Who can forget the pope wagging his finger sternly at a Sandinista priest in Nicaragua, hugging a young AIDS victim in California or huddling in a prison-cell conversation with his would-be assassin, Mehmet Ali Agca?

From Krakow to the Vatican

Karol Jozef Wojtyla was born May 18, 1920, in Wadowice, a small town near Krakow, Poland. He had lost both parents and only brother by age 20. Even at a young age, he was deeply religious and contemplative.

An accomplished actor in Krakow's underground theater during the war, he joined the clandestine seminary after being turned away from a Carmelite monastery with the advice: "You are destined for greater things."

Following studies in Rome, he returned to Poland for parish work in 1948. When named auxiliary bishop of Krakow in 1958 he was Poland's youngest bishop, and he rose quickly through the ranks, becoming archbishop of Krakow in 1964.

He also came to the attention of the universal church through his work on important documents of the Second Vatican Council.

Though increasingly respected in Rome, Cardinal Wojtyla was a virtual unknown when elected pope Oct. 16, 1978. In St. Peter's Square that night, he set his papal style in a heartfelt talk — delivered in fluent Italian.

The pontificate began at a cyclone pace, with trips to several continents, flying press conferences, an encyclical on redemption, an ecumenical visit to the Orthodox in Turkey and several meetings with world leaders.

On May 13, 1981, a Turkish terrorist's bullet put his papacy on hold for several months. The assailant served 19 years in an Italian prison before being sent back to Turkey. He once claimed Bulgarian and Soviet involvement — charges that were never proved in a second trial.

Setting milestones

The pope was soon back on the road, eventually logging more than 700,000 miles. His 14 visits to Africa were part of a successful strategy of church expansion there; in Latin America he aimed to curb political activism by clergy and the inroads made by religious sects.

Despite misgivings inside and outside the church over specific papal teachings, he was warmly welcomed in the United States, where he drew half a million young pilgrims in 1993 for World Youth Day festivities in Denver.

But he also used one of his U.S. visits to focus on the key issue of dissent. In 1987, he told Americans it was a "grave error" to think disagreement with church teachings was compatible with being a good Catholic.

The pope later approved a universal catechism as one remedy for doctrinal ambiguity. He also pushed church positions further into the public forum.

In the 1990s he urged the world's bishops to step up their fight against abortion and euthanasia, saying the practices amounted to a modern-day "slaughter of the innocents." Not everyone agreed, but his sharpened critique of these and other "anti-family" policies helped make him Time magazine's choice for Man of the Year in 1994.

His earlier social justice encyclicals also made a huge impact, addressing the moral dimensions of human labor, the widening gap between rich and poor and the shortcomings of the free-market system. At the pope's request, the Vatican published an exhaustive compendium of social teachings in 2004.

The pope was a cautious ecumenist, insisting that real differences between religions and churches not be covered up. Yet he made several dramatic gestures that will long be remembered: They included launching a Catholic-Orthodox theological dialogue in 1979, visiting a Rome synagogue in 1986 and hosting world religious leaders at a "prayer summit" for peace in 1986.

In 2001, he became the first pontiff to visit a mosque.

To his own flock, he brought continual reminders that prayer and the sacraments were crucial to being a good Christian. He held up Mary as a model of holiness for the whole church, updated the rosary with five new "Mysteries of Light" and named more than 450 new saints — more than all his predecessors combined.

MOURNING AND THE MEDIA

With death of Pope John Paul, Vatican changes many procedures

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — When people around the world turned on their TV sets April 3, they saw live coverage of the body of Pope John Paul II lying in Clementine Hall for a private viewing by Vatican officials.

That was unheard-of in the past, and it's one of the many ways this papal death is breaking new ground at the Vatican.

The dead pope's image has traditionally been considered something to be protected from the media, with strict permission needed to take photographs. This time, outside photographers were invited in quickly, and a live TV feed was offered to networks all over the world.

The Vatican seemed to understand that for the pope who traveled the world while alive mourning his death was a global event.

Those who came to the Clementine Hall for the private viewing included diplomats and their families. Decorum was maintained, but the mourners included one man wearing a backward baseball cap and several young people in jeans.

The Vatican also turned a page when it came to the clinical details of the pope's death. In the not too distant past, a prelate used a small silver hammer to ascertain papal death, striking the pontiff three times on the forehead while calling out his name.

This time, instead of the silver hammer, papal doctors used an electrocardiogram to make sure the pope was dead. Then the Vatican released the full contents of the death certificate, an unprecedented move.

The pope's wide popularity in life created a logistical problem for the Vatican when he was on his deathbed: Tens of thousands of the faithful streamed to St. Peter's Square to pray.

The first night, the Vatican closed the square, but it was opened on the two successive nights. Vatican officials joined the prayer vigils, improvising from the steps of St. Peter's Basilica.

These were moments that no one had scripted. The night the pope died, the small group of Vatican officials stood on the steps and looked at each other briefly to decide what to do, then announced the pope's death to the crowd.

Most of the tens of thousands who came to pray at the Vatican were young people. On lampposts, column bases and TV screen stands, they began leaving flowers, candles, personal notes and drawings as remembrances to the pope. The usually strict authorities allowed these homemade shrines to grow and were careful to leave them in place.

The pope's death was announced to journalists in an unprecedented way — in an e-mail. That created confusion in the press office, where several dozen reporters were preparing to spend another night April 2. Most had been expecting a personal announcement by the director of the Vatican press office, Joaquin Navarro-Valls.

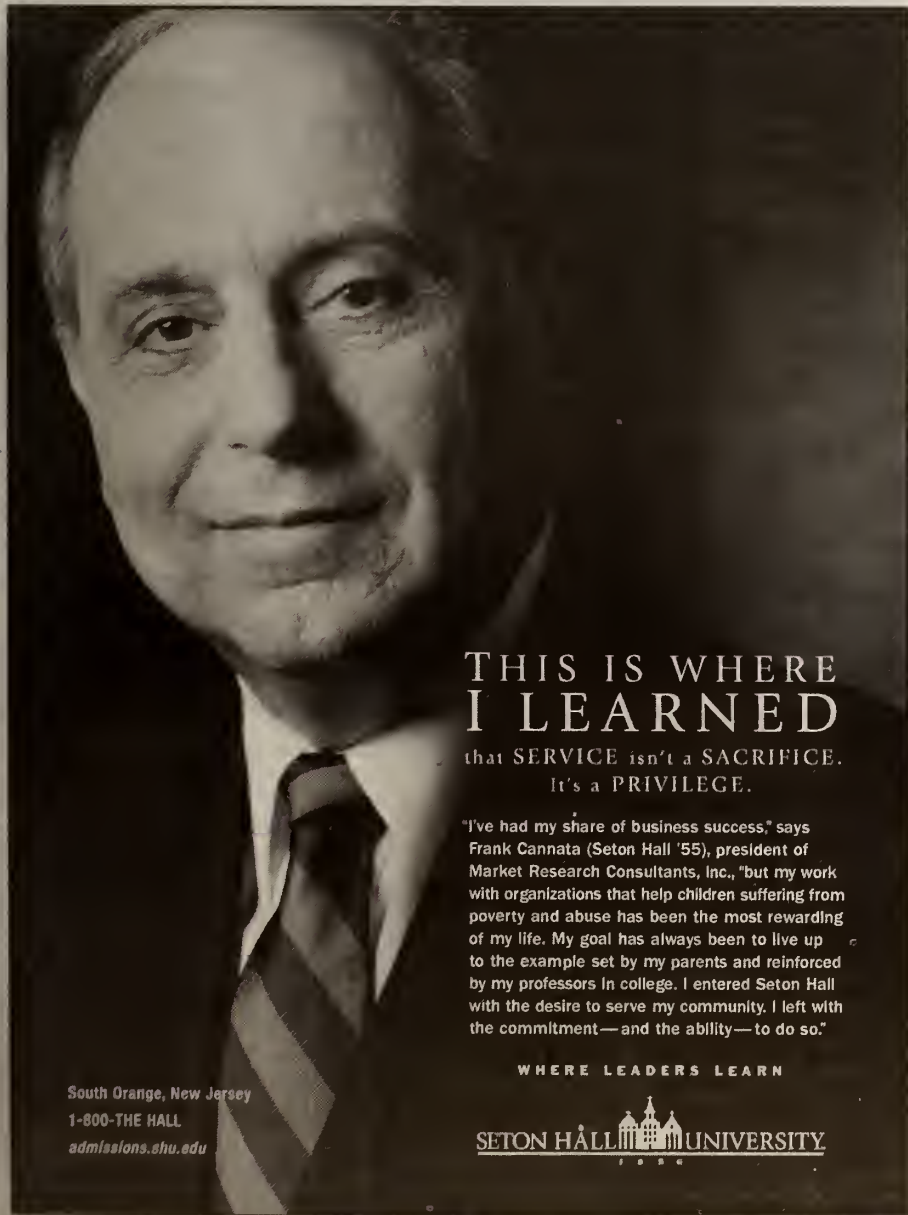

For years, the Vatican has had an arrangement with major agencies, including Catholic News Service, whenever there is big news: A cell-phone alert tells them to check their e-mail inboxes for an urgent Vatican statement.

So after the pope died, reporters' cell phones beeped and the e-mailed death announcement began appearing less than a minute later — or longer, depending on the order of arrival.

In fact, chaos reigned in the press office for several minutes; those who had not received an e-mail pleaded desperately for confirmation from the agencies that did.

The Vatican spokesman showed up much later, to fill in the details.

In the Internet age, which was born during Pope John Paul's pontificate, the Vatican also marked his passing by changing its home page to the theme of "Sede Vacante" ("Vacant See.") The site featured an elaborate series of pages detailing the highlights of Pope John Paul's life and papacy.

Missionaries of Charity already praying to Pope John Paul, nun says

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

CALCUTTA, India — The Missionaries of Charity nuns have already started praying to Pope John Paul II, according to their superior.

"We are not only continuing to pray for him, but also have already started praying to him," said Sister Nirmala Joshi, who succeeded Blessed Teresa of Calcutta as head of the congregation.

The late pope developed "a spiritual friendship" with Mother Teresa, who launched the congregation in 1950 to work among the poorest of the poor. He beatified her in 2003, just six years after her death in 1997.

All Missionaries of Charity houses around the world are praying to the pope, Sister Nirmala told UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand, April 3.

The nuns had begun praying intensively for the pope as news spread of his worsening health. Sister Nirmala said they first prayed for his recovery, but when they realized "that was not to be, they prayed for all the graces the Holy Father may need to accept God's will."

The 84-year pope's health deteriorated sharply April 1, with a high fever brought on by a urinary tract infection. He died April 2 in Rome.

"We thank God for the gift of our Holy Father. We pray for the repose of his soul and ask him to pray for us, for he is much more powerful now being in heaven," Sister Nirmala said.

Hundreds — including a crowd of journalists and television crews — attended a Mass for the pope April 3 at the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse.

Sister Nirmala said she would attend the pope's funeral April 8 at the Vatican. She said she had met Pope John Paul many times after Mother Teresa's death and during the founder's beatification process.

"They were beautiful memories, each a special memory," said the nun, who converted from Hinduism as a young adult.

Her most memorable memory, Sister Nirmala later told UCA News, was when the pope called her by name, "Sister Nirmala, Missionaries of Charity," when she was in a crowd.

She said the pope would "continue in heaven what he started here — a life of tremendous love for God and the whole of humanity."

Asked if Pope John Paul's death would be a setback to Mother Teresa's canonization process, Sister Nirmala said: "No, it is God's work. Moreover, with the pope in heaven, it will be speeded up."

In Mother Teresa's case, Pope John Paul waived the normal five-year waiting period to begin the canonization process.

Sister Nirmala said the late pope gave her congregation a home inside the Vatican, where the nuns now manage a shelter for women, a convent and a soup kitchen. The pope also gave them another home, also on Vatican property, where they care for unwed mothers.

Inside the Calcutta motherhouse chapel, a photograph of the pope was placed under a huge image of Jesus hanging beside the altar.

Someone had drawn on the blackboard outside the chapel a cross and lilies with the words, "Our dear Holy Father went home to God — 9:37 p.m. (Rome time) and 1:07 a.m. (Indian time)."

The process leading up to her beatification was the shortest in modern history.

In pope's hometown, local residents 'bear the burdens of loss'

BY JONATHAN LUXMOOE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WADOWICE, Poland — The rector of the main basilica in Pope John Paul II's hometown has urged residents to be "strong with hope and faith" in order to "bear the burdens of loss" after the pope's death.

"While praying especially hard, we must also learn to use the freedom he gave us," Father Jakub Gil told mourners at evening Mass in the Basilica of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Wadowice April 3.

"We are afraid now of daily life without the pope, who watched over us, just like Christ on the Mount of Olives. We are afraid that, without the Holy Father, we will be unable to cope," he said.

"At the last moment of his life, he was with us," Father Gil told parishioners. "In his hour of death he remembered his hometown."

Up to 10,000 people remained in the town's main John Paul II Square throughout the day after an all-night vigil that followed news of the pontiff's death.

A family friend, Zofia Silkowska, whose father attended the same school as the pope and died last November, said other friends of the pontiff were in mourning.

"We can't close ourselves in pain — when we look at other people, we should realize our problems are only minor," Silkowska told Poland's Zycie daily April 4. "The pope is no longer with us, but his wisdom still is. We should remember his words and live them out."

A Passionist sister told Catholic News Service that local priests said an extraordinary number of people received Communion after the pope died and that the basilica had received a steady stream of visitors.

All cultural and sporting events in the town were canceled; local schools sent children home early March 31 after news of the pope's worsening health.

News of the pontiff's death was met by the tolling of church bells.

A mother comforted her sobbing teenage daughter outside the basilica, telling her the pope "will still be with us."

Meanwhile, an elderly woman said Wadowice residents had prepared themselves for the pope's death, but were still reacting in shock.

"We knew it would end some day, but it's still hard for us to accept the news," she said.

For the third day, police kept vehicles out of the town's main square, where road signs point to nearby Auschwitz and Bielsko-Biala, in whose hospital the pope's brother died of scarlet fever in 1933.

The square's council building, decorated with pictures of the then-Karol Wojtyla as a child and seminarian, carried a banner stating "Wadowice council — always faithful to John Paul II."

A 12-year-old boy at Wadowice's secondary school said he and his friends were all "very sad" and that they had attended church several times since news of the pope's death.

Milena Kopczyk, 20, said local people were "proud and amazed" that their town had produced a pope and said Wadowice would always be a "very special place."

"His heart has always been with us," she said.

"People will learn to cope with their loss," she said. "After this long and painful goodbye, they'll also remember him as he once was — strong, robust and healthy."

Father Gil told Poland's national daily Rzeczpospolita April 3 that he has played the role of "spiritual leader" for Wadowice residents.

"I feel I'm bearing the pain and suffering of others — it's a cross that will be less heavy the more people share it with me," he said.

Rzeczpospolita said many Wadowice inhabitants had recalled their last pilgrimage to Rome in March, adding that the pope's last public words in Polish from his clinic window had been "witam Wadowice" ("welcome Wadowice").

Next pope to face challenges over priests, governance, missions

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Although Pope John Paul II leaves behind a legacy of pastoral accomplishments, his successor will also face a number of challenges in areas of church governance, missionary strategies and priestly ministry.

The challenges are expected to loom large in the cardinals' daily discussions ahead of the conclave, where they will assess church priorities and begin to look at potential papal candidates.

Some of the discussion will focus on unfinished papal business, such as the ongoing tension between dialogue and mission, especially in countries where Christians are a minority.

The cardinals are also expected to examine ways to improve lay formation and counter dissent on church teachings about sexuality and marriage, and they will no doubt take a close look at the increasing pastoral burden on priests and the implications for the church's 1.08 billion members.

Based on interviews, speeches and cardinals' meetings in recent years, here are five themes that many see as crucial for the next pope:

— Collegiality and church governance. At almost every major meeting of bishops and cardinals in recent years — most notably at the last discussion assembly of cardinals in 2001 — some of the most interesting debate was on how the universal church relates to local churches.

It is clear that some bishops are not completely happy with the level of cooperation they receive from offices of the Roman Curia. They have asked for more input on things like selection of bishops and preparation of Vatican documents and more flexibility in matters like liturgical translations.

Some think the Synod of Bishops should be overhauled to make it a more open and influential forum for discussion. Others note that Pope John Paul was never much of a hands-on manager of Vatican affairs; they say the church would be well served by someone able to pull the reins of the Roman Curia when necessary.

— "Clash of civilizations." This clash is not the tensions between the Muslim world and the West, but what cardinals see as the growing gap between popular Western culture and traditional Christian values.

Cardinals meeting in 2001 spoke candidly about the difficulty of proclaiming the Gospel in pluralistic societies where religion is no longer passed on from generation to generation. The phenomenon is internal as well as external, since many Catholics do not understand or accept church teachings on some controversial issues.

Church leaders say the problem is especially evident in European and North American society; they point to legal abortion, a growing acceptance of euthanasia and legislative efforts to approve same-sex marriage.

But the issue also resonates among cardinals from developing countries, where sterilization and contraception campaigns have drawn sharp church criticism. Some fear globalization is helping to spread secular values to the Third World.

Many church leaders believe Pope John Paul did a good job spelling out the moral arguments behind church teachings and drawing clear lines on dissent. They say the challenge that remains is to educate the Catholic laity and encourage them to accept and live those teachings, which will ultimately have a greater social impact than pronouncements by the hierarchy.

— Mission, witness and dialogue. In the second half of Pope John Paul's pontificate, the Vatican emphasized that evangelization means proclaiming Jesus Christ as the unique savior, even in places where Christians are a small minority.

Many local bishops would place the emphasis elsewhere — on dialogue and witness as the most effective ways of communicating the Christian faith. That is especially true in Asia, a continent considered prime evangelizing terrain but where efforts to date have been somewhat disappointing to the Vatican.

The debate has taken on a new dimension in the wake of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks and the so-called "war on terrorism," as minority Christian communities try to achieve or maintain legal rights in countries where Muslim fundamentalism is spreading.

Given all that, the cardinals' assessment on this issue could have important consequences for the future path of interreligious and ecumenical dialogue.

— Ordained ministry. Under Pope John Paul, the pastoral burden on priests increased dramatically; there was one priest for every 1,800 Catholics in 1978, and about one priest for every 2,700 Catholics in 2005.

The ratio was even higher in many developing countries, where some Catholics have had to go without Mass or the sacraments for weeks at a time.

The situation has led a number of bishops to ask that the Vatican consider relaxing the priestly celibacy rule in the Western church. Few if any church leaders believe that the next pope will consider women's ordination as an option, since Pope John Paul ruled it out in a definitive way.

A separate but related issue is the selection of priesthood candidates, which drew particular attention after the sex abuse scandals of recent years. Two Vatican documents long under preparation — one on psychological screening of seminary candidates and another on homosexuality — were left in suspension by the pope's death.

— Bioethics. The moral questions raised by the rapid advances in science and technology are expected to multiply during the next papacy.

While church teaching on the sanctity of life is clear, some of the issues — such as genetic therapy — involve complex questions of personal identity and biological integrity that theologians are only beginning to examine.

Pope John Paul responded by identifying practices and attitudes that threaten human life and by creating the Pontifical Academy for Life. A new pope may want to raise the academy's profile and increase the level of expertise at the Vatican.

IN THE INTERREGNUM

Pope John Paul II's death sets in motion period of transition

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The death of Pope John Paul II set in motion a complicated period of transition, an interval marked by mourning, a slowdown in Vatican operations and the election of a new pope.

Regulated by ancient traditions and recent rules, the period between popes — known by the Latin term "interregnum" — began moments after the pope's death April 1.

It ends when the College of Cardinals, meeting in a closed-door conclave, chooses a successor and announces it to the world. That could come as early as 15 days after the pope's death or, if the conclave drags on, it could be much later.

The rules governing the interregnum are matters of church law, not dogma, and were last revised by Pope John Paul in a 1996 apostolic constitution.

The document confirmed that as long as the Holy See is vacant, the universal church is governed by the College of Cardinals, which cannot, however, make decisions normally reserved to the pope. Such matters must be postponed until the new pope is elected.

And until there is a pope, the Roman Curia — the Vatican's network of administrative offices — loses most of its cardinal supervisors and cannot handle any new business.

The College of Cardinals is to deal solely with "ordinary business and matters which cannot be postponed." At present, there are 183 cardinals, and all of them were asked to meet in Rome to help administer the transition period.

The College of Cardinals does this through two structures: a general congregation, in which all the cardinals were to begin meeting daily; and a particular four-member congregation, consisting of the chamberlain of the Holy Roman Church, Cardinal Eduardo Martinez Somalo, and a rotating team of three cardinal assistants.

Only those cardinals under age 80 — a total of 117 — will be eligible to vote in the coming conclave.

As chamberlain, Cardinal Martinez Somalo is to administer the goods and temporal rights of the Holy See until the election of a new pope. His duties also included verifying the pope's death, sealing the pope's private rooms, taking possession of papal palaces at the Vatican and elsewhere, and informing leading churchmen of the pope's death.

He also was to make arrangements for Pope John Paul's burial, unless the pope left his own instructions in this regard.

Meanwhile, the dean of the College of Cardinals, Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, had the duty of informing the other cardinals of the pope's death and convoking them for the first congregations, as well as informing the diplomatic corps and the heads of nations.

The cardinals in charge of major Vatican departments have lost their positions with the death of the pope, although they may be brought back to their jobs by the next pontiff. During the interregnum, most curial offices are to be overseen by the secretaries of each department, who are generally bishops.

Thus the Roman Curia keeps functioning, but at a slower pace.

Pope John Paul's apostolic constitution instructed the Curia to avoid action on "serious or controverted matters," so that the next pope will have a free hand in dealing with these issues. The Vatican's tribunals continue to process marriage and other cases, and the Vatican's diplomatic representatives remain in place.

One of the first items that will face the College of Cardinals when it meets in daily congregations is arranging for the pope's body to be taken to St. Peter's Basilica to be exposed for homage by the faithful. It also sets the time for the funeral rites, which are celebrated for nine consecutive days, with burial to take place between the fourth and sixth day after death.

All cardinals take an oath to maintain strict secrecy regarding everything related to the conclave, even after it is over.

The cardinal electors are to begin the conclave 15 to 20 days after the pope's death. All are expected to arrive in Rome by that time, unless a serious reason is presented.

The word conclave comes from Latin, meaning literally "with key," and reflects the previous tradition of locking the cardinals in an area where they would spend day and night until the new pope's election.

A collection of columns, editorials and viewpoints

The life and death of 'John Paul the Great'

SUFFERING, DEVOTION ARE EXAMPLES TO FOLLOW

Pope John Paul II was my pope because he was the head of my church, the church of the Apostles. He was my pope because he was the pope for all people; he brought Christ to the entire world. And he was my pope because, like him, I have a Polish heritage.

From the beginning of his papacy, Pope John Paul brought life and vigor into the church. He reached out to young and old alike, reached out to all peoples of all nations and all religions; he was the man for our times in which much controversy exists over morals, or the lack thereof.

To this end, the pope spoke for the weakest of the weak. He spoke for the culture of life as he tried to protect human life in all its stages from conception to natural death. To him, all life was precious. And he lived his own life with dignity until his death.

For a little over two weeks, the world was fed wall-to-wall coverage of two deaths. The first death was directed by the world — human law took precedence over natural law and the law of God when it decreed that Terri Shiavo must be put to death by starvation and dehydration. This woman was not sick. She was not being kept alive by machines. She was merely in need of food and water and she became a bother to the cold world because her quality of life did not meet its standards.

She was no longer to be tolerated by this world of power and greed. Therefore, she was cruelly murdered by the crassness of the world as she was deprived of those necessities that must be afforded to all life. However, her silent suffering spoke volumes to the very world that condemned her as she demonstrated that it was her desire to live her life to the fullest, especially during her last 13 days.

The second death was that of Pope John Paul II, whose suffering started in 1981 with his attempted assassination. And he carried that accumulating suffering with dignity and honor, including the insertion of a feeding tube denied by law to Terri Shiavo.

In so doing, the pope demonstrated to the world that suffering should not be shunned; revealed how the sufferer should suffer for and with Christ; showed the world that suffering was redemptive and salvific as he suffered in reparation for the sins of the world that despises those who have a less-than-perfect quality of life; and displayed his selflessness by joining his personal suffering to the Cross of Christ.

Thus, Pope John Paul, in imitation of Christ, gave all of humanity the perfect example to follow.

In the 1930s, a young nun, known today as St. Faustina Kowalska, in Krakow, Poland, had visions of Jesus, who revealed himself as Divine Mercy. One of the requests that Jesus made was to have a feast day for him under the title of Divine Mercy.

It was a little-known Polish bishop by the name of Karol Wojtyla who took on the cause of Divine Mercy. Years later, after he became known as Pope John Paul II, he made the second Sunday of Easter the feast of Divine Mercy.

Because of his devotion to the Blessed Mother, Pope John Paul also changed the rosary by adding the five Mysteries of Light. These took into consideration important events that occurred between the start of the ministry of Jesus and his Passion.

On his deathbed, just before he died, on the first Saturday of the month dedicated to the Blessed Mother and on the vigil of the feast of Divine Mercy, Pope John Paul said, "I have gone to you. Now I am waiting and you have come to me."

News commentators refer these words to the youth who were gathered to pray for him during his last hours. But it seems more likely that the pope was talking to and about Jesus and our Blessed Mother who promised faithful disciples that they would come to escort all those who encouraged devotion to Divine Mercy and to the rosary through the threshold of heaven.

Now is the time to say goodbye to our pope, 'John Paul the Great.' It is time to honor this saint among saints for his continuous celebration of life and for all those things he accomplished for the church and the entire world throughout his 26 years as pontifex maximus.

Deacon Potkay is permanent deacon at Holy Infant Church in Reidsville.

Pope John Paul II's teaching moment in the Carolinas

Positive messages on Catholicism abound then and now

Media relations means supplying news organizations with information and answering relevant questions; in my case, about the Catholic faith and the Diocese of Charlotte.

It's often a little like juggling a live chicken, an axe and a bowling ball. Media relations are important because in the wired world, the media is the gathering place for our grief. We watched as a single, worldwide community as Pope John Paul II lay gravely ill and then died.

This week we are immersed in news stories about our faith. All over the diocese, priests and the faithful have been contacted by news organizations with questions about the Holy Father, our faith and the future.

Father Roger Arnsparger, pastor of St. Barnabas Church in Arden, called Monday to tell me of his plans to attend the Holy Father's funeral in Rome. With his permission, I called several news organizations. Usually it takes several attempts to interest a reporter in a story about our church. In this case, the reporters jumped on the idea and immediately called Father Arnsparger's cell phone.

This week all things Catholic are "in" as far as the media is concerned. What a teaching moment for us!

Catholicism hasn't been this "cool" to non-Catholics in the Carolinas since 1987, when a supercharged Pope John Paul II event took place in Columbia, S.C. His Holiness made a brief visit to the University of South Carolina, and then led an ecumenical service at Williams-Brice Stadium before 70,000 people.

At the time, I was a television reporter in Charlotte. Over the 14-month period between the announcement and the event, I made myself the station expert on all things Catholic. My reward was to be the station's anchor for the coverage in Columbia.

I was joined in the skybox anchor booth by Father Frank O'Rourke, then-director of diocesan parish life and worship and current pastor of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro. An expert commentator, Father O'Rourke helped us understand that the Holy Father was reaching out to people of all faiths with the eternal message of salvation through Jesus Christ.

The thing that surprised me the most about seeing in person Pope John Paul II was his small physical stature. Like most Catholics, I've always viewed him as a giant of a person, but physically he was not very tall or imposing.

He spoke for about 20 minutes in a gravelly, accented voice that was a little hard to understand. But his message, which centered on Christian unity and the importance of marriage and the family, ended with a quote from Scripture that gave everyone in attendance at the stadium and watching on TV some homework: "Whoever does the will of my heavenly Father is brother and sister and mother to me" (Mt 12:50).

In a papal reign full of teaching moments, this one touched the people of God in the Carolinas.

Inspiration and example

A seminarian's perspective on the death of Pope John Paul II

On Saturday, April 2, the seminarians of the Diocese of Charlotte gathered in Latrobe, Pa., with Bishop Peter J. Jugis for the ordination of two Charlotte seminarians as transitional deacons. The day proved to be historic because of the death of Pope John Paul II. It was in God's divine providence that the seminarians were all together on this life-changing day.

Most of us have experienced only this one pope. He has been an inspiration and example for us, and nearly every seminarian I know would say that the pope had a part in his decision to enter the seminary and persevere.

I know that this is true for me. I can remember having the privilege of visiting Rome in the Jubilee Year 2000 and seeing the Holy Father canonize the Mexican martyrs of the early 20th century. It truly was amazing how each person felt a connection with him, despite the fact that tens of thousands were gathered in St. Peter's Square.

I came back from that trip invigorated by seeing him and the universal church, and three months later at 20 years of age entered the seminary.

Many others have memories of the pope's many World Youth Day celebrations. He was a person who believed deeply in the youth and their ability to transform the world. Young people responded by the millions because they sensed in him sincerity and confidence. He had no fear of communicating the fullness of truth that he had received from Christ.

In the past few years, with his health failing, the pope had inspired the world to endure joyfully the sufferings that God sends as a gift.

After Saturday's ordination, Bishop Jugis gathered all of the Charlotte seminarians and priests who were present. He spoke to us about the gift that is seminary formation and that we should all strive to use this time we've been given to become the priests that God is calling us to be.

He then led us in prayer for our Holy Father. It was in the final hour of Pope John Paul II's life that the seminarians for the diocese were gathered with Bishop Jugis, praying for the pope's soul and that God's will might be done. We prayed he would know God's presence and comfort as he passed from this life to the reward he deserves for his tireless work for the church.

It is a unique time to be in the seminary. We are saddened by the fact that the only pope we have ever known has gone from this world, but we are inspired by his saintly life and example. Pope John Paul II gave all to Christ and constantly encouraged everyone to do the same, because this gives each human life meaning.

We are excited about the unity he so beautifully accomplished and are confident in the continuity of our Catholic Church and her teachings that the pope so boldly proclaimed to the world. This is a cause for rejoicing in the sense that God has been glorified by one of his faithful sons who cared so much for his flock.

He constantly promoted vocations to the priesthood and religious life by explaining by words and example that one's life is truly fulfilled when handed over to Christ. He assured us that God is never outdone in generosity despite the struggles and crosses the vocation carries.

What a blessing and gift Pope John Paul II has been to the Catholic Church. I will forever remember his last hour in this world, and how our bishop and seminarians were joined with him in prayer.

The accessible pontiff

Evangelization Matters

FRANK VILLARONGA
GUEST COLUMNIST

Much has been written about Pope John Paul II in the past few days, and much will be written in the weeks to come. I would like to focus on the pope from the point of view of evangelization.

Pope John Paul II traveled throughout the world. I did not have the privilege of actually meeting the pope, but I did see him three times — during his 1987 visit to my "home turf" of Miami, a 1997 World Youth Day in Paris, and finally during a pilgrimage to Rome during the Jubilee year.

One of the things I remember about the pope was how accessible he was — even when you were not able to meet him personally, by seeing him in one of his many public appearances, you felt as if you had actually met him.

It is in this light that we can learn an important lesson in evangelization: be accessible.

Pope John Paul II knew this. In the encyclical "Redemptoris Missio," he speaks of a "new evangelization," a way of reaching out to others that is new in fervor, new in expression and new in methods.

Pope John Paul wrote of evangelization as "the primary service which the church can render to every individual and to all humanity in the modern world, a world which has experienced marvelous achievements but which seems to have lost its sense of ultimate realities and of existence itself."

He echoed this theme in the apostolic letter "Tertio Millennio Adveniente," the three-year preparation for the Third Millennium, and the subsequent jubilee celebration was ushering in a new evangelization in the 21st century. The church's early mission of "going into the world and making disciples of all nations" is still very relevant today.

How does one begin this daunting task? One solution is what has been referred to as "ministry of presence," a ministry in which the pope excelled. He showed us by his example how important it is to go out into the world.

His final challenge to us may lie in his death. The eyes of the world are upon Rome; however, in a very real way, the eyes of the world's various communities are on us — the Catholics of the world.

This is the time in which to be Catholic is to have a special connection with the events in Rome. It is a bond we share with other Catholics and it is a reality that will be evident to those in our own communities. It is a time not to talk about theological differences and debate dogmas, but rather to visibly share our own experience of this holy man and of our faith.

There are many misconceptions about Catholicism in North Carolina. We have a unique opportunity to be open, be accessible to others and, if necessary, answer questions. It is an opportunity for dialogue.

The world is watching Rome, and the world is watching us.

Frank Villaronga is director of evangelization and ministry formation for the Diocese of Charlotte.

Signs of grace

Pope's struggle was symbol of hope, sacrifice

In her autobiography "The Long Loneliness," Dorothy Day recounts the decline and death of Peter Maurin, an itinerant laborer and self-taught philosopher who teamed with her to found the Catholic Worker Movement. She remembers how painful it was to stand by as Maurin's once boundless energy and formidable intellect withered away over the last five years of his life.

"The fact was he had been stripped of all," Day wrote in her 1952 book. "We are to be pruned as the vine is pruned so that it can bear fruit, and this we cannot do ourselves. God did it for him. He took from him his mind, the one thing he had left, the one thing he perhaps took delight in."

Day's words came to me as I followed news coverage of Pope John Paul II's attempt to deliver his traditional blessing on Easter Sunday. Hampered by throat surgery, the pope made an agonizing effort to speak to the throngs assembled in St. Peter's Square, before giving up and simply making the sign of the cross.

The pope was a man who was truly a titan of our age, a man renowned for his tremendous vigor and dynamism and unique ability to connect with followers of all ages and races. He was a man who joined in the underground resistance against the Nazis, bounced back from an assassination attempt and played a vital role in ridding his native Poland — and the world — of the Soviet regime.

But on this most holy of Sundays, it was all he could do to raise a feeble hand in blessing.

It was hard to watch the pope shuffle toward death. It is harder still to see old age and illness creep up on our own friends and family members, robbing them of their strength, pride and independence.

Even worse, we are forced to grapple with mortality in a culture that recoils from it and has, in fact, built big business out of trying to restore what we're naturally bound to lose — from hair and sleek physiques to life itself. Our instinct, clearly, is to add to our lives whenever possible, not to subtract from them.

And yet, it was none other than Jesus who allowed himself to be stripped of everything, as we were reminded on Good Friday. His clothes were taken, he was mocked, his friends ran away, he was tortured and near death when he cried out, "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?" — the lament of an anguished man pruned down to his very core.

From this devastation, however, arose our salvation.

As difficult as it is to accept, perhaps Dorothy Day's words are right on the mark. Perhaps it is not only fitting but absolutely necessary that the pope, once a magnificent athlete, became so weak that strong winds threatened to topple him, that the remarkable communicator and fluent man of languages was so ravaged by disease that he had trouble speaking at all.

His many gifts were taken away little by little, stripping him bare as the end drew near. All too often, our society tells us that this is an indignity. I could not shake the feeling and the hope that it was really a sign of grace.

A LIFE OF LIVING

Pope's vocation emerged after life as actor, laborer, playwright

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Over the last several years of his pontificate, Pope John Paul II revealed an aspect of his personal life that he did not want history to overlook.

In autobiographical books and in selected talks, the pontiff emphasized that what kept him going was not the power of the papacy but the spiritual strength that flowed from his priestly vocation.

"With the passing of time, the most important and beautiful thing for me is that I have been a priest for more than 50 years, because every day I can celebrate Holy Mass!" he told some 300,000 young people in Italy in 1997.

While many writers have recounted the pope's early life as a semi-political pilgrimage under Nazi occupation and communist domination in Poland, the pope himself remembered those years as a crucial time of spiritual formation.

In his 1996 book, "A Gift and Mystery," he recalled how the sense of being called to the priesthood filled him with joy, but it also cut him off from acquaintances and other interests. In one of the most moving passages he ever wrote as pope, he said he still feels a debt to friends who suffered "on the great altar of history" during World War II, while he studied in a clandestine seminary.

Karol Wojtyla, the future pope, lived an unusually varied life before his priestly ordination. As a teen, he split stone at a quarry, wrote poetry and supported a network that smuggled Jews to safety during the German occupation of Poland. As a young priest, he was a favorite with students at Lublin University who flocked to his classes and joined him on camping, hiking and canoeing trips.

As the second-youngest cardinal ever named by the Vatican, he ran an informal office and celebrated holidays with Krakow actors.

It should have been no surprise that he would redefine the traditional role and demeanor of the papacy by traveling extensively, continuing to enjoy outdoor activities and taking on a wide range of political and moral issues.

As a high school student in his hometown of Wadowice, in southern Poland, Wojtyla impressed classmates by the intense way he would pray in church, a habit of deep meditation that remained with him for life.

The Nazi takeover of Poland in September 1939 meant an end to all religious training and cultural activities, but Wojtyla attended an underground university in Krakow and helped set up a clandestine theater group that performed in stores and homes.

In addition to the quarry, he worked in a chemical factory — experiences that provided material for his poetry and papal writings on labor. He participated in daily Mass, spiritual exercises, Marian devotion and Bible study.

Soon after his father's death in 1941, Karol withdrew from the theatrical group and began studying for the priesthood, a decision that surprised many of his friends, who tried to convince him his talent lay in the theater.

He studied in a clandestine seminary operated in a cardinal's Krakow residence in defiance of Nazi orders forbidding religious education. The archbishop saw him as a future church leader.

Yet the young man who wrote poems and a doctoral dissertation on the mysticism of St. John of the Cross was attracted to monastic contemplation. Twice during these years he tried to join the Discalced Carmelites but was turned away with the advice: "You are destined for greater things."

He was ordained Nov. 1, 1946, just as the communist regime replaced the Germans at the end of the war.

After earning a doctorate in ethics,

Father Wojtyla was assigned in 1948 to Poland's rural village of Niegowic for a year before returning to Krakow. There he devoted much of his attention to young people — teaching, playing soccer and inviting university students to his house for discussions.

After earning a second doctorate in moral theology, Father Wojtyla began teaching at Lublin University in 1953. He published more than 100 articles and several books on ethics and other subjects, and at age 36 became a full professor at the Institute of Ethics in Lublin.

Father Wojtyla's interest in outdoor activities remained strong, and younger companions called him "the eternal teenager." Groups of students regularly joined him for hiking, skiing, bicycling, camping and kayaking, accompanied by prayer, outdoor Masses and theological discussions.

Father Wojtyla was on a kayaking trip in 1958 when, at age 38, he was named an auxiliary bishop of Krakow — the youngest bishop in Poland's history. He continued to live a simple life, shunning the trappings that came with his position.

For instance, he only left his Krakow apartment for the more luxurious bishop's residence after friends moved his belongings one day when he was out of town.

In 1964, shortly before the end of the Second Vatican Council, he was named archbishop of Krakow. Just three years later, at the age of 47, he became a cardinal. But he continued his open approach in Krakow, seeing visitors without appointments and holding seminars at the cardinal's residence for actors, workers, students, priests and nuns.

In 1976, after touring several U.S. cities and attending the International Eucharistic Congress in Philadelphia, Cardinal Wojtyla attended a conference of Polish-Americans at St. Mary's College in Orchard Lake, Mich. True to form, having sat through a string of indoor meetings, one afternoon he canceled a session to go canoeing.

Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

The conclave to elect the new pontiff begins Monday, April 18. Here in the Diocese of Charlotte, let us unite our prayers to the prayers of the Universal Church, in supplication to the Holy Spirit for a new Shepherd.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Bless J. Jugis

The Most Rev. Peter J. Jugis, J.C.D.
Bishop of Charlotte

Prayer for the Conclave

Come, Holy Spirit, fill the hearts of your faithful and enkindle in them the fire of your love.

V. Send forth your Spirit and they shall be created.

R. And you shall renew the face of the earth.

Let us pray.

O God, who by the light of the Holy Spirit, did instruct the hearts of the faithful, grant us in the same Spirit to be truly wise and ever to rejoice in His consolation. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

Lord God,

You are the eternal shepherd and guide. In your mercy grant your Church a shepherd who will walk in your ways and whose watchful care will bring us your blessing.

We ask this through our Lord Jesus Christ, your Son, who lives and reigns with you and the Holy Spirit, one God, for ever and ever. Amen

One: Our Father, Hail Mary, and Glory be.

Dan and Terri Haverty share a moment with Bishop William K. Weigand of Sacramento, Calif., during a March 28 press conference, where it was announced Dan Haverty would give part of his liver to Bishop Weigand. The 67-year-old bishop needed the transplant because he suffers from primary sclerosing cholangitis. An uncommon progressive liver disease, it causes scarring near the liver that affects the organ's function.

Bishop Weigand, donor recovering from liver transplant surgery

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (CNS) — Bishop William K. Weigand of Sacramento and Dan Haverty, the El Dorado Hills parishioner who donated two-thirds of his liver to the bishop, are recuperating from successful liver transplant surgery performed April 1 at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco.

Both Bishop Weigand and Haverty were in fair condition as of April 7 and following the usual postoperative course, said Lynette Magnino, director of communications for the Sacramento Diocese.

"There were no surprises in the surgery and no complications," she said.

Haverty, assistant chief of the Sacramento Metropolitan Fire District and a member of Holy Trinity Parish, was to be released from the hospital April 9, according to his wife, Terri. She has been by her husband's side since he checked in March 31.

Terri Haverty said her husband and Bishop Weigand have been visiting each day.

"That gives Dan tremendous bursts of encouragement to keep plugging away. That keeps us going," she said. "The bishop looks great, his eyes are bright and his smile is sweet. We are highly motivated to go home and life will go on, but with a whole new sense of what life really means."

Steve Turner, public information officer for the fire district, visited with the Havertys April 5. He said the "entire fire department family" will be supporting the Havertys during Dan's recovery.

"Dan's an extremely giving individual," Turner said. "To donate part of his body to help the bishop is so consistent with Dan's nature and the man I know and respect."

The bishop received about 70 percent of Haverty's liver during a six-and-a-half-hour operation, directed by Dr. John Roberts, chief of transplantation surgery at the hospital.

Roberts said that because the bishop's liver had been seriously damaged by primary sclerosing cholangitis, a disease he has had for the past 24 years, liver transplantation from a living donor proved to be a good option.

Living liver donors save the lives of the recipients and help make the waiting list shorter for others in need of a liver transplant, Roberts noted.

"However, if there were enough organs donated after death, we would not need to risk the life of a healthy person," he said.

Unborn Victims of Violence Act signed into law in West Virginia

WHEELING, W.Va. (CNS) — A law making it a separate crime to injure an unborn child drew praise from the bishop of West Virginia's only Catholic diocese.

Bishop Michael J. Bransfield of Wheeling-Charleston congratulated the state Legislature for passing the Unborn Victims of Violence Act and praised Gov. Joe Manchin for signing it.

"The passage of this law could not have come at a better time than the Easter season, with its promise of new life," said Bishop Bransfield after Manchin signed the bill March 28.

The law establishes that an unborn child may be a separate and distinct victim in certain violent crimes against a pregnant woman. If an unborn child is injured or killed during particular crimes, the assailant may also be charged with that offense on behalf of the child.

It passed both houses of the legislature by overwhelming majorities. It will become state law on July 1.

Bishop Bransfield commended Manchin for signing the bill and for his support of pro-life initiatives in West Virginia.

With the signing of the bill known as "Christy and Ashley's Law," West Virginia joins 30 other states with similar laws. It is named for Christy and Ashley Alberts.

Christy Alberts was almost nine months pregnant when she was shot and killed. The baby, whom she had named Ashley Nicole, also died.

At the signing ceremony, Melissa Adkins, legislative coordinator of West Virginians for Life, said "for far too long, gaps in West Virginia law have denied justice to families who have had their unborn children killed or injured at the hands of a criminal."

The bill exempts abortion, acts by the mother, medical treatment and research from prosecution.

FROM THE VATICAN

As church prepares for conclave, doors close to journalists

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — During a 10-day period surrounding the death of Pope John Paul II, the Vatican practiced a remarkable degree of openness and enjoyed overwhelmingly positive press coverage of the pope's legacy and the church's activities.

However, as the church prepared for one of its most secret events, the doors closed once again to journalists.

On April 9, the day after the pope's funeral, the cardinals agreed not to give interviews, in order to concentrate more fully on prayer, reflection and private discussion before the start of the conclave April 18.

Many reporters who flew to Rome for the papal transition felt let down.

The abrupt halt in media contact had been in the cards for some time, however. Some cardinals pushed for a no-interview policy soon after their daily meetings began April 4.

Father Reese said that while the decision was disappointing it was not a complete surprise.

The cardinals were "quite aware that as soon as he was buried the story was going to change, and it was going to be about who's the leading candidate, about conflict and division, which is the kind of press they don't want," he said.

Judging by the rules Pope John Paul revised in 1996 for the next conclave, he would probably have agreed with the media ban. He mentioned the need for secrecy 17 times and provided that well before the conclave begins each cardinal take an oath promising not to divulge information about matters "in any way related to the election of the Roman pontiff."

GREENSBORO — Anyone currently unemployed or concerned about their present employment situation is invited to attend the Re-employment Support Group held in the Parish Life Center, Room 8, of St. Paul the Apostle Church, 2715 Horse Pen Creek Rd. Vatican extends U.S. sexual abuse norms

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Vatican's Congregation for Bishops has granted an extension of the special U.S. church norms for dealing with sexual abuse of minors by clergy, a U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops spokesman said March 30.

"The life of the current norms has been extended until further action by the USCCB, which presumably will be in June," said Msgr. Francis J. Maniscalco, director of the USCCB's communications department.

He did not elaborate, but such an extension had to come from the Congregation for Bishops, the office that originally granted a "recognitio," or official Vatican approval, to the norms.

The "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People" and the accompanying legal document, "Essential Norms for Diocesan-Eparchial Policies Dealing With Allegations of Sexual Abuse of Minors by Priests or Deacons," were originally approved by the U.S. bishops at their June 2002 meeting in Dallas.

After consultations with Vatican officials, the bishops adopted revisions in the charter and norms in November 2002, and that December the Congregation for Bishops gave the "recognitio" necessary for the norms to take effect as church law in the United States.

The norms took effect for a two-year period, beginning March 1, 2003. When church laws or decrees have such an expiration date, it is common practice for the Vatican to grant an extension if work on a revision is still under way as the expiration date approaches.

A mixed commission of Vatican and U.S. church officials met at the Vatican Jan. 31-Feb. 1 to discuss possible revisions in the light of the past two years of experience with the norms. Any revisions must first be adopted by the bishops at a general meeting and then receive Vatican approval before they can become law.

Details of the commission's meeting were not made public, but one participant told CNS at the time that the question was raised about extending the current norms until a revised version can be duly discussed and adopted.

The next general meeting of the U.S. bishops takes place June 15-18 in Chicago.

Alternative aspirations

University students spend spring break with Holy Angels

BELMONT — A group of college students recently experienced a different kind of spring break this year.

Ten students from James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Va., traded in the traditional vacation week for eight days of volunteer work at Holy Angels in Belmont March 4-11.

Organized by the university's Catholic campus ministry, the students' goals were to focus on helping others rather than to focus on themselves at the facility that provides services and programs to children and adults with varying degrees of mental retardation.

The "Spring Break Alternative" concept places teams of college students in communities to engage in service and experiential learning. In doing so, students are able to contribute to the community through their hard work. Many students have described the experience as fundamentally life-changing.

At Holy Angels, the program offered the students a unique opportunity to work on several special projects, including PUSH Place, an outdoor area that features unique swing sets and play space. The students also spent time building relationships with Holy Angels residents and staff.

An ice cream social and program at Holy Angels wrapped up the students' visit.

This was the third year James Madison University students have participated in the Spring Break Alternative Program at Holy Angels. Last year, students worked at Holy Angels' Camp Hope facility, a camp specially designed for people with disabilities.

Holy Angels, a private, nonprofit corporation, was founded in 1956 by the Sisters of Mercy.

The three-mile walk raised awareness of the HIV/AIDS problem in the region and funds for House of Mercy, a nonprofit residential facility for persons living with advanced AIDS.

House of Mercy was founded in 1991 by the Sisters of Mercy in Belmont to provide housing and compassionate 24-hour care for low-income persons living with advanced AIDS. More than 200 men and women have made their home at House of Mercy, where physical, psychological and spiritual support is provided.

This year, women have made up 40 percent of the admissions to House of Mercy, the only facility of its type in the region.

Southern states, with a third of the United States population, account for approximately 46 percent of all HIV/AIDS cases. More than 2,000 new cases of HIV disease were reported to the N.C. Division of Public Health in 2003, representing the third consecutive year of increased reports.

Many remember Terri Schiavo's life, struggle

Theresa Marie Schindler Schiavo was commended to God April 5, as an estimated 700 people packed Most Holy Name of Jesus Catholic Church in Gulfport.

Her body was not there, however. Her husband, Michael Schiavo, had the body cremated April 2 and planned to bury the ashes in Pennsylvania.

The 41-year-old brain-damaged woman, known as Terri, died March 31, 13 days after her feeding tube was removed through a court order obtained by her husband.

Many people stood on the sidewalks outside the Gulfport church and listened over loudspeakers. Many in attendance had never met Terri Schiavo but were there to support her grieving family — her parents, Bob and Mary Schindler; her brother, Bobby; and her sister, Suzanne Vitadamo.

"There are a lot of people who have no hope for the handicapped," said Marie Carroll of St. Patrick Church in Largo.

The woman said her experience as the mother of a 45-year-old mentally handicapped woman and what the Schindlers experienced has taught her greater compassion and love.

In his homily, Father Frank Pavone, national director of Priests for Life, said: "For so many people, going through this short and confusing life, the human story is birth, life and death. Beyond that, they cannot see, and beyond that, they have no hope."

But for Christians, he said, the story is life, death and resurrection. They know the grief they feel at the passing of a loved one will be transformed into joy, he said.

"We join with Terri's parents tonight in thanking God for the gift of her life," said Father Pavone. Looking directly at the Schindlers, he then added, "We are with you."

The meaning of life and happiness, he said, is never found in throwing other people out of the way. "It is found when we push ourselves out of the way and make room for the other," he said.

Father Pavone spoke of the outpouring of love for Terri Schiavo from around the world, especially during the last few weeks of her life.

"God sends us people like Terri to remind us of the meaning of life," he said. "God calls us to go forth from this place and build a culture of life. God calls us to go forth from this place to ensure that Terri, who had such difficulty speaking, will speak louder than ever to this world."

Bobby Schindler read a letter at the service from a man who had mailed Terri Schiavo a Purple Heart awarded for service in Vietnam. Dated March 29, the letter said, "Our prayers are unceasing ... our hearts are shattered by the great injustice suffered by Terri, you, America and God-loving people worldwide."

"We believe that Terri suffered and was condemned to death by an act of domestic terrorism in the form of judicial homicide," the letter added. The man, who remained anonymous, was shot in the head in Vietnam in 1965.

Vitadamo spoke of her love for her brother, her parents and her late sister. Looking at her mother, she said softly, "You are the one I ache for the most. I'm so sorry your Terri is no longer with you."

Bob and Mary Schindler wanted media coverage but insisted the press be confined to an area away from the church. Neither were reporters permitted into the center where two public receptions were held.

"Sometimes grief has to happen away from the lens of the media," said Father Bill Svengros, pastor.

"They (Bob and Mary Schindler) are remarkable people. They have great faith in the Lord and certain hope in the resurrection," said Father Svengros. "When I talk with them, there's no sign of any sort of bitterness or rancor, but one of really a humble trust in the Lord."

He said the Schindlers had not discussed the cremation of Terri's body with him.

"As Catholics, we believe her soul is with God, and in tonight's liturgy ... we entrust her to God. We pray for our sister, and we pray for ourselves, for those of us who are left behind. But whether her body is cremated or whether it's present ... God's not limited in time or space. Terri's with the Lord."

Faith formation students in kindergarten through fifth-grade gathered with their families at Holy Spirit Church in Denver to take part in a Seder meal March 20. To help the students and families more fully understand the symbolic food and actions of the Last Supper meal, the children tasted bitter herbs, haroset and matzah; said blessing before each of four glasses of "wine" (juice); and discussed the hardships the Hebrew slaves endured.

To show they wanted to belong to Jesus, the students cut leaves with their names on them and attached them to a vine running along a bulletin board. Helping to wash and dry one another's hands illustrated the need for Catholics to serve others as Jesus showed.

The Synagogue and the Temple

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 13

Last month, we completed the Liturgy of the Word, the first of the two main parts of the Mass. Before moving to the second part of the Mass, we would do well to review what we have learned in our examination of the holy sacrifice of the Mass.

The first principal point that we discovered is that the Mass is the highest and greatest form of prayer precisely because it is the perfect worship of God the Father by the Son; the Mass is the sacrificial self-offering of Jesus Christ, the high priest, to the Father on our behalf.

As members of Christ's mystical body, we participate in his perfect worship of the Father. His prayer becomes our prayer. And so the Mass teaches us how to pray and provides for us the basic elements of prayer.

As we inspected the Introductory Rites of the Mass, we proceeded through the Penitential Rite, the Kyrie Eleison, the Gloria and finally the Opening Collect or Prayer. We learned that prayer has the following pattern: humility and repentance, praise and adoration, and petition and supplication. The Introductory Rites move us through these elements of prayer.

But there is also a further and perhaps more significant element of prayer: receptivity, listening to the voice of God. Therefore, the Mass proceeds directly to the Liturgy of the Word, where we have the opportunity to listen to the voice of the Good Shepherd leading us to eternal truth and life.

We saw that the Liturgy of the Word incorporates the Old Testament and the New Testament, combines the foundation of Judaism with the fulfillment of Christianity.

We also learned that the Liturgy of the Word impels us to respond. The homily or sermon given by the bishop, priest or deacon is the first formal response to the Word of God with the purpose of increasing faith. Then, all the faithful respond by professing the faith of the Catholic Church, which then leads us to pray on behalf of the church for the salvation of the world in the General Intercessions. These prayers conclude the Liturgy of the Word.

But before moving on to the Liturgy of the Eucharist, it is very important to note the historical and liturgical foundation for the Mass. The Mass is not merely a Christian invention or innovation. The New Testament rests upon the Old Testament. The family tree of Christianity has Judaism as its roots.

The Liturgy of the Word is the Christian fulfillment of the Jewish synagogue. In the synagogue, the Jews would listen to the proclamation of sacred Scripture, principally the Torah or the Law and the Prophets. The rabbi would then interpret and explain the Scriptures. The first Christians, in fact, would attend both the synagogue as well as the Mass until it became clearer that Christianity fulfilled Judaism and became the new way.

As the Liturgy of the Word is the fulfillment of the Jewish synagogue, so also the Liturgy of the Eucharist is the fulfillment of the Jewish temple. In the temple in Jerusalem, live animal sacrifices were offered to God on behalf of mankind. Blood was shed as a gift, an offering, a sacrifice that symbolically represented the sacrifice of man. Life was offered for life, blood for blood, the external sacrifice of an animal representing the internal sacrifice of man.

As we discover in the Old Testament, these animal sacrifices were unable to take away sin and offer life to man. And so God sent his own son into the world. As God, he offered the one, true, eternal sacrifice of his life to the Father; as man, he offered his life on our behalf. Life was offered for life, blood for blood, but this time, Christ's sacrifice was efficacious in redeeming the world from evil, sin and death.

And so we see that the holy sacrifice of the Mass unites the Jewish synagogue with the Jewish temple, the Word of God with the work of salvation, the Liturgy of the Word with the Liturgy of the Eucharist.

Next week we will begin to look at the Liturgy of the Eucharist as we examine the three principal movements: offering, consecration and Communion.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Plenary indulgence during the Year of the Eucharist

Q. We're told that a plenary indulgence may be gained in the Year of the Eucharist, announced by Pope John Paul II. How does one gain this indulgence? (Florida)

A. Two plenary indulgences may be gained during 2005, the Year of the Eucharist, by participating attentively and piously in a sacred function in honor of the Blessed Sacrament, whether exposed or in the tabernacle. Clergy, religious and others may gain the indulgence by reciting Evening and Night Prayer from the Liturgy of the Hours before the Blessed Sacrament.

The usual conditions for plenary indulgences apply: reception of the sacraments of penance and the Eucharist, freedom from attachment to sin and prayer for the intentions of the pope.

The sick and others who cannot get to church may make the visit to the Blessed Sacrament in their hearts, and recite the Our Father and the Creed,

Orders for Scout Eucharist patch increase after pope's death

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

DODGE CITY, Kan. — Since Pope John Paul II died April 2, the Catholic Committee on Scouting in the Diocese of Dodge City has been overwhelmed with orders for its Year of the Eucharist Scout patch, according to Tim Wenzl, religious emblems coordinator.

"I see Scouts earning this patch as a tribute to Pope John Paul II," said Wenzl.

"The Holy Father proclaimed this special year to draw emphasis on the Eucharist. Scouts meeting the requirements and earning this patch will long remember that the pope died during the Year of the Eucharist," he said.

"They are responding to the Holy Father's call to understand the importance of the Eucharist in our Catholic faith," said Wenzl.

Pope John Paul II announced last June that a year of special emphasis on the Eucharist would be held in the church from October 2004 to October of this year.

According to Wenzl, the purpose of the religious activity patch program is to assist Scouts in better understanding Jesus' presence in the Eucharist, the Mass as his sacrifice and the importance of eucharistic adoration. To earn the badge, there are different requirements for Scouts in first through fifth grades and sixth through 12th grades, and for adult leaders.

The patch was created this year by the Diocese of Dodge City's Catholic Committee on Scouting. It is believed to be the only religious emblem program of this type in the country.

This religious patch program is self-administered. The requirements, to be checked by adult leaders or parents, should be completed before ordering patches.

The requirements must be completed before the end of October. Patches may be limited, so participants are urged to reserve patches prior to undertaking the requirements by sending an e-mail to Wenzl at twenzl@dcdiocese.org, or by calling (620) 227-1556.

Bishop Jugis to celebrate Masses for election of pope

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — As 115 cardinals under the age of 80 gather in the Sistine Chapel to elect a new pope, many people around the world are gathering to pray for them and the man they choose as Pope John Paul II's successor.

In the Diocese of Charlotte, Bishop Peter J. Jugis will celebrate daily Mass for the election of a pope. The Masses will be held at 12:10 p.m. at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte beginning Monday, April 18, the start date of the conclave, until the conclave is concluded.

With the exception of Monday's schedule, which includes eucharistic adoration, vespers and Benediction, the remainder of the daily schedule is subject to change when a new pope is elected. At that time, said Bishop Jugis, diocesan celebrations of thanksgiving will be scheduled.

A meeting of cardinals to elect a new pope is a conclave. The word — from the Latin "cum clave" (with key) — means under lock and key.

In 1268, cardinals couldn't decide on a new pope. After nearly three years the people finally locked them up and cut their rations. The man elected, Pope Gregory X, ordered that in the future cardinals be sequestered from the start, and eventually the practice became standard practice.

The election of the next pope will be announced by the joyous ringing of the bells of St. Peter's Basilica, as well as the traditional white smoke from the chimney of the Sistine Chapel, the Vatican said April 5.

REMEMBERING A PONTIFF

World says goodbye to the pope

FUNERAL, from page 1

For those who were unable to attend the funeral, they found ways to pay honor the pope from home.

In Pakistan, the national flag flew at half-staff April 8 as a mark of respect for Pope John Paul.

More than 40 police officers stood guard and mounted roadblocks outside Our Lady of Fatima Church in the capital, Islamabad, during a memorial Mass attended by diplomats and leaders of other faiths.

In Bethlehem, West Bank, nearly 200 faculty members and students from Bethlehem University crowded into the small university chapel for a Mass. The pope had expressed pride in the university, which was founded following his visit in 1964.

In their homes, many Israelis and Palestinians followed the funeral on their televisions.

In Haiti, some citizens recalled the first words the pope spoke as he stepped onto the tarmac at the Port-au-Prince airport in March 1983: "Things must change here."

The bishops' conference, government officials and members of the diplomatic corps attended an April 7 Mass to pay homage to the pope at the Port-au-Prince cathedral.

In Britain, political campaigning for May 5 national elections was suspended for the day of the pope's funeral as a mark of respect.

Screens were erected in London's Trafalgar Square, and some 200 mourners gathered in the rain to watch the ceremony.

Most Masses throughout Britain April 8 were suspended so Catholics could watch the funeral on television. The exception was Westminster Cathedral in London, which rang its bells to mark the start of a Mass for the pope at the time his funeral began at the Vatican.

In Wadowice, Poland, the pope's home town, a giant television screen was erected to allow residents to watch the pope's funeral.

Worshippers pray at a church in Hong Kong April 8 as they watch Pope John Paul II's funeral on television.

Many faiths

Cameras captured the international and ecumenical flavor of Pope John Paul II's funeral, but few noted the dozens of interreligious leaders attending the ceremony.

"We received so many messages by telephone, fax, e-mail, even personal visits" from people of other religions offering condolences after the pope's death April 2, said Msgr. Felix Machado, undersecretary of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue.

"Many of them also said they would like to be present if possible at the funeral ceremony," he said.

When the council told Vatican officials organizing the funeral that an interreligious group was interested in attending, the idea "was well accepted," Msgr. Machado said.

The council arranged for a special bus to pick up the more than 60 leaders and escort them to the basilica the morning of the funeral. Msgr. Machado said the group included Jews, Muslims, Sikhs, Hindus and Buddhists.

"They are our friends," he added. "The pope endeared (himself to) these people; he came to be so close to them."

One message from a Hindu in India said Pope John Paul's "unfailing love and surrender to God inspired millions to fill the spiritual void in their own lives. ... He was an example to all of us."

Msgr. Machado said Pope John Paul "never missed a chance to spend time (with people from other faiths,) so it's natural we carry on the tradition."

Politics aside

Political leaders were quick to put aside their differences to attend the pope's funeral.

U.S. President George W. Bush was just yards away from President Mohammed Khatami of Iran, a country he has labeled part of an "axis of evil."

Khatami, who met with the pope in 1999, said the April 8 gathering should be a springboard for peace.

"The presence of such high-level world figures demonstrates the world's respect" for the pope," said Khatami.

"I wish this day could be a moment that makes us hope for a future of peace, not of conflict and hostility," he said.

Representatives of troubled neighbors — India and Pakistan as well as Israel and the Palestinian National Authority — were seated in the same section reserved for heads of state in St. Peter's Square.

Israeli President Moshe Katsav and Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia were among the political leaders there who had met with the pope and, at times, had been praised and reproved by him.

The pope repeatedly had voiced to Bush his strong disapproval over the invasion of Iraq, most recently during the president's June 2004 visit to the Vatican.

But Pope John Paul's funeral gave the world's leaders the opportunity for a fresh start.

A senior Vatican official told reporters that "the funeral gave these leaders a sense of freedom. They were not afraid that people would read their actions politically."

"I saw Israelis, Muslims who greeted each other with gestures of affection," he said. "One could see these persons who clearly felt freer" than they do, for example, during U.N. assemblies or meetings.

Vatican Radio called the gathering of heads of state representing some 141 nations around the world "a sort of planetary parliament, assembled for a special session under the sign of common prayer and human solidarity" toward a pope who was loved by many near and far.

Pope John Paul set two more records April 8: He attracted the largest number of official delegates ever to attend a papal funeral, and his was the first papal funeral attended by a sitting U.S. president.

Carol Glatz and Editor Kevin E. Murray contributed to this story.

Transition time between popes offers new lessons for today's youths

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Although most young Catholics could probably recite basic church prayers and list the seven sacraments, they might be a little shaky when it comes to the technical aspects of electing a new pope.

With the election process set to begin April 18, teachers and youth ministers were trying to get their students up to speed on what takes place behind the doors of the Sistine Chapel when the 117 cardinals under the age of 80 gather in the conclave to elect Pope John Paul II's successor.

"It certainly is a teaching moment," said Mary Kunzler, chair of religious studies at Mother Cabrini High School in New York.

Kunzler said her students are interested in the whole process of selecting a new leader for the church, especially since it is so tied up with history, tradition and ritual.

Although the students are curious about the procedures for electing a pope, Kunzler said they want to know what makes a good pope and why certain cardinals would be better suited for the job.

Religion classes are natural places to fit in lessons on the conclave, but there are plenty of other ways young people can find out more about the ancient process.

Life Teen, a program for Catholic teenagers, has a section on its Web site, www.lifeteen.com, specifically dealing with the process for selecting a new pope with topics ranging from how a new pope is chosen, misconceptions about the papacy and a section explaining the hierarchy of the church.

By explaining the aspects of the papacy, Mark Hart of Life Teen said teenagers can feel like they know "the background of the story" and become more convinced that the pope's role is to "safeguard truth" not to give it.

Six new books out on Pope John Paul II

REVIEWED BY MAUREEN E. DALY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Six new books by and about Pope John Paul II were published in the last weeks of March. They are reviewed in brief here.

"Universal Father: A Life of John Paul II," by Garry O'Connor.

This is a very readable new biography of the pope, filled with literary and theatrical references that help to place the pope in the context of world culture and 20th-century history.

It has a detailed chronology of the pope's life noting significant historical events. It has a very useful listing of the pope's many publications with a brief description of the content of each. And it has a bibliography of source material and suggestions for further reading.

As an author who has written 18 other books, many on theatrical subjects, O'Connor is able to place Pope John Paul II's life in its proper artistic and philosophical context. This biography is highly recommended.

"Memory and Identity: Conversations at the Dawn of a Millennium," by Pope John Paul II.

As the realization that a great mind has passed away begins to take hold, readers may regret that they never had a chance to meet and converse with Pope John Paul II. For those readers, "Memory and Identity" will be a real pleasure.

It is the edited account of conversations that the pope had with two philosopher friends.

It gives the delightful sensation of sitting in on fascinating talk among persons of great intelligence, wide knowledge and compassionate perceptions. The topics they cover with pithy wisdom and historical insight include the limits of evil, freedom and responsibility, and concepts of patriotism, European identity and democracy.

"The Moral Theology of Pope John Paul II," by Father Charles E. Curran.

This book is a concise yet complete summary of the late pope's moral teaching.

The author gives a systematic analysis of the moral theology that underlies the pope's authoritative teachings, specifically his 14 en-cyclicals. However, this book is not a polemical critique but rather a useful and approachable summary of the pope's thinking.

Faculty of schools of theology call this book "a much-needed volume" and "an excellent overview."

"The Loving Heart: The Private Prayers of Pope John Paul II," by Pope John Paul II.

Here in the pope's own words are his thoughts and prayers on the meaning of suffering. These short selections are taken from messages written for the "World Day of the Sick" or messages addressed to the sick and suffering during his world travels or in visits to hospitals and residential clinics.

Here are words of comfort and clarity.

"John Paul II: A Life in Grace," by Renzo Allegri, translated by Marsha Daigle-Williamson.

This biography sees the pope's life through the lens of miracles, exceptions and special graces.

It moves as swiftly as an adventure story through the pope's long, eventful and sometimes apparently miraculous life. Allegri emphasizes the pope's several near brushes with death, especially the 1981 assassination attempt, which the biographer and the pope himself see as an example of the special protection of Our Lady of Fatima.

The tone is openly reverential.

"John Paul II in the Holy Land: In His Own Words," edited by Paulist Father Lawrence Boadt and Kevin di Camillo.

This useful book collects in one place the pope's speeches given during his history-making visit to the Holy Land in the Jubilee Year 2000, a map of the journey, photos, and commentary from Jewish and Christian perspectives.

Because it focuses on one topic, this book could be a good text for an adult interfaith discussion group that is interested in furthering Christian and Jewish understanding.

Daly is book review editor at Catholic News Service and is a graduate student in theology at St. Mary's Seminary and University in Baltimore.

Jesus motivates us to be living examples

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

We have watched the scene countless times on television and in the movies.

The camera brings us to the stylized graveside service. The graveside set piece provides us an opportunity to learn something new about the living in the cast as well as the dead.

Dressed in black the gathered guests listen as the minister intones the familiar lines, "In my Father's house there are many dwelling places" with some degree of authenticity. Unfortunately, the portrayal of actual faith in the proclaimed words of Jesus is seldom part of the film.

Today in John's Gospel, Jesus tries to prepare his disciples for his departure. For the men and women who had supported Jesus during his ministry, the idea that he would be leaving them had to be unthinkable.

In the questions of Thomas and Philip, we hear people like ourselves, grounded in the here and now — people who are filled with questions and want logical, down-to-earth answers. In the process of answering their questions, Jesus leaves them with more to ponder.

Why can they not see that Jesus and the Father are one? Why don't they recognize the importance of Jesus' use of the words "I am" and immediately grasp their implications? What does he intend when he says, "I am going to the Father"?

Those of us living in the early 21st century know the answer. We are able to look back through the lens of Easter faith. We know the fullness of the promise. We know how the story will unwind.

The stigma of being executed as an enemy of the state and the profound glory of being raised from the dead have become the cornerstone of the church. However, we must ask ourselves whether the risen Christ has become the cornerstone of our lives?

At the close of today's Gospel, Jesus tells Philip and all who hear his words that there is work to be done. Then and now Jesus needs real flesh-and-blood people to minister on his behalf.

A living faith and love of the risen Lord motivate us to be the comforting hands of Jesus and differentiate us from two-dimensional characters in a set piece.

'Revelations' hardly revealing

BY DAVID DiCERTO
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Primetime meets end time in "Revelations," a limited dramatic series dealing with the apocalyptic prophecies foretold in the last book of the Bible, premiering Wednesday, April 13, 9-10 p.m. EDT on NBC.

Like "The Da Vinci Code" — whose phenomenal success no doubt weighed in NBC's decision to produce the six-episode series — "Revelations" is good storytelling wrapped around bad theology.

Bill Pullman stars as Richard Massey, a Harvard professor and avowed skeptic, grief-stricken by the ritualistic murder of his young daughter by Satanist Isaiah Haden (played to villainous perfection by Michael Massee).

Natascha McElhone co-stars as Sister Josepha Montifiore, an Oxford-educated nun who travels the globe verifying miracles. A strong, intelligent and devout nun on network TV? Sound too good to be true? It is.

Midway through the first hour we learn that — though a true believer — she is a member of a borderline heretical order, at odds with the Vatican, whose superior glibly remarks that "blasphemy has its place."

Brought together by a comatose girl who speaks in tongues and appears to be channeling the spirit of Massey's dead daughter, the unlikely duo joins forces to investigate a series of strange occurrences which seem to herald a final showdown between the forces of good and evil.

Over the next five weeks, their investigation will take them from the United States to Rome and eventually the Holy Land, leading them to a mysterious child who may be either the Son of God or the Antichrist, signaling that Armageddon is already in play.

In the course of their travels, her faith challenges his dogmatic belief that everything can be explained by science.

Created by David Seltzer ("The Omen"), "Revelations" feels much like "The X-Files," with Pullman playing the part of the skeptical Scully to McElhone's more open-minded Mulder.

The glossy production value and performances are solid. But unfortunately the show's underlying theology ranges from bogus to blasphemous.

In one scene, Sister Montifiore explains that "the Bible has left a blank to be filled in by man" and that if what is unfolding truly is the end of days it can be forestalled by human efforts. In another, her superior — suggesting that Rome feels threatened by their order's heterodox beliefs — poses the question, "What validity would the pope have, as a conduit to Jesus, if Jesus were no longer in heaven listening to his prayers?"

With such questionable dialogue it is difficult to believe the producers' contentions that they consulted with biblical and theological experts during the show's writing stage.

Like the "Left Behind" franchise, the ominous-toned series takes a strict literalist approach to the scriptural source material, which, while lending itself to dramatic storytelling (plagues, pestilence, global destruction), ignores the traditionally held church position that much of the apocalyptic text is to be understood symbolically and that its message is ultimately one of hope and consolation.

On a positive note, it is good to see a network put its marketing muscle behind an overtly religious TV show which takes issues of faith and doubt seriously, and — at least based on the first episode — reverently. If nothing else, series like "Revelations" and CBS' "Joan of Arcadia" help to bring religion into the wider pop-culture conversation.

The show's creators have hinted that — should ratings merit — there may be more "Revelations" to come. With the world possibly ending in five weeks, a second season would be a neat trick indeed.

DiCerto is on the staff of the Office for Film & Broadcasting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

BRIDGING THE GAPS

Social justice workshop to highlight helping others

BY JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

MAGGIE VALLEY — "As the gulf between the rich and the working poor grows wider, it becomes more evident that we must be in solidarity with the poor," Augustinian Father John Deegan said.

Father Deegan, director of the justice and peace office of the Augustinian Province of St. Thomas of Villanova in Villanova, Penn., will present "Catholic Social Teachings: Global Issues; Local Implications," at Living Waters Catholic Reflection Center in Maggie Valley April 30.

The workshop is free and open to the public.

"It is important for the faithful not only to know the principles which underline their faith, but also to learn how they can practice that faith in their local community," Father Deegan said. "The faithful of North Carolina know their community best."

"The workshop is an opportunity for them to prayerfully reflect on the social teaching of the church and develop a model that will help them put into practice the richness of that teaching," he said.

The workshop is sponsored by the Augustinian friars and the Smoky Mountain Vicariate through a grant from the FSC (Christian Brothers) Foundation. According to Father George Kloster, vicar forane of the Smoky Mountain Vicariate and pastor of St. William Church in Murphy and Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Hayesville, the workshop's objectives are to:

Review Catholic social teaching; build bridges between those who have "fallen through the cracks" (the poor and disadvantaged) and those who can help them; learn how to influence those who develop public policy; and learn how to advocate for those impacted by global issues with global implications, such as people who lose their jobs when factories close and jobs go elsewhere.

"As a practical application of the teachings, I will share with the participants a model we are in the process of establishing which is called ADROP (Augustinian Defenders of the Rights of the Poor)," Father Deegan said.

"This model involves local faith communities assessing the needs of poor or voiceless in their communities, learning what is already being done and by whom, identifying resources that can be matched with unmet needs and collaborating in the delivery of resources to needy populations," he said.

This model follows the example of St. Thomas of Villanova himself. The Web site of the Province of St. Thomas of Villanova notes that, appointed archbishop of Valencia, Spain, in 1545, the Augustinian friar "first visited each of his parishes to see for himself what the needs of his people were. Then he used the income of his affluent archdiocese to set up social programs on behalf of the poor and the rejected."

The Web site adds that St. Thomas "established boarding schools and high schools. For young girls he provided dowries, enabling them to be married in dignity. For the hungry, he turned his bishop's palace into a kind of soup kitchen. For the homeless he provided a place to sleep, offering them the shelter of his own home. It is thus for good reason that the common folk called him the 'Beggar Bishop' and 'Father of the Poor.'"

WANT TO GO?

"Catholic Social Teachings: Global Issues; Local Implications" will be held at Living Waters Reflection Center in Maggie Valley 10 a.m.-3 p.m. April 30. The workshop, free and open to the public, includes lunch.

Attendees should register by April 22 by e-mail at lwrc@main.nc.us or call (828) 926-3833.

DEFENDING THE BONDS OF MARRIAGE

Tribunal defender reflects on 30 years of service

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — When the Diocese of Charlotte was established in 1972, there was a lot of work to be done — offices to be staffed, ministries to be created. The first offices of the fledgling diocese were located on the grounds of St. Patrick Cathedral, with fewer than 10 employees on staff.

Mary Lou Hildreth was the first employee to work with Father Justin Pechulis in the diocesan Tribunal Office.

"It was a lucky strike for me, because I had never worked before," Hildreth said.

Hildreth did not have a degree in canon law, so she received her training in Atlanta, meeting weekly with a priest who taught her about the inner workings of a tribunal office, or church court, which handles the marriage nullity process under a set of procedures and laws established as part of the universal law of the church.

She also attended workshops across the country.

"I was educated — (the diocese) sent me to school two or three times a year," she said. "We had all sorts of support from the bishop and the chancellor."

In the earliest years of working in the diocesan tribunal, Hildreth functioned as both the advocate for the cases for marriage nullity and as the defender of the bond. Today, the role of advocate is fulfilled by various lay people and permanent deacons in the diocese.

Hildreth served as the defender of the bond for more than three decades until her retirement in February. As defender of the bond, Hildreth's duty was to defend the marriage. Unlike civil law, the laws of the Catholic Church assume that every marriage is valid.

From that first year, when the tribunal handled only one nullity case, the office now handles about 400 cases each year, finishing between 50 and 75 cases. About 10 percent of all marriage nullity cases are denied by the Tribunal Office.

Hildreth said she enjoyed her work in the Tribunal Office immediately. Working in the tribunal was "wonderful," she said.

"Some people enjoy the work, and others don't," she said. "You'll see them in other tribunals — they'll only stay for six months or a year."

Stepping in Filling Hildreth's shoes as defender of the bond is Sister Sheila Richardson, a convert to the Catholic faith and an eremitic of St. Augustine.

"Mary Lou was an architect of the way the Tribunal Office operates today," Sister Richardson said. "She is well known and acknowledged for her work in the tribunal."

Sister Richardson graduated from

COURTESY PHOTO

Mary Lou Hildreth retired in February after more than 30 years of dedicated work in the diocesan Tribunal Office. She served as the defender of the bond, defending marriages being investigated for nullity.

Whittier College School of Law and practiced civil law for a major corporation for more than 10 years. She studied theology at Mt. Angel Seminary in St. Benedict, Ore., and received her degree in canon law from St. Paul University in Ottawa, Ontario.

Sister Richardson retired from the practice of law to study theology and to pursue a vocation in the consecrated life.

Sister Richardson sees her job in the tribunal as a way to free up diocesan priests to serve parishes exclusively, rather than dividing their time between parishes and the tribunal.

As marriage nullity allows divorced people to receive the sacraments again, Sister Richardson thinks of the tribunal as a "reconciliation ministry."

"The mission of the tribunal is justice and healing," said Sister Richardson. "It is also serving the divorced people of the diocese."

Theology on Tap

Program helps young people discover God in new way

The so-called new Theology on Tap is not so new after all. It may be new to me, who studied theology a long time ago, but it is old for the young theologians.

We know that this new approach is 24 years old since Father John Cusik, director of young adult ministry in Chicago, began this movement in 1981. Few more details appear in America magazine (2003), to which I refer.

There is nothing unusual about having a gathering of young men and women, laughing and talking in an informal setting while munching snacks and sipping beer. What may seem unusual is the fact that the gap generation (ages 20-35) seemed to be missing from the whole picture of the church. Where were they?

I am positive they were somewhere and nowhere to be found: they were hungry for the "word" appealing to their spiritual needs and they were thirsty for running water, rather than stagnant water.

The quest for God may have taken different approaches throughout the centuries and whenever theology brings you closer to God, that's good theology indeed. While the Theology on Tap program points to a specific format, which requires balanced and learned speakers and clear topics, there is an inner struggle in the attendees: first, to maintain and develop quality relationships with ourselves, God and others; second, to study the Scripture as it applies to our everyday lives; third, to make our Catholic identity a way of life rather than an ideology.

By reflecting on this movement, I can see three stages of the ongoing process: awakening, illumination and discovery. "God is calling me. He made me. He cares for me. I must wake up to this reality and put in my 5 cents or the whole dollar, to be generous."

Once we find ourselves in this dynamic process of being and becoming, we receive the light needed to make our journey reasonable and less risky. Natural reason, technology or marketing skills would not damage this process, but they would not help either. God, Scripture and prayer are the main sources of the illumination needed to go through the tunnel of life.

The heavens may tell us of the glory of God, the earth may declare his handiwork, but neither nature nor reason can tell us where God is, if He is not in us. Science, by nature, is unable to tell us where to find the forgiveness of sins, where to find the key to unlock the secret of our destiny.

The final stage of the quest is discovery. Having awoken from sleep, having received the light from God, we discover that we are "worshiping human beings." That's what we were in the first place. Why did it take so long to discover what we were?

Guest Column

FATHER JOHN AURILIA,
OFM Cap.

Discovery is fascinating because it is to see something that was there all along but hidden. Discovering Christ in our lives is exciting because we experience a beautiful reality that was always there, probably sleeping or in coma; then Christ, with a surprising smile, says: "John, why did it take you so long?"

God rang our doorbell many times. We even opened the door and said, "God, you must be mistaken. It's not me you want, it's my next-door neighbor."

Eventually God rings again and says, "I am positive it's you I want. Open your eyes."

At that very moment, we experience the joy of discovering God after he manifested himself to us through the Eucharist, sacraments and prayer.

Theology on Tap makes our young men and women discover God on their own terms and needs. Eventually their discussion, insight and process become faith, hope and love, and a way of life rather than a way of thinking.

The old-fashioned way, "Frank went to church on Sunday, but he went to hell on Tuesday for what he did on Monday," doesn't appeal any more. These young adults feel that the church is going to them as much as they go to the church.

A light in the world

Pope John Paul II was hero, inspiration

Pope John Paul II walked with me through my adolescence and into adulthood. As distractions came into my life, by his example, he would remind me of the things that really matter. There would be a flash of him on the television and it always helped me to get back on track.

The Holy Father was for me a constant figure of hope, a lighthouse in the distance, and a friend in times of confusion.

I remember the day he was chosen as the vicar of Christ. I felt the pride, not only as a Catholic, but also as a Polish American, familiar with the history of a country that had overcome enormous struggles but would not lose faith. In my youth, I was the recipient of many degrading "Pollock" jokes but his papacy ended those jokes. He was my hero.

Pope John Paul II showed up on the scene when I really needed a positive role model. As a teen-ager, I moved from a Catholic neighborhood to North Carolina where the percentage of Catholics was very small. But how could I feel sorry for myself or give up? I watched the pope travel all over the world and meet with so many people who did not share his religious belief. He would be my example, always showing charity as he courageously proclaimed the truth.

He demonstrated for me what it takes to be a good Catholic, even during those times when I stood alone in my faith, facing ridicule and contempt. His gentleness reminded me that what we do and how we do it really matters.

I believe every Catholic has a story or a certain stirring in the soul that resulted from Pope John Paul II. For me, he was my friend, a family member whom I looked up to with love and trust. He was there to fill my heart with hope when the world seemed to speak only of darkness.

But as we all know, it is very difficult to let go of someone we love, even when we know they have gone to a far greater place — the very place of which the pope reminded us all to never lose sight.

Some say that he will go down in history as "Pope John Paul the Great," but for me he has already won that title. His greatness was his ability to love unceasingly. When I grow weary in my daily struggles, unsure if I will be able to finish the race, he is always ahead of me saying, "Keep on going, we're almost there."

Now in my mind's eye, I see him standing with Christ on the finish line and with confidence, I see them both cheering us all on.

The case of Terry Schiavo

Are those who cannot speak in danger?

The case of Terri Schiavo is not uncommon.

The whole country was transfixed by her life and death because nearly every one of us will have to deal with these end-of-life issues sometime. I have sat with dozens of families making these difficult decisions.

In the abstract people often say, "I would not want to live like Terri Schiavo." However, in the concrete we often think differently.

A few years ago my uncle Bill, a priest, was injured in an accident. He no longer could speak or swallow. His life was sustained for nearly two years on a feeding tube similar to Terri Schiavo's. It was a graced time.

He eventually died of other causes, but he did not starve to death.

If Terri Schiavo's husband, Michael, were a practicing Catholic, this case never would have been in the courts, the Florida legislature or the U.S. Congress. He would have consulted the church's teaching on end-of-life issues. He would have allowed the feeding to continue.

St. Paul says in 1 Corinthians 6 not to bring our disputes before secular judges when they can be settled by recourse to the "holy ones" (i.e. to believers).

The courts and legislators never should have been involved in the case. As a result of their involvement, we now have crossed the line into state-ordered euthanasia.

This outcome is part of the slippery slope into a culture of death that was begun with legalized abortion, continued through assisted suicide in Oregon and now has moved to court-ordered "euthanasia" in Florida.

Catholic teaching sees life as good. We hold life as stewards, not masters.

We do not have the right to take our own life, and we do not have the right to take the life of another innocent person by assisted suicide or euthanasia.

However, we are not obligated to use extraordinary means to preserve life. We can refuse surgery, chemotherapy, radiation therapy, drug therapy, etc.

Just what is considered "extraordinary" will vary. What is ordinary in an American hospital room might be extraordinary in a Sudan refugee camp.

However, we always are obligated not to withhold ordinary means of sustaining life, which the church has defined as food, water and air.

We do not decide what kinds of life are worth living. Innocent human life is to be preserved even when the "quality" of life appears low to "healthy" people.

Even people in a "persistent vegetative state" should be given life-sustaining ordinary means. Once these procedures are begun, we should not terminate them unless they are burdensome to the patient, counterproductive or useless (e.g. the patient is dying anyway).

In the Schiavo case they were clearly not useless. They kept her alive. They were not burdensome to her or particularly burdensome to society. They were not counterproductive.

This case puts us in a dangerous position. We now have a case in which a judge has ordered the death of an innocent person based on "hearsay" evidence.

Terri Schiavo never signed an advanced health care directive. She never appointed a health care proxy. All the judge had to go on was hearsay evidence from her husband that "she would not want to live this way."

That evidence was contradicted by her parents and the rest of her family.

Courts now are deciding what kind of life is worth sustaining. Maybe they now will decide that the retarded, the insane and people with degenerative diseases like Alzheimer's or Parkinson's are not worth sustaining.

As our population ages and medical costs rise, this puts every sick person who cannot speak for himself or herself at risk.

The parish parking lot planner's auto headache

Uncle Dan

This is true: I just spent more for a tank of gas than I paid for my first car.

OK, I admit $45 in 1966 went a lot further than it does today. As a matter of fact, a $45, 1953 Ford Fairlane and $5 in gas could get a 17-year-old around town for quite a while in those days.

Regardless, if we average Joes and Janes are concerned about today's escalating fuel prices, just think what it is doing to parish parking lot planners. These dedicated people have been working diligently to repaint parking spaces and re-enforce asphalt to accommodate the enormous vehicles parishioners have been buying to satisfy the craving to own a mode of transport larger than the average commuter train.

Now fuel prices threaten to dampen sales of these monuments to metal. So parish parking lot people are caught in a field of confusion. Should they start repainting to welcome the new hybrid fuel sippers? Should they consider mapping out different sections of parking lots for different types of vehicles?

Are pastors really giving thought to scheduling Masses for classes of car owners rather than language groups? Can it possibly be true that some rural parishes are using Road War Utility Vehicles as mission chapels?

Tensions are rising.

One the one hand, many parishioners who have been driving traditionalist cars (designed to hold just a half dozen or so adults) have been increasingly intimidated by the Road War Utility Vehicles.

For the record, my personal favorite is the Schwarzenegermobile. Made popular by the governor of California and the war in Iraq, this massive machine resembles a chrome cargotainer with earthmover wheels and tires.

There are rumors that some Catholic Schwarzenegermobile owners have complained that parish parking lot speed bumps are too wimpy. They've requested "speed humps" the size of small volcanoes so they can "catch some air" on their way out of the parking lot.

The latter (the cars, not the parishioners) overlap edges of outdated parking spaces and feature threateningly tinted windows and hubcaps the size of sonar stations.

There have been rumors of Road War Utility Vehicle owners stepping out of their vehicles onto the shoulders of fellow parishioners while pretending not to see them. However, the RWUV Catholics counter that this can easily happen when someone is silly enough to park under them.

At this time it is unknown if the bishops will address the issue at their meeting in June.

Terri Schiavo and the echoes of abortion

JUDGES SHOULD NOT HAVE POWER TO ORDER DEATHS OF INNOCENTS

Terri Schiavo died the morning of this writing, March 31, after having been refused food and water for two weeks. In the horrific treatment of her — which columnist Nat Hentoff, an expert on the First Amendment, calls the longest public execution in American history — we can hear the echoes of the abortion mentality.

First, the question asked repeatedly in press reports is, "What would Terri have wanted?"

With no more evidence than the word of her disaffected husband, a Florida judge agreed with his conclusion that she would not have wanted to live this way. The appeals court agreed, saying the question was whether Terri "would choose to continue the constant nursing care and the supporting tubes" or would "wish to permit a natural death process to take its course and for her family members and loved ones to be free to continue their lives."

This type of calculation happens every day when prenatal tests show a possible disability in an unborn child. Our culture has taught women to ask, "Would the child want to live this way?" And to decide that the compassionate answer is, "No."

A recent "no regrets" article on abortion in Salon.com showed one woman's thinking:

"I did not want to raise a genetically compromised child," she wrote. "I did not want my children ... compelled to care for their brother after I died. I wanted a genetically perfect baby, and because that was something I could control, I chose to end his life."

This is why disability rights groups have spoken out against selective abortion, and came out in force in favor of saving Terri Schiavo. They are challenging the notion that a life such as Terri's is meaningless — or worse, robs others of their freedom. They are fighting the culture-of-death perception that death is better than living with a disability. And they should know.

There is another parallel to abortion. The Florida judge ordered not only that Terri Schiavo's feeding tube be removed, but also that no attempts be made to provide her with food or water. Guards standing watch at her hospice room door made sure her parents did not wet her parched lips.

In other words, it was not a right to remove medical treatment that was granted, but an order that Terri Schiavo be made to die.

In Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court said the Constitution gives a woman the right "to terminate her pregnancy." But 30 years of court rulings reveal an even more terrible truth about Roe v. Wade.

In striking down New Jersey's partial-birth abortion ban, for example, federal judge Maryanne Barry said a fetus is not "in the process of being 'born' at the time of its demise" because "[a] woman seeking an abortion is plainly not seeking to give birth." In other words, a child marked for death is something wholly different from a "wanted" child in the same physical location.

Every human life has incalculable worth and meaning, no matter its age or condition. No judge should have the power to order the death of a weak and helpless human being — in or out of the womb.

May the soul of Terri Schiavo rest in peace.

Papal tailor gearing up for new pontiff

Gammarelli's shop has served almost every 20th-century pope

BY BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

ROME — When "Habemus papam!" (We have a pope!) rings out from the balcony overlooking St. Peter's Square, most of the faithful will be waiting for the name of the 265th leader of the Catholic Church, their upturned gazes fixed on his face.

Filippo Gammarelli will be anxiously scrutinizing the new pontiff's body.

As papal tailor, Gammarelli will be more concerned with measurements and mental calculations for the outfits the new pope will need in the days following the election.

While it is not certain the next pope will call upon his services, Gammarelli's shop — founded in 1798 by his forebear, Antonio Gammarelli — served every 20th-century pontiff except for Pope Pius XII, who stuck with his family's tailor.

A few days before the April 18 start of the conclave, Gammarelli delivered three sets of outfits to the Vatican, identical except for size: small, medium and large.

About 10 tailors and seamstresses were racing to finish the order just 48 hours before the deadline. One woman worked only on hand-sewn buttonholes, 30 per cassock, while another employee focused his attention on more than 200 silk-covered buttons.

Each set consists of a white wool cassock with attached capelet, a white silk cassock and matching red capelet with buttons up the front, a skullcap, a sash and red leather shoes.

After the election and before the new pope's presentation to the public, he will quickly don the outfit that best approximates his size and sartorial taste.

"We hope one of them will fit, more or less," Gammarelli said in an interview with Catholic News Service in his store, located on a tiny street behind the Pantheon in an area chock full of stores selling clerical garb.

Pope John XXIII, one of the more rotund pontiffs in recent memory, almost burst the buttons of his first cassock, while the slender and short Pope John Paul I found even the smallest outfit too long.

When Pope John Paul II stepped onto the balcony, clad in one of the shop's white cassocks, Gammarelli breathed a sigh of relief.

"He carried himself beautifully. Before the last few years, when he began to be stooped over, he was a handsome man," Gammarelli told CNS. "He was easy to work with, very simple."

Once an order comes in from a new pope, Gammarelli and his team head to the Apostolic Palace to take measurements, which they keep on file for future requests.

Books dating back decades contain the arm, waist, inseam and head measurements of thousands of priests, bishops and cardinals, who can phone in an order from across the globe — unless, of course, weight fluctuations have impacted their sizes.

Much of the pomp and circumstance surrounding the papacy died out with Pope Paul VI, who got rid of the papal tiara and insisted on an unadorned marble slab to mark his tomb.

Likewise, the last half-century has brought a paring down of pontifical and other ecclesiastical clothing. Pope Pius abolished cardinals' silk trains, and thus also the servants trailing behind to carry them, and the decorative ermine trim and ostrich-plumed fans favored by pontiffs past went the way of the papal court and portable throne that footmen carried through the crowds.

Which is not to say ermine trim might not come back someday: "The pope can have whatever he wants," said Gammarelli.

Minuteman patrol called 'affront' to nation's history of hospitality

BY CATHOLIC NEWS

WASHINGTON (CNS) —

A coalition of religious groups decried the Minuteman Project along the Arizona-Mexico border as "an affront to internationally protected rights and to our nation's history of hospitality."

An April 13 statement from the religious groups said: "As Christians, we believe that we are called to welcome the stranger. We recognize the gifts that migrants bring to our communities. Those who sacrifice in order to assure the survival of their families are to be admired and applauded."

Six of the nine religious organizations signing the statement were Catholic.

VATICAN CITY — German Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, the 78-year-old guardian of the church's doctrine for the last 24 years, was elected the 265th pope and took the name Benedict XVI.

Appearing at the central window of St. Peter's Basilica April 19, the newly elected pope smiled as he was greeted by a cheering, flag-waving crowd of nearly 100,000 people.

"After the great John Paul II, the cardinals elected me, a simple, humble worker in the vineyard of the Lord," Pope Benedict said, in a brief talk broadcast around the world.

PEACE ON THE RUN

Msgr. Liberio Andreatta carries the torch and Brother Ibrahim Faltas carries an Olympic-type flag past barriers at the Jerusalem-Bethlehem military checkpoint during the second annual peace run in the West Bank April 14. The race included Palestinians, Israelis and Italians and was dedicated to the memory of Pope John Paul II.

Pope John Paul II recalled during West Bank peace run

BETHLEHEM, West Bank (CNS) — Some 75 runners participated in the second annual West Bank peace run, which this year was dedicated to the memory of Pope John Paul II.

"We have returned, remembering the words of Pope John Paul II: Do not be afraid," said Msgr. Liberio Andreatta, administrator delegate of the "Opera Romana Pellegrinaggi," a church-sponsored pilgrimage agency, at the send-off ceremony in Nativty Square April 14.

"Do not be afraid and open the door for Jesus Christ, and let this door be a door of love, a door of hope, a door of peace," said the monsignor.

"In this marathon we run on the legs of peace, bringing peace from Bethlehem to Jerusalem," said Msgr. Andreatta, who helped initiate the first peace run last year.

He noted that the six-mile run follows the late pope's call for Catholics to visit the Holy Land.

Some 40 Italian athletes accompanied Msgr. Andreatta to the Holy Land for this year's run.

"I am Catholic, and this is a good way of sharing with other people my belief and to become aware of this situation through sports. We can try to give an example by our actions. Little things can sometimes add a big (step)," said Elisa Sabattini, 23, of Modena, Italy, who was on her first visit to the area with her parents and grandfather.

Photographers crowded around the group of Palestinian and Italian runners at the starting line as they began the run at a leisurely, journalist-friendly, pace.

The six-mile route passed from Nativty Square along the main road out of Bethlehem — the final section of which was patrolled by Israeli soldiers — through the looming, nearly completed Israeli separation barrier at the entrance of the city.

The runners came to a near standstill several times near the wall, allowing photographers to snap their pictures.

Participants then ran undisturbed through the Israeli checkpoint and were met on the other side by some 25 Israeli runners and officials from the Israeli Ministry of Tourism, who released helium-filled balloons into the air. About a dozen Israeli schoolchildren sang Hebrew peace songs and tossed flowers onto the road.

Just outside Jerusalem, Palestinian George Michel of Bethlehem passed the marathon torch to Israeli Faloro Eyal.

After some of the runners chanted "shalom-salaam," the Italian athletes chanted "Giovanni Paulo II."

In Jerusalem, the runners were greeted by Archbishop Pietro Sambi, the Vatican's representative to Israel and the Palestinian territories, who thanked them for their "small, but meaningful gesture" for peace.

Teens' rings a symbol of their commitment to chastity

DETROIT (CNS) — Bridgit DeCarlo, 17, said she will wait to marry someone who will love and respect her for her decision to abstain from sex until marriage.

"People ask me if I'll wait until college, but it doesn't matter. I'll wait either way," she said. "If he loves me, then he'll respect my decision."

DeCarlo, a youth group member at St. Hubert Church in Harrison Township, wears a silver ring symbolizing the fact she made a commitment to abstinence during the "Silver Ring Thing" event held in March.

What began as an event for St. Hubert Church's youth group of 72 turned into an interdenominational event that drew more than 1,000 attendees, including parents and youths. More than 470 youths pledged to abstain from sex.

The idea for the chastity ring came from a story about a bride that Kevin Skalecki, co-youth minister at St. Hubert, heard from his sister.

As the bride walked down the aisle, she stopped to tell her father that she had kept the promise she made to him to abstain from sex before she was married. She then gave him the ring she had worn to symbolize that commitment.

Impressed, Skalecki researched and discovered the "Silver Ring Thing" idea, an abstinence program geared toward teens in response to them being bombarded by a sex-obsessed culture.

Parents were also encouraged to become involved because they are the ones who can continue emphasizing the message on chastity long after such an event is over, Skalecki said.

The "Silver Ring Thing" involves a multimedia presentation, talks on sex and silver promise rings that symbolize young people's decision to say no to premarital sex. Participants receive regular e-mails aimed at supporting them in their decision.

FROM THE VATICAN

Still a bureaucracy: Normal paperwork continued its flow at Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — To the extent that Vatican offices are bureaucracies, the normal flow of paper, correspondence and meeting planning continued even when there was no pope.

However, the publication of documents, the nomination of new bishops and the approval of statutes for Catholic universities and religious orders were suspended. Anything issued in the name of the Vatican or in the name of the pope was not only suspended, but must be approved by the next pope.

"The general rule is that all ordinary business continues," said the secretary of one Vatican congregation. "Like in most bureaucracies, most of our business is ordinary business."

Commissions and subcommittees continued to meet, reports continued to be prepared, letters were answered and Vatican officials tidied their desks to be able to inform the new pope about exactly where their various projects stood, officials said.

The final approvals for beatification signed by Pope John Paul II were still valid, said an official of the Congregation for Saints' Causes, although an April 24 beatification ceremony had been postponed and another on May 15 may be pushed back to accommodate the new pope's schedule.

Another Vatican official said he was "pretty sure" the abridged version of the "Catechism of the Catholic Church," which Pope John Paul had commissioned, would be released as planned during World Youth Day. A project like the so-called miniccatechism, which was almost complete when the pope died and which does not establish new teaching or norms, is unlikely to be delayed, he said.

While no final decisions could be made during the interregnum, most Vatican officials expected the new pope, St. Benedict XVI, would confirm most of the work begun under Pope John Paul.

Dying pope taught staff valuable lessons, top aide says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In addition to thanking God for the ministry of Pope John Paul II, Vatican officials offered thanks for the lessons they learned as he was dying, said one of his top aides.

"In the months marked by the progressive decline of his health," Pope John Paul's "simplicity and poverty" became even clearer, said Argentine Archbishop Leonardo Sandri, assistant secretary of state.

"It is up to us in a special way to safeguard and make fruitful that which this extraordinary pope gave to the church and the whole world over the course of his life and at the moment of his death," the archbishop told Vatican officials April 13 as he presided over a memorial Mass in St. Peter's Basilica.

The Mass, part of the church's official nine-day mourning period, was open to the public, but was entrusted especially to members of the Roman Curia.

Archbishop Sandri encouraged the officials to use the time to reflect on "the precious heritage he left."

"Those who were able to share the daily activity of the pope were witnesses to his profound love for the Eucharist," he said. "Before making important decisions, he usually would spend long periods of time before the Blessed Sacrament in his private chapel, bringing with him the dossiers to examine."

And, the archbishop said, those who were able to visit Pope John Paul in his apartment in the last weeks of his life "could not help but experience a sense of admiration for the modesty of the furnishings that surrounded him, as well as for the humility and simplicity, the sense of detachment and the total availability with which he abandoned himself into the hands of God."

Archbishop Sandri said "the great example and the precious teaching that the deceased pontiff left to those of us called to work in the Roman Curia" was "an example of simplicity and detachment, of faithful and disinterested service in the Lord's vineyard, of constant openness and docile adhesion to the will of God."

'Our Lady of the Underpass'

A man walks up and touches an image some people think looks like the Virgin Mary seen underneath the Kennedy Expressway in Chicago April 18. Many Chicagoans came by to view the image, pray or take pictures of it.

Some say image on highway underpass looks like Blessed Mother

CHICAGO (CNS) — Passers-by pulled up to look.

Some pulled out camera phones. Others returned with votive candles. And they asked each other, "Can you see her?"

A couple of dozen people at a time stopped April 18 under the Kennedy Expressway overpass where an image some called "Our Lady of the Underpass" drew enough attention to warrant traffic patrols by Chicago police officers and members of the Illinois State Police.

Officials said the image on the concrete wall appeared to have been caused by salt and other chemicals dripping from the roadway above.

Chicago archdiocesan officials said they did not intend to conduct an official inquiry into the image and have not been requested to do so.

Generally, apparitions are considered to be private revelations, according to a statement Chicago Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. Paprocki released in 1999 in response to another image of Mary. At the time, then-Father Paprocki was chancellor of the archdiocese.

While the church officials sometimes inquire into the authenticity of an apparition, such determinations "do not seek to prove or disprove the genuineness of a particular appearance of Mary, since this pertains to the personal religious experience of the individuals experiencing the appearance and to the church as a whole," he wrote.

EXALTING FAITH

Youth event draws area teens for praise, adoration

BY SUSAN DEGUZMAN
CORRESPONDENT

WINSTON-SALEM — More than 200 area teen-agers gathered recently to give praise and share in eucharistic adoration.

High school students from St. Paul the Apostle Church in Greensboro, Our Lady of the Annunciation Church in Albemarle, Holy Cross Church in Kernersville, Holy Family Church in Clemmons and Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem joined teens from St. Leo the Great Church's youth ministry for Exalt Night March 6.

Also in attendance as part of their catechetical program were confirmation candidates from St. Leo the Great Church.

"Exalt Night was held to build energy in our youth ministry program, honor our confirmation candidates and share in the celebration of the Year of the Eucharist with our teens and those from other parishes," said John Egan, St. Leo the Great Church youth minister.

Egan said he got the idea for Exalt Night from attending a Life Teen conference.

Exalt Night featured a Mass for the youths as well as eucharistic procession; live music and praise by the parish's Life Teen band, Foolish of the World; a talk on discipleship by speaker Elizabeth Wirth; and a film clip of last year's Catholic high school youth conference at Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio.

More than 40 adults, including Egan and Father Thomas Kessler, pastor, as well as the parish youth ministry's CORE team, made Exalt Night possible.

"It's natural to join others in worship and praise," said Egan. "You don't need to be taught it, just like you don't need to be taught how to cheer at a basketball game."

"We all got closer to God and had fun," said Dane Harington, one of the confirmation candidates.

"I had been unsure and doubting a lot but the time we spent in adoration made me realize God isn't the 'big guy upstairs' watching my every move and criticizing; He can be a friend, too," said fellow candidate Elizabeth Green.

Speaker Elizabeth Wirth, a junior at North Carolina School of the Arts, spoke to the teens about her experience with the 1999 shootings at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo., where she lost her best friend.

More than 200 junior high school students celebrated stories of Christbearers — witnesses past and present to Jesus' message — and enjoyed the fellowship of their peers during the Extreme Faith event held at Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point March 19. Workshops included artistic creation of icons, issues-oriented skits presented by Girl Scouts and conversations about the culture of faith.

Wirth explained how she became very angry with God during that time. One day, however, she said she heard a Gospel message of "come and follow me" that changed her feelings, allowing her to leave her burdens for God and to follow him.

Since moving to Winston-Salem, Wirth has become very active in the parish's youth ministry CORE team.

Hispanics celebrate heritage, community

Although many were from Huehuetenango, some, from other Latin American countries, were "here just to stick together for this feast," said Maximiliano Monroy, who comes from Totonacapan, Guatemala.

This was the fourth year that Guatemalan parishioners observed the feast at St. Charles Borromeo Church. The festival, which began in Huehuetenango in the 1800s and which is associated there with the feast of the Annunciation (March 25), is celebrated about 15 days after Easter.

A number of the women wore their colorfully woven cortes (skirts) and elaborately, brightly embroidered güipils (pronounced we-peels), or blouses. A statue of Nuestra Señora de la Encarnación in the church was clothed in the same traditional dress.

The festival opened on April 15 with a welcome to the attendees. Ricardo Veloz, coordinator of Hispanic youth ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte, gave a reflection on how the diocese's Hispanic community has grown.

At 6:30 a.m. Saturday, people gathered in the church for "las mañanitas," songs to Mary and the Catholic Church. Father Pablo Hernandez-Chum, who is originally from Huehuetenango, had come from Guatemala for the festival. He celebrated Mass Saturday morning.

The festivalgoers shared breakfast and played soccer. That evening, before the concert began, everyone prayed and Father Hernandez-Chum offered a reflection on Mary and the wedding feast of Cana.

Then it was time for the upbeat religious music, played by Santo Domingo and Martha y Micaela Rodriguez of Morganton; Coro Espíritu Joven (Youthful Spirit Group) of Charlotte; and Coro la Encarnación from Delaware.

Cardinal Ratzinger elected 265th pope instruments, and I especially entrust myself to your prayers," he said.

"In the joy of the risen Lord, and trusting in his permanent help, we go forward. The Lord will help us, and Mary his most holy mother is on our side. Thank you," he said.

Then Pope Benedict gave his blessing to the city of Rome and to the world. He stood and listened to the endless applause that followed, smiling and raising his hands above his head.

Pope Benedict was the first German pope since Pope Victor II, who reigned from 1055-1057. It was the second consecutive conclave to elect a non-Italian pope, after Italians had held the papacy for more than 450 years.

The new pope was chosen by at least a two-thirds majority of 115 cardinals from 52 countries, who cast their ballots in secret in the Sistine Chapel.

The election came on the second day of the voting, presumably on the fourth ballot. It was a surprisingly quick conclusion of a conclave that began with many potential candidates and no clear favorite.

"The words 'habemus papam' — 'we have a pope' — have been eagerly awaited by Catholics since the conclave began April 18," said Bishop Peter J. Jugis, after celebrating a Mass of thanksgiving for the pope's election at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte April 19.

"The Holy Spirit has responded to our prayers for a new shepherd," said the bishop. "As we celebrate this joyous day, I ask the people of the Diocese of Charlotte to join me in prayer for Pope Benedict XVI as he begins his ministry as supreme pontiff."

The day before, Cardinal Ratzinger had opened the conclave with a stern warning about moral relativism and ideological currents that had buffeted the church in recent decades.

"The small boat of thought of many Christians has often been tossed about by these waves — thrown from one extreme to the other: from Marxism to liberalism, even to libertinism; from collectivism to radical individualism; from atheism to a vague religious mysticism; from agnosticism to syncretism," he said.

"Every day new sects are created and what St. Paul says about human trickery comes true, with cunning which tries to draw people into error," he said.

Having a clear faith today is often labeled "fundamentalism," he said.

As the prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith since 1981, Pope Benedict was on the front lines of numerous theological and pastoral controversies. He was described by Vatican officials who worked with him as a kind and prayerful theologian and a gentler man than the one often portrayed in the media as an inquisitor.

He made the biggest headlines when his congregation silenced or excommunicated theologians, withdrew church approval of certain books, helped rewrite liturgical translations, set boundaries on ecumenical dialogues, took over the handling of clergy sex abuse cases against minors, curbed the role of bishops' conferences and pressured religious orders to suspend wayward members.

Pope Benedict's election was announced in Latin to a waiting world from the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica. A massive crowd of young and old filled St. Peter's Square and welcomed the news with cheers and waves of applause.

White smoke poured from the Sistine Chapel chimney at 5:49 p.m. Rome time signaling that the cardinals had chosen a successor to Pope John Paul II. At 6:04 p.m., the bells of St. Peter's Basilica began pealing continuously to confirm the election.

At 6:40 p.m., Chilean Cardinal Jorge Medina Estevez, the senior cardinal in the order of deacons, appeared at the basilica balcony and intoned to the crowd in Latin: "Dear brothers and sisters, I announce to you a great joy. We have a pope."

He continued: "The most eminent and reverend lordship, Lord Joseph Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church Ratzinger."

The crowd in the square burst into applause. Some jumped for joy, some knelt to pray and some simply stood and watched.

POPE BENEDICT XVI

Pope Benedict XVI celebrates Mass as new pontiff

Pope pledges to lead church toward unity, dialogue

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — After celebrating Mass with the cardinals who elected him, Pope Benedict XVI pledged that he would lead the church on the path of unity, dialogue and evangelization.

“I turn to everyone with simplicity and affection, to assure them that the church wants to continue to build an open and sincere dialogue with them, in the search of the true good of man and society,” he said at the end of a liturgy in the Sistine Chapel April 20.

The pope read his Latin message in a clear and forceful voice, paying tribute to Pope John Paul II and outlining the priorities of his own pontificate.

Pope Benedict said that, like his predecessor, he considered the Second Vatican Council the compass for the modern church. In particular, he stressed his commitment to ecumenism and dialogue and said he was aware that “concrete gestures” were sometimes needed to promote breaking through old antagonisms.

At the same time, he said the chief priority for the modern church is to announce Christ to the world.

“The church today has to renew its awareness of the task of re-proposing to the world the voice of the one who said: ‘I am the light of the world. Whoever follows me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life,’” he said.

“As he begins his ministry, the new pope knows that his task is to make the light of Christ shine before the men and women of today: not his own light, but that of Christ,” he said.

The pope said he had been completely surprised at his election, which came on the fourth ballot of the conclave. He said he began his papacy with two emotions: a sense of “inadequacy” and the confidence that God would help him.

In his first major talk as pope, he went out of his way to say he would proceed along the lines taken by his predecessor.

“I want to forcefully affirm the strong desire to continue in the task of implementing the Second Vatican Council,” he said.

He said Vatican II’s documents were especially relevant to the modern church and today’s globalized society and that the council’s “authoritative” rereading of the Gospel would guide the church in the third millennium.

Pope Benedict also stressed the need for close unity between the pope and the world’s bishops. This collegial communion, he said, favors “unity in the faith, on which depends in large measure the effectiveness of the church’s evangelizing efforts in the modern world.”

He asked bishops to accompany him “with prayers and with advice, so that I may truly be the ‘servant of the servants of God.’”

Pope Benedict pledged to make the search for Christian unity a special priority. He called ecumenism a “compelling duty” and said he would “spare no energy” in trying to bring Christian churches together.

Pope Benedict XVI raises the chalice during his first Mass as pontiff in the Vatican’s Sistine Chapel April 20. He became the 265th pope April 19.

He said ecumenism must go beyond theological dialogue and probe the historical motives for the divisions among Christians.

“What is most needed is that ‘purification of memory’ so often mentioned by John Paul II, which is the only thing that can lead souls to welcome the full truth of Christ,” he said.

Acknowledging his predecessor’s special relationship with young people, the new pope pledged that the church would continue to dialogue with them. He said he intended to travel in August to Cologne, Germany, for World Youth Day celebrations — a tradition begun by Pope John Paul.

Pope Benedict underlined the importance of the current eucharistic year, also an initiative of the late pope, saying the Eucharist would be at the center of the Cologne festivities and of the Synod of Bishops in October.

He asked all the faithful to reflect on the centrality of the Eucharist. Many other things — including church unity, evangelization and charity toward all, especially the poor — depend on it, he said.

In his promise to keep dialogue open, the new pope mentioned the followers of other religions and people who are “simply searching for an answer to the fundamental questions of existence and have not found it yet.”

The pope spoke fleetingly about the church’s continued commitment to peace and justice issues. He said he would continue the dialogue of his predecessors with “the various civilizations,” convinced that the conditions for a better future in the world depend on mutual understanding.

Pope Benedict told the cardinals he felt an “enormous weight of responsibility” as the new pontiff, but was certain of divine assistance.

“By choosing me as the bishop of Rome, the Lord wanted me as his vicar, he wanted me to be the rock on which everyone can lean with assurance,” he said.

“I ask him to supplement my scarce resources, so that I may be a courageous and faithful pastor of his flock, always obedient to the inspirations of his Spirit,” he said.

Pope Benedict XVI one of the most respected, controversial theologians

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — As the guiding light on doctrinal issues during Pope John Paul II's pontificate, Pope Benedict XVI is considered one of the most respected, influential and controversial members of the College of Cardinals.

The 78-year-old Pope Benedict — regarded as one of the church's sharpest theologians — has headed since 1981 the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, the Vatican department charged with defending orthodoxy in virtually every area of church life.

Over the years, Pope Benedict met quietly once a week with Pope John Paul to discuss doctrinal and other major issues facing the church. Insiders said his influence was second to none when it came to setting church priorities and directions and responding to moral and doctrinal challenges.

From November 2002 until his election, he was dean of the College of Cardinals, a key position in the time between popes. Pope Benedict presided over the preconclave meetings of cardinals in Rome, set agendas for discussion and action, and was responsible for a number of procedural decisions during the conclave.

White-haired and soft-spoken, Pope Benedict comes across in person as a thoughtful and precise intellectual with a dry sense of humor. A frequent participant at Vatican press conferences, he is a familiar figure to the international group of reporters who cover the church.

He is also well-known by the church hierarchy around the world, and his speeches at various assemblies often have the weight of a keynote address. When Pope Benedict spoke as a cardinal, people listened.

Tackling tough issues

Sometimes his remarks were bluntly critical on such diverse topics as dissident theologians, liberation theology, "abuses" in lay ministry, homosexuality, women as priests, feminism among nuns, premarital sex, abortion, liturgical reform and rock music.

As Pope John Paul's pontificate developed, some Vatican observers said Pope Benedict's influence grew.

"He's become the last check on everything, the final word on orthodoxy. Everything is passed through his congregation," one Vatican official said in 1998.

But to the outside world, he has been known as the Vatican's enforcer.

He made the biggest headlines when his congregation silenced or excommunicated theologians, withdrew church approval of certain books, helped rewrite liturgical translations, set boundaries on ecumenical dialogues, took over the handling of cases of clergy sex abuse against minors, curbed the role of bishops' conferences and pressured religious orders to suspend wayward members.

In 2003, the doctrinal congregation issued a document that said Catholic politicians must not ignore essential church teachings, particularly on human life.

Pope Benedict's congregation also published a document asking Catholic lawmakers to fight legalizing same-sex marriage.

Righting relativism

In his first decade at the helm of the doctrinal congregation, Pope Benedict zeroed in on liberation theology as the most urgent challenge to the faith. He silenced Latin American theologians like Franciscan Father Leonardo Boff and guided the preparation of two Vatican documents that condemned the use of Marxist political concepts in Catholic theology.

But after the collapse of Marxism as a global ideology, Pope Benedict identified a new, central threat to the faith: relativism. He said relativism is an especially difficult problem for the church because its main ideas — compromise and a rejection of absolute positions — are so deeply imbedded in democratic society.

More and more, he has warned, anything religious is considered "subjective." As a result, he said, in places like his native Germany the issue of abortion is being confronted with "political correctness" instead of moral judgment.

He said modern theologians are among those who have mistakenly applied relativistic concepts to religion and ethics. He said Jesus is widely seen today as "one religious leader among others," concepts like dogma are viewed as too inflexible and the church is accused of intransigence.

Strict interpretations

Pope Benedict has been particularly sensitive to wayward trends in Asian theology, especially as they find popular expression.

He banned the best-selling books of a late Jesuit theologian from India and declared a Sri Lankan theologian excommunicated for his writings on Mary and the faith. The Sri Lankan theologian later reconciled with the church.

After review by Pope Benedict's congregation, U.S. Father Charles Curran, who questioned church teaching against artificial birth control, was removed from his teaching position at The Catholic University of America in Washington in 1987. Earlier this year, Pope Benedict made a similar judgment about Jesuit Father Roger Haight, who was banned from teaching Catholic theology over his book touching on the divinity and salvific mediation of Jesus.

The pope also has focused on ordinary Catholics, saying there can be no compromise on dissent by the lay faithful. He helped prepare a papal instruction on the subject in 1998 and accompanied it with his own commentary warning Catholics they would put themselves outside the communion of the church if they reject its teachings on eight specific issues.

The same year, he issued a document on papal primacy — a topic of intense ecumenical discussion — saying that, as a matter of faith, only the pope has the authority to make changes in his universal ministry.

From the beginning

Pope Benedict's theological ideas are based on years of study, pastoral ministry and Vatican experience.

Born in Marktl am Inn April 16, 1927, the son of a rural policeman, the pope moved with his family several times during his younger years. His priestly studies began early but were interrupted by World War II.

In a book of memoirs, Pope Benedict recalled that while a seminarian he was enrolled by school officials in the Hitler Youth program; he soon stopped going to meetings. Drafted in 1943, he served for a year on an anti-aircraft unit that tracked Allied bombardments.

At the end of the war he spent time in a U.S. prisoner-of-war camp before being released.

Ordained in 1951, he received a doctorate and a licentiate in theology from the University of Munich, where he studied until 1957. He taught dogma and fundamental theology at the University of Freising in 1958-59, then lectured at the University of Bonn, 1959-1969, at Munster, 1963-66, and at Tübingen from 1966 to 1969.

In 1969 he was appointed professor of dogma and of the history of dogmas at the University of Regensburg, where he also served as vice president until 1977.

He came to the Second Vatican Council as an expert or "peritus." At the council, he was said to have played an influential role in discussions among the German-speaking participants and gained a reputation as a progressive theologian.

After the council, he published several major books, including "Introduction to Christianity," "Dogma and Revelation" and "Eschatology." He was named a member of the International Theological Commission in 1969.

Pope Paul VI appointed him archbishop of Munich and Freising in 1977 and named him a cardinal later that year.

Before his election, Pope Benedict lived in an apartment just outside the Vatican's St. Anne's Gate. He walked to work daily across St. Peter's Square, rarely attracting people's notice.

"'Last Kiss' by Richard Staley is the superbly written story of Patrick, an ordinary man who is always busy...perhaps too busy to give one last kiss to one near and dear to him. Yet an extraordinary angel shows him the importance of never taking people for granted in this often chaotic and ever-changing world. 'Last Kiss' is commended as an especially thoughtful, original, and heartwarming novel."

Sales of papal memorial cards top half-million

Pope's death brings spike in his books, says USCCB publishing office

BY JERRY FILTEAU
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Sales of two papal memorial cards topped half a million within 10 days of Pope John Paul II's death, said Patrick Markey, associate marketing director of the publishing office of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

When the pope died April 2, the USCCB publishing office posted information about purchasing the cards on its Web site. The office printed 200,000 copies of the cards initially and began shipping them out April 4.

Markey told Catholic News Service April 12 that the third printing run of 200,000 was nearly gone. Sales had reached 562,000 that day and "I expect it to be 600,000 by tomorrow," he said.

One of the cards features a photo of the pope praying during his 1995 visit to Baltimore and the papal quote, "And yet I do not altogether die/what is indestructible in me remains! .../What is imperishable in me/now stands face to face before him who is."

The other card features the newly elected pope giving a blessing in St. Peter's Square in 1978 and a prayer used in the liturgy to pray for a deceased pope. Markey said sales of that card were just slightly ahead of the first card.

He said the publishing office had also sold about 40,000 copies of a two-color, two-sided bulletin insert on how a new pope is elected. The inserts can be purchased, but parishes and schools also have permission to download an electronic copy of the insert from the USCCB Web site and reproduce it without charge.

Pope John Paul's death has also brought a spike in sales of books by or about him. Markey said the publishing office sold 10,000 copies of "The Poetry of Pope John Paul II: Roman Triptych" in a five-day period after the pope died, and at one point it hit No. 15 on Amazon.com's top-seller list.

The book contains poetry the pope wrote in 2002 when "he was already ill and knew his death was approaching," Markey said.

He added that in one of the poems the pope writes about his own death and the conclave that would follow to elect his successor.

Several books on or about the pope were among top sellers April 12 in the online listings of Amazon.com and Barnes & Noble.

God's love eases life's difficulties

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Maureen was a young mother of three preschoolers when her husband's alcoholism got the better of him and he walked out on the family. She lived on welfare supplemented by meager wages from the part-time, temporary odd jobs she could pick up when her own mother was able to baby-sit.

Emotionally, she was sustained by continuing to meet with a support group run by a social-service agency. Hard times continued into her children's teen-age years when it became clear that her son had a mental illness.

Some 30 years later, Maureen is at peace with her life even though she continues to experience many trials involving her son's illness and not a single day without worrying about his well-being.

A committed advocate for the mentally ill, she is an administrator and counselor for the agency of which she once was a client. She has a close relationship with her daughters, who provide loving moral support for both their mother and brother.

Recently when I asked her how she managed to survive such constant hardship with seeming equanimity, she said, "Well, you know what they say: God won't give you more than you can handle."

Yes, I did know what "they" say. I'd heard that unattributed adage before. But it's wrong, and I believe Maureen would agree if she thought the statement through.

Actually, it's backward. God doesn't give us tribulation. Rather, the human condition creates the tribulations. But God gives us the strength, knowledge and understanding we need to withstand them — and, in fact, to plow through them to redemption.

Maureen is a perfect example of how the Lord does this, and it is explained in today's Gospel. She committed herself to love for God through loving her family, herself and other suffering people.

"If you love me," Jesus tells his disciples, "you will keep my commandments, and I will ask the Father and he will send you another Advocate to be with you always, the Spirit of Truth."

That truth is redemption. Note its tie to love. Love leads to following God's way, which is hard. But in following, Jesus' spirit is with us, redeeming — in love — hardship and pain for joy and happiness.

Crime sped up ‘Joan of Arcadia’ creator’s move to join church

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Most people who consider joining the Catholic Church move at the pace that best suits them. For Barbara Hall, creator and executive producer of “Joan of Arcadia,” however, it was crime that helped speed up the process.

“I had this life-threatening experience. I was a victim of a violent crime,” Hall said during an interview from Los Angeles, where she was wrapping up the last episode of the second season of “Joan of Arcadia.”

Raised a Methodist, “I was ‘nothing’ for a long time. I was an intellectual in college,” Hall recalled, “And then when I came to California, I started researching all kinds of metaphysical stuff, and all the world religions.”

Before the crime incident, which she did not elaborate on, Hall said she was already considering Catholicism, but the crime “accelerated my search. I found a church nearby and I went to a Mass, and that did it for me.”

Hall has been a Catholic for about four years. She told CNS she had been developing the idea for “Joan of Arcadia” even before she joined the church. She said she “actually got started about three years before.”

While many would be surprised to hear that it was crime that spurred Hall’s decision to join the Catholic Church, “I think people would be aghast if they found out that ‘Joan’ might not be back next season,” she noted.

The series, which deals with Joan of Arc-like visions of God — but with a present-day teen-age girl — is completing its second season, but it may not return for a third.

“People who see it love it and think it’s doing well, but they don’t know the whole story,” Hall said.

“Joan of Arcadia,” which airs 8-9 p.m. Fridays on CBS, ranks 71st of 180 series that have been placed in more or less permanent time slots this season on the six commercial broadcast networks, with 8.11 million on average tuning in each week.

“Networks tend to think in terms of nights, and not in terms of (individual) shows,” Hall told CNS, adding that CBS has eight to 10 new dramas in development for the 2005-06 season.

There is no guarantee that one of them — or all of them — would make the fall schedule, but if CBS believes it has developed a strong string of new dramas, a series like “Joan of Arcadia” could find itself on the outs after only two seasons, Hall said.

Still, “I don’t fidget. If I had any fidgeting, it would have been in the middle of the season when I tried to get the (ratings) numbers up,” she added.

“I have a Catholic attitude about it. I’ve done my job,” she said. “There’s nothing I can do anymore. I’ve done my best.”

Last year when she was honored by Catholics in Media Associates for the show, Hall said she felt compelled to create it to “initiate a conversation with the rest of the country or the world to begin a dialogue about the possibility of God. This is a show also for the alienated, the disenfranchised, the hopeful but doubting public.”

When she’s not producing “Joan of Arcadia,” Hall has an alternative-country band for which she plays guitar and sings.

Minuteman patrol 'affront' to nation's hospitality patrol the border for one month, starting April 4, because of participants' dissatisfaction with ongoing illegal crossings into the United States by Mexican and Central American immigrants.

About 635 people — not all from Arizona — have volunteered to take part in the patrols. Some, but not all, are armed.

"We understand that many of those participating in this project are heavily armed," the religious groups' statement said.

Organizers of the Minuteman Project said its "call for volunteers is not a call to arms, but a call to voices seeking a peaceful and respectable (resolution) to the chaotic neglect by members of our local, state and federal governments charged with applying U.S. immigration law."

The Minuteman group claimed that its volunteers' observations of border activity and their calls to authorities had resulted in 268 apprehensions by the U.S. Border Patrol through April 12. Volunteers were instructed to leave all physical contact with immigrants to Border Patrol agents.

About 400 volunteers were patrolling 23 miles of the border in the San Pedro Valley of eastern Arizona.

"Their intent to corral and harass the migrants they encounter is an affront to internationally protected rights and to our nation's history of hospitality," said the religious groups' statement. "Law enforcement officials have been properly charged with the role of monitoring immigration along our Southern border. Any attempt to usurp these duties is inappropriate."

The statement said it supported ongoing "unity events" in U.S.-Mexican border communities "to remedy xenophobia, fear and division perpetuated by the actions of the Minutemen."

"Beyond what was said, I believe it to be very important to try and understand the reason why people are being forced to try and cross the border illegally," said Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott, director of Hispanic Ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte.

The 46-county diocese has seen a large increase in its Hispanic population in recent years.

"We would find that the economic situations in the home countries are depressed and result in families not being able to support their families," she said. "To stem the flow of immigrants seeking better work opportunities, our government official need to look into the 'whys.'"

Catholic groups signing the statement were the Oblate Justice and Peace Office, the Religious Task Force on Central America and Mexico, the Maryknoll Office for Global Concerns, the Medical Mission Sisters Alliance for Justice, the Columban Justice, Peace and Integrity of Creation Office, and the Network Catholic social justice lobby.

Other signers were the American Friends Service Committee, the Washington office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) and United Church of Christ Justice and Witness Ministries.

Iowan auctions host on eBay site unidentified person from Iowa sold what was described as a host consecrated by Pope John Paul II during a Mass in Rome in 1998.

"The holy Eucharist is central to our faith," Msgr. Roger Augustine, diocesan administrator of Sioux City, said April 12.

"Our Catholic doctrine teaches us that the Eucharist is the true presence of Jesus Christ and is to be consumed and not put on display as you would a souvenir," he said. "The public auction of such a strong symbol of our faith is highly offensive and disrespectful."

Diocesan officials learned about the eBay posting April 11. The same day the host was sold for a reported $2,000.

Jim Wharton, communications director for the diocese, said a Catholic from Santa Clara, Calif., purchased the Eucharist so that it would not get into the wrong hands.

Wharton said he received responses from Catholics around the country who expressed concern that a Communion host that was apparently consecrated had been put on a public Internet auction.

When they learned of the auction, diocesan officials attempted to contact the seller via e-mail to explain the inappropriateness of the sale and ask that the Eucharist be taken off the auction site, but they did not receive an immediate reply.

On April 12, the diocese planned to contact both the seller and eBay to seek termination of the auction.

"Before we could do that, we learned that the Eucharist and other items had been sold," said Msgr. Augustine.

However, the diocese then reported the sale was not finalized and seller had withdrawn it and given it to church officials. Msgr. Augustine met April 15 with the seller and said the seller deeply regretted the effort to sell the Eucharist and extended a personal apology to him, the diocese and any others who were offended by the eBay listing.

The host was given to Msgr. Augustine to be properly disposed of according to the dictates of church law.

In his eBay listing, the seller described the host as having been consecrated by Pope John Paul II during a Mass he celebrated in Rome in 1998 to mark his 20th anniversary as pope. The seller claimed to have received the host when Communion was distributed, even though the seller said, "I'm not Catholic but I found it all so interesting."

"I am most grateful that the seller agreed that it was in everyone's best interest to bring this issue to a positive conclusion," said Msgr. Augustine.

Diocesan officials said they still have differences with eBay and its policy governing the listing of items that could be offensive to people of faith.

eBay said the company reviewed the listing for the host on the site but found it did not violate company policies.

The new pope

Pope Benedict XVI will be blessing for truth of Catholic Church

God always blesses his Church with the type of leader it needs at each time in history.

That was true with Pope John Paul II, and it is true with Pope Benedict XVI, formerly Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger. His role as the head of the church's doctrinal office, the sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, may seem to some a far cry from what he now has to do as the universal pastor of the church. Some see enforcing doctrinal orthodoxy as perhaps in tension with reaching out, as the vicar of Christ, to unite and welcome all humanity into the arms of the loving Savior.

But the roles are closer to each other than one may think. In fact, they are aspects of one another, because compassion is not opposed to truth, nor is truth opposed to compassion.

It is only when one presents the truth, in all its fullness, vigor and clarity that one can be pastoral. To "shepherd" the flock includes shepherding them into the truth, and Cardinal Ratzinger has had a special gift for precisely that.

In particular, one of his key gifts is to articulate the fact that there is such a thing as truth. To give a modern answer to the culture's echo of Pilate's question, "What is truth?," is a key demand of the papal office in our day.

To tell the culture that there is a right and wrong, and we can know it, is a key demand of compassion, a requirement of being a good shepherd. To remind people that we are capable of discerning what is good for humanity and what is destructive, what constitutes respect for life, what the gift of marriage and family really are, and what love is, becomes a service and a blessing to our generation.

Truth and compassion are two sides of the same coin. That includes the truth about the relationship between the church and politics.

Cardinal Ratzinger wrote, "The church must make claims and demands on public law and cannot simply retreat into the private sphere." He said that the fundamental political task of the church is to make sure that the state has a conscience.

"Where the church itself becomes the state freedom becomes lost. But also when the church is done away with as a public and publicly relevant authority, then too freedom is extinguished, because there the state once again claims completely for itself the jurisdiction of morality" (Ratzinger: "Church, Ecumenism, and Politics," 1988).

At the special consistory of cardinals called together in 1991 by Pope John Paul II to address the critical challenges to the sanctity of human life in the world, the future Pope Benedict XVI made a comprehensive report in which he applied this Church-State theme to the right to life:

"...[A] State which arrogates to itself the prerogative of defining which human beings are or are not the subject of rights, and which consequently grants to some the power to violate others' fundamental right to life, contradicts the democratic ideal to which it continues to appeal and undermines the very foundations on which it is built.

"By allowing the rights of the weakest to be violated, the State also allows the law of force to prevail over the force of law. One sees, then, that the idea of an absolute tolerance of freedom of choice for some destroys the very foundation of a just mode of social life.

"The separation of politics from any natural content of law, which is the inalienable patrimony of everyone's moral conscience, deprives social life of its ethical substance and leaves it defenseless before the will of the strongest."

We at Priests for Life rejoice in the election of Pope Benedict XVI. He will be a blessing for the pro-life movement and for all people who find comfort that there is such a thing as truth, particularly the truth that life is sacred.

A time of pain, a time of hope

Evangelization is natural element of life

The Catholic Church recognizes evangelization as its mission — a mission that we, as baptized members, all share. From "Evangelii Nuntiandi" by Pope Paul VI and "Redemptoris Missio" by Pope John Paul II, to "Go and Make Disciples" by the U.S. bishops, church leaders, through their writings, challenge us to this task.

Yet, where do we begin? And how should we go about it?

At times, these questions become stumbling blocks as evangelization is seen as an intimidating task that requires knowledge, not only of the Gospel message, but also of many of the church's teachings. My first response is to simplify the process and say that if we are truly called to evangelize, it should be a natural element of daily living.

Sharing our faith, in reality, means practicing the Gospel message — and for that a theological degree is not necessary. God challenges us to evangelize with our lives.

Recently, my family confronted this reality during a tragic moment.

My uncle was killed in a car accident last week. It was an event that pained and shocked not only my family, but also many in the city of Miami.

Father Angel Villaronga, a Franciscan priest, was very popular in the Miami Hispanic community. Known for his preaching abilities, he not only preached parish missions throughout Miami and other parts of the United States, but he also had been a pioneer in bringing the Gospel message to the radio airwaves since 1964.

He even had a five-minute television program, "The Last Word," where he gave a spiritual reflection on a local station before it signed off the air each day. In addition, he led many pilgrimages to the Holy Land and served as spiritual director in the Christian Family Movement.

Flying to Miami, I did not remember the priest as much as I remembered my uncle, my "spiritual twin" who served as a role model at times. I felt empty. The suddenness of his death consumed me as well as the rest of my family.

During the viewing, my family received word that the man who ran the red light and caused the accident wanted to meet with us. His name was Guillermo. We were told that, although he was not a practicing Catholic, he had turned to a priest when he realized the extent of what had occurred.

We agreed to see him.

I did not know what to expect. On Thursday evening, we went to the small chapel in the church where my uncle's body was laid. A young man in his early 30s entered, accompanied by a priest. The first thing I noticed was that there were no scratches on his face, no bandages, no limp. He appeared unhurt.

I also noticed he was crying.

A silence hung in the room for 15 seconds, broken only by the man's sobs and our own tears. Then my aunts and uncle left their seats and approached the man. One by one they hugged him. Slowly the rest of us did the same. Through his tears, Guillermo kept saying, "Forgive me."

I remembered the words of Jesus on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they don't know what they do." I spoke with Guillermo and I told him that I forgave him, that I knew God had forgiven him and that I also knew that my uncle, a man of peace, had forgiven him.

I told him that, hours earlier, we had prayed for the person who had caused the accident, without knowing anything about him. I told him that I wanted him to be at peace. Through my tears I hugged him.

Our family then prayed with him — simple prayers: the Our Father and Hail Mary. I heard myself say, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us."

Guillermo left with the priest. I spoke with the priest a few days later — they had continued to see each other. The experience of that night remains with him and I know that he has begun a healing journey towards God. I realize that this journey may be a long process and that our encounter that night was only a step along the way.

But I also recognize that it was a very important step.

Looking back, I was surprised at the strength my family had at that moment; at the same time, I also realize that we had no choice. We were sharing what we had learned, what we believed. For some reason, it was a natural response to his pain.

Evangelization, in the midst of tears and grief. And forgiveness.

The fundamentals of a news story

Sometimes the press can help right a wrong

The Diocese of Charlotte and several charitable organizations operating in Charlotte recently experienced first hand the power of the news media.

Late on a recent Friday afternoon, I received a telephone call from Ken Garfield, the religion reporter for The Charlotte Observer. His voice was charged with energy that told me he was on to a hot story.

Garfield had obtained a letter written by a minister at Central Church of God, a large fundamentalist Christian church in Charlotte. It was addressed to several organizations that provide services to the poor. The church was withdrawing its support from these groups because, "We feel we should abstain from any ministry that partners with or promotes Catholicism, or for that matter, any other denomination promoting a works-based salvation."

Huh? I was under the impression that criticizing our faith for its dedication to good works was an idea that went out of style with Beate boots and beehive hairstyles.

Garfield was seeking a response from the diocese. In the Saturday edition of the Observer, the following quote from the chancery appeared:

"As Catholics, we firmly believe that salvation for the world came through the suffering, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Through his Passion, Jesus Christ has already completed the work of salvation. "Jesus calls us to love one another and that love must demonstrate itself in good works. Engaging in good works is putting your faith into action.

"We earnestly hope that we can sit down with fellow Christians at Central Church of God and clarify our mutual understanding of God's word as put forth in the Scriptures. This apparent attempt to divide the faith community is most unfortunate."

I was grateful for the lengthy quote that accurately described the role of good works in our faith. But the newspaper left out the best line: "What does it mean to accept Jesus? Is it only to admire him or is it to follow him?"

As followers of Christ, we emulate his good works though the establishment of institutions such as Catholic Social Services. Individually, we do everything from visiting the sick to building houses to feeding the hungry. The list could go on and on.

Editing aside, the article apparently touched off a firestorm of criticism within Central Church of God. Even though the letter was written three weeks before the newspaper published it, one day after the article appeared, Central Church of God retreated from its statement.

The next day, Sunday, pastor Loran Livingston announced to his congregation that the church would resume support of two of the charities. But a third charity, which had accepted the help of Muslim volunteers, is still blacklisted.

The Observer reports the congregation supported the preacher's announcement with a standing ovation. An apology to Catholics and Muslims would have been nice, but neither was part of Livingston's sermon.

In changing his mind, it is obvious that he was responding to the intense heat one feels under the magnifying glass of news media scrutiny. I understand from members of his congregation that he also received a lot of feedback from the people in his pews. Apparently our brothers and sisters at Central Church of God feel as we do — that charitable acts are part of a complete life of faith. It's likely that most were not aware that the letter had been written.

The media, in this case The Charlotte Observer, played an important role in righting a wrong that affected charitable institutions. News coverage can enlighten and transform. It can also burn as it directs the attention of thousands of readers and listeners to a situation, a cause or a problem.

Our church has plenty of experience on the hot side of a media firestorm; fortunately that was not the case with this story.

Letters to the Editor

Accessibility needed

I enjoyed reading Frank Villaronga's column, "The accessible pontiff" (April 8). I believe the main point he made is the necessity, or at least desirability, of accessibility for evangelization.

I am a convert, having felt that I should become Catholic since at least the age of 5. I don't know why (I felt this way), but I did have Catholic neighbors and my grandparents had Catholic neighbors. However, growing up in the public school system while all the Catholics in town went to parochial schools, I was "starved" to meet Catholics (my age).

Thank you again for Mr. Villaronga's column, and your whole issue on our beloved Pope John Paul II.

Lessons in capital punishment

Killing does not bring peace; forgiveness does

"The Catholic Campaign to End the Use of the Death Penalty" was launched by the U.S. bishops the Monday of Holy Week.

Considering that Jesus was a victim of capital punishment, it was highly symbolic for this campaign to begin within the shadow of Good Friday.

Attending the March 21 press conference was Cardinal Theodore McCarrick of Washington, Kirk Bloodworth, a wrongly convicted death-row inmate, and Bud Welch, father of Oklahoma City bombing victim Julie Welch.

Cardinal McCarrick speaking for the U.S. hierarchy, said: "Our bishops' conference has opposed the death penalty for 25 years. But this campaign is new. It brings greater urgency and unity, increased energy and advocacy, and a renewed call to our people and to our leaders to end the use of the death penalty in our nation. ...

"We believe human life is a gift from God that is not ours to take away. Our faith commits us to the life and dignity of every human person. ... We cannot teach that killing is wrong by killing. We cannot defend life by taking life."

(I hope the American bishops soon will use this same logic to launch a similar campaign denouncing war.)

Pope John Paul II, during a 1999

Mass in Mexico City, said: "The new evangelization calls for followers of Christ who are unconditionally pro-life — who will proclaim, celebrate and serve the Gospel of life in every situation. A sign of hope is the increasing recognition that the dignity of human life must never be taken away, even in the case of someone who has done great evil."

According to the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty, capital punishment is not a deterrent to murder. They cite a New York Times survey that demonstrated that homicide rates in states with capital punishment have been 101 percent higher than those without the death penalty.

Amnesty International says that the murder rate in Canada has dropped 40 percent since the death penalty was abolished there.

Since 1976, 117 people in 25 states have been released from death row after evidence proving their innocence was discovered. The strong possibility that state-sanctioned killing could end the lives of innocent people should in itself be enough to motivate us to end capital punishment.

Killing does not bring peace; forgiveness does. This is the lesson we can learn from Bud Welch.

Before Timothy McVeigh, who was convicted of killing Welch's daughter and Making a Difference

TONY MAGLIANO
CNS COLUMNIST

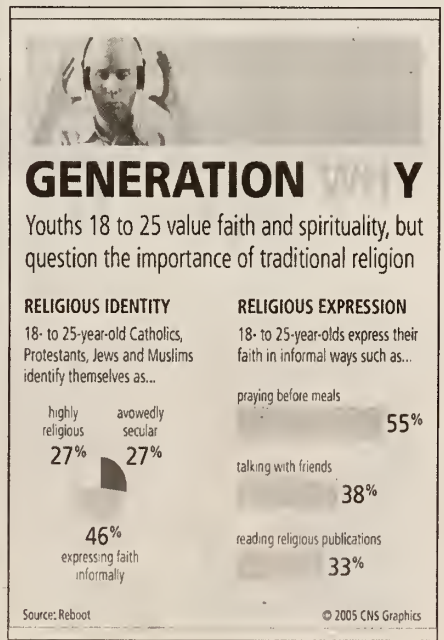

167 other people in Oklahoma City, was executed, Welch asked himself, "What does Bud Welch need to do to move on?"

Upon reflection he realized that only forgiveness leads to reconciliation and healing. He realized that executing McVeigh would be an act of vengeance and rage.

"And vengeance and rage," he concluded, "are the very reasons that Julie and the 167 others were killed."

We have a right to be protected from dangerous individuals, and sentences of "life without parole" can help provide that protection. However, the death penalty does not protect us, it hurts us. Capital punishment causes bitterness and violence to fester in our souls. It makes us less human, less God-like.

May Christ's victory over sin and death inspire us to nurture a forgiving heart and a civilized response to evil. May we live like the Master in the knowledge that violence only begets more violence and that justice at its best is tempered by mercy.

PARISH PROFILE

Our Lady of the Americas Church serves growing, diverse Catholic community

BISCOE — When Our Lady of the Americas Church was founded in 1989, a multicultural outreach to the ever-growing Hispanic community in the Diocese of Charlotte was further strengthened.

Then-Bishop John F. Donoghue, along with Oblate Father Gerard Clarke, established the first Catholic church in Montgomery County. Among the local population were thousands of Hispanics, whose rich cultural and religious heritage is reflected and lived in Our Lady of the Americas Church.

Father Clarke, who had previously served as chaplain at the Hispanic Center in Charlotte, was designated administrator.

Bishop Donoghue dedicated and blessed the church in February 1990. Two Masses in Spanish, along with one in English, were scheduled originally. Since then, growth in the parish prompted the addition of a Saturday vigil Mass as well.

In an effort to promote the Hispanic culture and religious identification, Our Lady of the Americas Church was adorned with symbols: an image of Our Lady of Guadalupe and a large candle with many colored bands representing the flag colors of Hispanic peoples.

For Hispanics and Anglos, the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe is significant in that she was specified patroness of Latin America in 1910 by St. Pius X and patroness of the Americas by Pope Pius XII in 1945.

The emphasis on community is strong in the parish, with ethnic lines disappearing into a cooperative effort involving Hispanic and Anglo parishioners alike. Anglo parishioners, of which there are about 100, work side by side with their Hispanics brothers and sisters to maintain the church's vitality.

Parish volunteers renovated the church building's interior in 1992, and a group of retired parishioners maintains the church grounds and assumes the responsibility of church repairs.

The educational mission within Our Lady of the Americas Church is shared by volunteers through an active faith formation program taught in English and Spanish. Hispanic parishioners learn English at the church as well.

Several thousand immigrants, mostly Hispanic, have moved to the Biscoe area in the past 15 years.

Father Clarke served as administrator until 1997. Father Mark Lawlor served as administrator from 1997 until 1999. Following Father Lawlor's administration, Father Fidel Melo served as administrator of Our Lady of the Americas Church from 1999 until 2001.

In 2005, a capital campaign was initiated to construct a permanent church building. A 15-acre plot of land was purchased in Candor, five miles east of Biscoe.

The multicultural celebration was attended by several hundred of Montgomery County Catholics.

NEW PRIEST IN TOWN

Father Steven Boes, a priest of the Archdiocese of Omaha, Neb., has been named executive director of Girls and Boys Town, effective July 1. His appointment was announced at a press conference April 14. He is the fifth priest to hold the post since Father Edward Flanagan founded Boys Town in 1917.

Omaha priest named executive director of Girls and Boys Town

OMAHA, Neb. (CNS) — The Girls and Boys Town national board of trustees announced April 14 the selection of Father Steven Boes as the executive director of Girls and Boys Town, effective July 1.

He will be the fifth priest to hold the post since Father Edward Flanagan founded Boys Town in 1917.

"I am excited to have a hand in writing the next chapter in the Boys Town story, to build upon its track record in this its 88th year of changing the way America cares for its children and families," Father Boes said at a press conference on the Girls and Boys Town campus.

Father Boes, 45, will succeed Father Val Peter, who will retire as executive director June 30.

As a priest of the Archdiocese of Omaha for 20 years, Father Boes is currently the director of the St. Augustine Indian Mission and senior associate pastor of several churches.

Archbishop Elden F. Curtiss said he was pleased Father Boes was selected to lead Girls and Boys Town.

"The commitment to youth he demonstrated during his years as director of the mission school, his considerable pastoral experience, as well as his administrative talents, makes him an excellent choice for executive director," he said. "I have every confidence that Father Boes will provide quality leadership for Girls and Boys Town and will successfully carry forward the work of Father Flanagan."

The national search began in June 2004, with more than 150 candidates — men and women from both lay and religious backgrounds — considered from across the United States.

Girls and Boys Town, the original Father Flanagan's Boys' Home, is a leader in the treatment and care of abused, abandoned and neglected girls and boys. For more than 87 years, the nonprofit, nonsectarian organization has provided these children with a safe, caring environment where they gain confidence to get better and learn skills to become productive citizens.

In 2004, a record number of children — 43,654 — received help from Girls and Boys Town's direct care programs at 19 sites in 15 states and in the District of Columbia. More than 500,000 children and families were helped through the Girls and Boys Town national hot line and nearly 1 million more were served through outreach and professional programs last year.

Ex-Illinois police officer named head of child protection office

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops have hired the second female law enforcement officer to head their office that is responsible for helping them apply their child sex abuse prevention policies.

She is Teresa Kettelkamp, who helped conduct the annual audits in 2003 and 2004 of U.S. dioceses and Eastern-rite eparchies to monitor compliance with the bishops' abuse policies.

The announcement of her appointment as executive director of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Office of Child and Youth Protection was made April 15.

Kettelkamp retired in 2003 as deputy director of the Illinois State Police Division of Forensic Services after 29 years with the Illinois police force. She was the first woman to attain the rank of colonel in the Illinois State Police.

Kettelkamp began her new post at USCCB headquarters in Washington April 13. She replaced Kathleen McChesney, who resigned in February after heading the office since its inception in December 2002.

"I'll work tirelessly to continue to give victims a voice, to encourage them to come forward for healing and to strengthen the protection mechanisms for children," which were implemented in the bishops' 2002 "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People," said Kettelkamp.

After retiring from the state police, she became part of the teams organized by the Gavin Group Inc., of Boston to conduct the annual audits of dioceses and eparchies.

Her Illinois police work at one time involved supervising 28 specially trained agents in the investigation and recovery of missing children. Many of the children were victims of sexual abuse.

As head of the forensic service, she managed the second largest forensic system in the nation and the third largest in the world.

Vatican sets up e-mail addresses for Pope Benedict

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican created a series of new e-mail addresses so people around the world could send a message to the new pope.

Well-wishers can send Pope Benedict XVI an e-mail using any one of the six different addresses set up by language.

English (benedictxvi@vatican.va), Spanish (benedictoxvi@vatican.va), German (benediktvi@vatican.va), as well as Italian, French, and Portuguese e-mail addresses were activated and made public the morning of April 20, just 16 hours after the new pope was elected.

"In just two days after the accounts were set up, we received over 56,000 e-mails," said Legionaries of Christ Father Fernando Vergez, an official in the Vatican's Internet office.

"We didn't publicize anything," he said. "People just know that when there is a special event we usually highlight it on our Web site."

The majority of people chose the English e-mail address, which received more than 30,000 e-mails in 48 hours.

The Vatican Web site, www.vatican.va, featured a brand new home page design with the words "Habemus papam" (We have a pope) and "Benedictum XVI" emblazoned under the new pope's chosen coat of arms. Internet users can click on one of six languages listed on the home page to get to the page featuring the pope.

From there, by clicking on the "Focus" sidebar featuring a photo of Pope Benedict on the day of his election, users are sent to a new section that provides the links to send the pope greetings and to watch events broadcast live by Vatican television.

HICKORY — A Charismatic Mass is celebrated the first Thursday of each month in Sebastian Chapel of St. Aloysius Church, 921 Second St. NE, at 7 p.m. For further information, contact Joan Moran (828)-327-0487.

Governor says Catholic politicians can balance church, secular laws

ROME (CNS) — Catholic politicians can balance guidance from the Vatican with a commitment to following secular laws, said the head of the U.S. delegation to Pope Benedict XVI's April 24 inauguration Mass.

"I take advice from the leader of my church very seriously," Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida said at a press conference the afternoon before the Mass.

"I also have a duty to uphold the laws of the state. I don't believe this necessarily has to be in conflict," he said, adding that religious leaders have a right to take a stand on political issues.

"This helps not just Catholic governors, but others as well," said Bush, who in 1996 became a Catholic, which is the faith of his wife, Columba.

Other members of the delegation included Maryland Lt. Gov. Michael Steele; Carl A. Anderson, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus; Helen Alvare, associate professor of law at The Catholic University of America, Washington; and Frank Hanley, president emeritus of the International Union of Operating Engineers.

Bush said he was sure Pope Benedict would continue Pope John Paul II's emphasis on human dignity.

"The dialogue about creating a culture of life is one that needs to be ongoing," he said. "And religious leaders, particularly the pope, can play an important role for us to realize the value of life."

"It's not just related to abortion," he said. "It relates to end-of-life issues as well. It's wonderful to have moral leaders that are not ambiguous about what's right and what's wrong."

Asked how he reacts when his views might go against those of church leadership, as in the Iraq War or on capital punishment, the governor admitted the divergence caused him concern.

"I get uneasy when the Vatican writes me letters when a death penalty case is about ready to take place in Florida. That gives me pause. It makes me pray harder," he said.

Charlotte Dunderdale, a sixth-grader at Holy Trinity Middle School in Charlotte, returned to her former elementary school, St. Ann School in Charlotte, to help her former teachers with various tasks around the school during a day off from middle school Feb. 18. Not asked to give up her free time and not receiving service credit, Charlotte voluntarily offered to help any teacher who needed an extra pair of hands. Charlotte spent her day off grading papers, helping explain math to students, counting pennies for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, walking students to classes and helping with recess duty.

U.S. BISHOPS' CONFERENCE ISSUES PRAYER CARDS OF POPE BENEDICT XVI

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The day Pope Benedict XVI was elected, April 19, the publishing office of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops issued a prayer card of the new pope.

The card has an image of the pope standing on the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica at the Vatican when he was first introduced to the crowds gathered in St. Peter's Square and to the world as the 265th pope.

The cards contain the prayer for a new pope from the Sacramentary and biographical information about Pope Benedict. They are available by clicking on the "Bookstore" link at www.usccb.org.

High school Model UN club sweeps competition

KERNERSVILLE — The Model U.N. team at Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School has returned victorious.

The team participated in the 6th annual Model U.N. competition held at The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., Feb. 13. The Catholic University International Relations Association sponsored the competition.

"This is a team that we all can be proud of and one that will continue to meet all of the challenges placed before it," said David Seidel, a history teacher at Bishop McGuinness and the team's advisor.

After four days of competition with schools from all over the country, the Bishop McGuinness team was rewarded with Outstanding Delegation, won by students P.J. Dascoli and Mike O'Shea.

Additionally, the entire team won the Best High School award, sweeping the competition.

The team consisted of students P.J. Dascoli, Mike O'Shea, Neil Goodman, Iain Pritchard, Will Scott, Sam Wharton, Jordan Cain, Bredan Regan, P.J. Stanford, Lauren Watkins, Rachel Anemone, Robert Whelen and John Valittuto.

The Model U.N. Club is in its second year of existence at Bishop McGuinness. Last year the club won more than 20 awards at the competition at Appalachian State University. This year the team won two awards for excellence in delegation during a competition at Duke University.

The team of 12 students represents two different countries in a variety of international situations. These simulations require in-depth research and superior negotiation and speaking skills.

"The Model U.N.'s outstanding showing in Washington is a tribute to the dedication and drive of both the team and its moderator," said George Repass, principal. "To achieve this level of distinction within two years of start-up is remarkable."

Abbot Shelton honored for work in prison ministry

HAMLET — Benedictine Abbot Patrick Shelton, pastor of St. James Church in Hamlet and vicar forane for the Albemarle Vicariate, recently received the 2004 Volunteer of the Year award for his work at Morrison Correctional Institute in Hoffman, N.C.

As reported in the Richmond County Daily Journal, Abbot Shelton received the plaque during a banquet at the prison's chapel April 12.

Greg Parsons, assistant superintendent of programs, presented the award to Abbot Shelton, describing him as an "angel delivered to us."

In addition to his ministry to inmates, Abbot Shelton was praised by Parsons for his great sense of humor.

Every Monday evening for the last several years, Abbot Shelton has gone to Morrison to hear confessions, celebrate Mass and have fellowship with the inmates.

Abbot Shelton also was recognized for his initiative to study Spanish to communicate with Hispanic inmates.

"He has worked very hard at learning enough Spanish so that he could provide the prisoners with a Mass in Spanish on a weekly basis," said Father David Draim, parochial vicar. "He has had as many as 29 prisoners at Mass and has a very good reputation at the prison, where people enjoy his jokes and personality."

Abbot Shelton said he was disappointed he was not yet able to translate jokes to Spanish-speaking inmates with the same effect as in English.

fisherman's ring and the pallium.

"At this moment, weak servant of God that I am, I must assume this enormous task, which truly exceeds all human capacity," Pope Benedict said in his homily.

The 78-year-old pope said he would rely on the prayers of all Catholics and the grace of God.

"I do not have to carry alone what in truth I could never carry alone," he said.

The new pope said his inaugural Mass was not the moment to present "a program of governance," but rather a time to promise to try to be a good shepherd to Christ's flock, to rescue those who are lost, to help the poor and to build unity among all believers in Christ.

An estimated 350,000 people attended the Mass, including delegations from more than 130 countries and from dozens of Orthodox, Anglican and Protestant churches.

A loving shepherd

In his homily, Pope Benedict said, "One of the basic characteristics of a shepherd must be to love the people entrusted to him, even as he loves Christ whom he serves."

"Loving means giving the sheep what is truly good, the nourishment of God's truth, of God's word, the nourishment of his presence which he gives us in the Blessed Sacrament," he said.

The new pope asked for the prayers of the entire church that he would grow in his love for the Lord and for the members of the church and prayers that he would be strong in the face of those who threaten the church.

"Let us pray for one another, that the Lord will carry us and that we will learn to carry one another," he said.

His homily repeatedly was interrupted by applause, and Pope Benedict received a long ovation when he finished.

After he received the symbols of his office, Pope Benedict received the act of obedience of his new flock, symbolized by 12 people from eight countries.

During the offertory procession and the act of obedience, Pope Benedict smiled broadly, listened attentively, stroked the cheeks of the young and offered his blessing.

At the end of the Mass, Pope Benedict took his first ride in the popemobile, waving to the crowd and blessing them with his right hand.

He then went into St. Peter's Basilica where he met with members of government delegations.

A new mission

The thought of being elected the leader of the universal church made him lightheaded and doubtful, said the pope.

During the "slow unfolding of the voting process" at the conclave, it eventually became evident that "the guillotine was coming closer and was meant for me," he said in an April 25 audience with pilgrims from his native Germany.

The thought of becoming the next pope "made my head spin," he said. "I had thought that up until now my life's work was done and that the years ahead of me would be more restful."

But a fellow cardinal-elect had given the future pope a letter reminding him of a phrase he had used during his homily at the funeral Mass of Pope John Paul II: "If the Lord calls you, you must obey," said Pope Benedict.

Some 3,000 German pilgrims filed into the Paul VI audience hall to meet with the newly elected German pontiff the day after he was formally installed as pope. The pope met with ecumenical and other religious leaders earlier that morning.

The pope then revealed some of the details behind his election in his message to his fellow countrymen.

He said when the voting was showing him to be the clear favorite he prayed to God "to spare me."

He said he told God, "You have candidates who are younger, better, stronger and have more elan than me."

"Evidently God did not listen to me," he said wryly.

But the pope said he gathered strength for accepting the cardinals' decision from the letter given to him by a fellow cardinal-elect. He said the "touching" letter reminded the pope of the theme he chose for the mid-April funeral Mass homily that when one is called by God that call "cannot be rejected."

"So I had no other choice than to say 'yes,'" he said.

Pope Benedict asked his audience to continue to pray for and have trust in him.

"If I ever make an error or when the pope says something that is not easy to understand, because the pope has to say these things, I ask for your trust from now on," he said.

A young church

Pope Benedict said because Pope John Paul was seen as an open and fatherly figure, it created a church that "was not closed up inside itself," and was "open to all."

"The church is not old and immobile, but young," he said.

He also said he was looking forward to his August trip to Cologne for World Youth Day.

Offertory, consecration and Communion

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 14

As we begin to examine the Liturgy of the Eucharist this week, we are reminded that the drama of our redemption is accomplished by Christ in three distinct acts: 1) the passion, death and resurrection; 2) Holy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter Sunday; and 3) the Last Supper, the crucifixion and death on the cross and the empty tomb on Easter Sunday.

These three acts of our redemption compose what we call the Paschal Mystery. It is the holy sacrifice of the Mass that invites us into the Paschal Mystery and unites us with the means of our salvation.

Within these three acts — the passion, death and resurrection — there are three movements in the Mass that perpetuate the effects of our redemption and apply them to our individual souls. These three movements — namely, the offertory, the consecration and the reception of Holy Communion — compose the three principal movements of the Liturgy of the Eucharist.

Together, these three movements unite us with the mystery of the cross, continue to bring about our salvation by applying the fruits of our redemption today and, ultimately, express the divine love and mercy of God for his people. Let us inspect for a moment these three principal movements.

1) The offertory. In order to apply the merits of redemption to our souls, each of us must renew the death to sin that was brought about by Christ on the cross.

Christ died once and for all on the cross 2,000 years ago. In imitation of his perfect sacrifice and in union with his self-offering to the Father, we offer ourselves in union with Christ. In the early church, this was accomplished by offering the same elements that Christ himself offered at the Last Supper, namely bread and wine; some of each was used by the priest to offer the sacrifice.

Today, we substitute money for these elements. The money pays for the bread and wine sacrificed at the Mass; but the money also represents ourselves, since we receive money as payment for our labor, time and talent. The material sacrifice that we make is still a symbol of our spiritual incorporation into the death of Christ. Through the free offering of ourselves to God in union with Christ we find salvation.

2) The consecration. The offertory leads us to the consecration.

The consecration of the Mass does not mean that our Lord dies again, for he can never die again in his own individual human nature. But he prolongs his death in us. In the offertory we present ourselves for sacrifice with Christ; in the consecration we die with him. We apply his death to ourselves that we may share his resurrection and his glory.

At the consecration, the eternal breaks into time, heaven dawns upon earth, God comes again to meet man. By the words of Christ speaking through a priest, the Holy Spirit changes the substance of bread and wine into the substance of Christ's body and blood, soul and divinity. This is known as transubstantiation (from the Latin, meaning "change in substance").

This is not simply a recited prayer, but a divine act which enables us to apply the cross to ourselves; the once-and-for-all sacrifice of Christ is brought into the present and relived in us.

Why? In order to receive him as spiritual nourishment and as an antidote for sin and death.

3) Holy Communion. In the offertory, we are like lambs led to the slaughter. In the consecration, we are the lambs who are slaughtered in our old sinful selves. And in holy Communion, we find that we have not died, but that we have come to life.

In a certain sense, the substance of bread and wine must be sacrificed, must die, so that it may become the body and blood of Christ. In the same way, our old habits of sin must also be sacrificed so that we might have new life in Christ.

Chemicals must die so that plants might live. Plants must perish so that animals might live. Chemicals, plants and animals must die so that man might live.

And our old sinful selves must perish for God to live in us. That is why we "receive" holy Communion: we receive Christ, we receive divine life. But perhaps more importantly, it is Christ who receives us, incorporating us into his divine life.

Next week we will begin to inspect the rituals that bring us to union with Christ.

FIGHTING FOR LIFE

'Born-alive' act praised

Services for initiating this important and humane effort," Ruse added in an April 22 statement.

The department's action followed the passage in August 2002 of the Born-Alive Infants Protection Act, which says that any infant who is fully born and shows signs of life is considered a human person entitled to the full protection of the law — even if the baby is born during a failed abortion.

"Any step taken to promote the protection of human life has to be considered positive," said Maggi Nadol, coordinator of Respect Life Ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte, in an April 26 statement.

"But, how frightening that we, as a society so richly blessed, must pass a law to protect its most precious natural resource — the next generation," she added.

Leavitt noted that "Congress had received testimony that some infants who had been born alive after unsuccessful abortions were left to die."

He said his department would "investigate all circumstances where individuals and entities are reported to be withholding medical care from an infant born alive in potential violation of federal statutes" and "take proactive steps to educate state officials, health care providers, hospitals and child protection agencies about their obligations to born-alive infants under federal law."

In the "first of these educational steps," Leavitt said, the department has issued guidelines about how the Born-Alive Infants Protection Act intersects with other federal laws and regulations — the Emergency Medical Treatment and Labor Act, the Medicare Conditions of Participation and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.

"Ours is a society that values and defends life," Leavitt said, pledging that his department would "continue to seek ways to revere and protect the dignity of life."

In a separate statement April 22, Ruse also expressed gratitude that a Senate vote to rescind the Hyde-Weldon Conscience Protection Amendment had been canceled, reportedly because Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., realized she did not have the votes necessary to overturn the provision.

The amendment — named for Reps. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., and Dave Weldon, R-Fla. — prohibits governmental discrimination against health care providers who choose not to provide or participate in abortions. It became law last December.

"The vote to kill conscience protection for pro-life health care providers made no sense," Ruse said. "How can you claim to be 'pro-choice' and say that Catholic and other health care providers have no right to choose not to participate in abortions?"

Even if senators disagree about abortion itself, she added, "conscience rights should be an area of common ground."

Colorado church officials hail veto on emergency contraception bill

Decision called 'victory for religious freedom' by archdiocese official

DENVER (CNS) — Catholic officials in Colorado praised Gov. Bill Owens' veto of a bill that would have required all Colorado hospitals, including Catholic facilities, to notify rape victims of the availability of an emergency contraception pill to prevent pregnancy.

Sergio Gutierrez, spokesman for the Denver Archdiocese, called the governor's April 5 decision "a victory for religious freedom."

In his veto letter, Owens, a Catholic, said: "This bill does not give patients all the information that they deserve, nor does it safeguard basic freedom of conscience."

In a speech in March, Denver Archbishop Charles J. Chaput told an audience at the City Club of Denver the problem with the bill was that it mandated "a form of so-called 'emergency contraception' that could amount to early-term abortion and that is always very gravely wrong."

The measure would have forced Catholic hospitals to violate Catholic teaching against abortion, he said.

In his remarks, the archbishop also expressed dismay that the separation of church and state is frequently cited as a reason why religious leaders should stay out of politics, but said the same standard does not apply when the state wants to impose its view on Catholic hospitals.

Supporters of the measure said it was about providing information to women. Sponsors of the bill said they did not have enough votes to override Owens' veto. The governor received the bill April 4 and had 10 days to decide whether he would veto it or sign it into law.

In Arizona, Gov. Janet Napolitano vetoed a bill that would have allowed health care professionals, hospitals and pharmacies to refuse on moral grounds to dispense medications related to abortion or emergency contraception.

In a joint statement, the state's Catholic bishops criticized the governor for vetoing a measure that they saw as a matter of civil rights for health care professionals and Catholic hospitals.

The right to follow one's conscience is particularly important when the issue involves "the taking of an innocent human life," said the statement signed by Bishops Thomas J. Olmstead of Phoenix, Gerald F. Kicanas of Tucson and Donald E. Pelotte of Gallup, N.M., whose diocese includes north-eastern Arizona.

YOUTHS IN ACTION

"I really like that all the Catholic youths can get together," said Becky Dilloway, attending her third DYC from Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point.

"I love the enthusiasm; it's not something you see every day," she said. "It gives you hope for the Catholic Church of tomorrow."

Taking its inspiration from the Year of the Eucharist, the conference theme was "The Perfect Body."

Held at Lifeway Ridgecrest Conference Center near Black Mountain, the DYC was sponsored by the Diocese of Charlotte's Office of Youth Ministry in collaboration with the Diocesan Youth Advisory Council. The council is composed of high school students from each of the 10 vicariates to serve as youth coordinators between their parishes and the diocese.

About 250 high school students and their chaperones from 33 parish youth groups attended the DYC.

"I think this conference has been an experience of the lavish generosity of our loving God and the people here in this diocese," said Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry.

"We've had the most priests participating of any youth conference the youth ministry office has sponsored," he said. "I think the priest participation is a hopeful sign of their devotion to the young Church and their willingness to help foster the faith. Everything has taken on a eucharistic theme."

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated Sunday Mass in the auditorium. Five pastors from the Asheville, Smoky Mountain and Albemarle vicariates participated variously in offering the sacrament of reconciliation and in celebrating or concelebrating Masses in the chapel.

Workshops delved into the Eucharist, the Mass, a Christ-centered life, sexuality and abstinence, exploring God's creation and the call to holiness.

Steve Bernardi, youth ministry coordinator for Haywood Catholic Youth, was attending his sixth DYC with 12 HCY members.

"I use this conference as a springboard for my young kids who are coming in," he said. "They get to be around a lot of other Catholic youths. The workshops are always good."

The DYC is one of HCY's favorite events, Bernardi said.

"They see that it's OK to be enthusiastic about their faith," he added. "[DYC] helps to steer the kids into leadership roles, such as the youth leadership council."

Silers Bald, a Christian rock group, entertains with a concert during the annual Diocesan Youth Conference April 22-24.

School in Greenville, N.C., spoke on "Extreme Makeover, Soul Edition."

According to Farris, a Catholic makeover isn't about changing one's physical appearance.

"What God wants to do has nothing to do with what's outside. God works in here," Farris said, pointing to his own heart.

"The first step in an extreme Catholic makeover is to realize God loves you and to trust God," he said.

The second step is accepting responsibility for one's decisions, Farris said. "Decisions can drag you down but they can also lift up."

Reconciliation, the third step, "is a sacrament of healing," Farris said. "Find a priest, go to reconciliation. People say, 'I'm not perfect,' but the church, in all her glory, has given us this sacrament. Immerse yourself in the sacraments."

Farris urged the youths to take responsibility and "accept faith in God as your own." He told them to think, "It's not about my parents dragging me to church. It's about me stepping out in faith."

Like Jesus calling Lazarus to come forth from the tomb, Farris said, "God calls us and waits for us to come to him."

The DYC "brings me closer to God and who he is," said Eugene Preston, a parishioner at St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte. "It's better to do it in a teen atmosphere because it's more geared to teens than adults."

After a simple altar was set up on the dais, Deacon John Parrish of St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte carried the Blessed Sacrament from the adoration chapel and placed it in the monstrance.

Farris, who gives talks throughout the country, was impressed with the Christ-centered youths at the DYC.

"I've seen a lot and there's an air of worship about them that's special, that's different, that's inspiring," he said. "This did more for me than I did for them. These are change-the-world kind of folks."

PAPAL PURCHASES

Memorabilia — tasteful to tacky — fill souvenir shops near Vatican

BY BENEDICTA CIPOLLA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

ROME — Memorabilia ranging from fairly tasteful to remarkably tacky fill the dozens of souvenir shops around the Vatican, most of them still brimming with merchandise plastered with Pope John Paul II's face.

With a new pontiff in office, though, shopkeepers were gearing up for Pope Benedict XVI paraphernalia seekers.

Postcards depicting the new pope began trickling in April 22, to the relief of souvenirs hunters.

"We just bought whatever we could find to go home with for friends. We haven't seen much of the new pope in the shops," said Anne Finnigan of Coatbridge, Scotland.

Just after Pope Benedict's April 19 election, stores got their hands on photographs from the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, and two days later only a few pictures were left.

Long lines at newsstands formed the morning after the election for the paper's special "Habemus papam" (We have a pope) edition. The daily, which usually appears in the afternoon, went to press just after the announcement of Pope Benedict's election.

While sales figures were not available, the crowds buying multiple copies to save for posterity suggested L'Osservatore Romano had significantly expanded its normally Vatican-oriented readership, if only for one day.

More elaborate postcards and miniposters with Pope Benedict's visage alongside the dome of St. Peter's Basilica and other Rome monuments were due in time for the April 24 installation Mass.

Expected from manufacturers in the coming weeks were medals, key chains and other trinkets, including the "popener," a bottle opener graced with a bas relief or picture of the pope. Tourists snapped them up during Pope John Paul's pontificate.

Two shops got a head start on the competition April 21 by offering rosaries nestled in plastic boxes featuring Pope Benedict; one shop sold 72 in the 30 minutes after their arrival.

At La Cupola, where the new rosaries beckoned to customers from boxes placed outside the entrance, the owner wondered whether the new pope's choice of name might spur souvenir sales.

"To tell the truth, there's a lot of junk out there," she said.

Germany outstripped Italy in the race to produce papal merchandise.

By April 21, Pope Benedict's home town, Markt am Inn, had come up with papal beer, Vatican bread, candles featuring photographs taken the night of his election and a cake called "slice of Ratzinger." Bakeries offered free papal pastries shaped like miters.

The many books penned by then-Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger sold briskly.

Based on sophisticated theology, the books the future pope wrote while head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith may not appeal to the average visitor. In one shop, the sales "boom" translated only to about 50 copies, but owners were ordering up to 3,000 more in anticipation of increased demand.

Entire tables remained dedicated to Pope John Paul and were piled high with biographies, books he wrote, DVDs and calendars. Bookstore windows still prominently featured the late pope's writings, though most made an effort to display Pope Benedict's as well.

It remained to be seen if Pope Benedict would eventually outsell his predecessor. Some stores marked down merchandise related to Pope John Paul in order to make way for the new items slated to arrive. But most thought the late pope, given his popularity among the faithful during his more than 26-year papacy, would have the souvenir market cornered for some time.

For those not in Rome, eBay offered a panoply of hastily concocted Pope Benedict goods. Among the items up for auction: "Papa Ratzi" T-shirts; cell phone attachments, little papal charms that light up when the phone receives a text message; and a string of glow-in-the-dark lantern string lights featuring photos of the pope.

God's compassion for all binds us, not always well received

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

The woman stood close, half a step inside his comfort zone.

"Father," she said ominously, her head cocked to one side and her eyes squinted half shut, "I've got a question about your homily."

The young priest involuntarily backed up from her challenging tone and her fierce glare.

"Sure," he said, eyeing the woman and her glowering family nervously. "What did you want to ask?"

The woman paused dramatically, hand on hip. Passersby slowed down to witness the brewing confrontation, pulled by the same morbid fascination that halts traffic at accident sites and draws crowds for a bar fight.

She leaned forward. "Are you trying to tell me we're supposed to love homosexuals? Is that what you're saying?"

It was a rhetorical question. She knew he'd said exactly that in his homily about God's call to love our sisters and brothers. Clearly, she disapproved. Contempt dripped from her words, like acid, burning all it touched.

When he tried to clarify his intent, her lips curved downward and she shook her head in disgust. As he continued to explain the all-inclusiveness of God's mercy, she turned in mid-sentence and walked away, trailing disapproval like acrid smoke.

"Rejoice," today's reading from the First Letter of Peter tells us, whenever we suffer as a result of our faith: "If you are insulted for the name of Christ, blessed are you."

Christ has revealed God's love and compassion to his disciples, but the world of which we are part does not always relish that good news. When our fidelity to Christ puts us at odds with the impulse to judge and condemn others, we need to be prepared for hostility.

The good news is that the suffering such rejection brings binds us ever closer to Jesus, in whose promises we trust.

Father-son filmmakers spotlight church's teachings

BY MARY WALSH
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WINSTED, Conn. — Stephen Payne left Hollywood in 1991 because he was not happy with his newfound career as postproduction coordinator for the USA cable television network.

"The execs were pushing the envelope on sex and violence and I was really feeling awful that this was happening under my involvement," said Payne, 38, who is a Catholic.

"I decided my life was really consecrated to Christ, and I had to step out of that industry to try to do something in film that would make a difference," he said.

Looking back, he said he believes the events that led him to team up with his father to found Arcadia Films Ltd. in 1998 have been providential.

Today, instead of preparing racy, made-for-TV movies, Payne and his father have produced a series of films on the lives of the saints, a 90-minute documentary on the life of St. Louis de Montfort and promotional videos for the Steubenville East summer youth conferences.

Their clients include Eternal Word Television Network, known as EWTN, as well as Priests for Life and Angelicum University in Rome.

"We've always been taken care of in God's divine providence and we've never had to do anything secular in over 10 years," Payne said.

From their studio in Litchfield County, the father-son team aims, as Payne explained, "to make Christ and Our Lady better known" through their work in the media.

Their latest project is a public service announcement for the Massachusetts Catholic Conference on embryonic stem-cell research.

The ad shows a baby being delivered into the arms of its waiting mother. A voiceover explains that every human being was once an embryo, just as butterflies were once caterpillars.

The topic of stem-cell research is one with which the Paynes are especially familiar. Stephen's mother, Patricia, suffers from Parkinson's disease and is currently undergoing treatment with adult stem cells. She recently testified against embryonic stem-cell research before the Massachusetts Legislature.

The Paynes also have produced several commercials encouraging voters to consider life issues when voting. The spots, paid for by Priests for Life, were aired in battleground states during the 2000 election year.

"The Saints Speak," a series of 40 spiritual minimovies, is currently airing on EWTN. In short clips, actors portray saints, offering viewers' reflections on the Eucharist in the saints' own words.

The reflections are taken from the saint's writings. Saints featured include Catherine of Genoa, Augustine and John Chrysostom, to name a few.

The Paynes, who are natives of Canada, said that they approach their work "always in an atmosphere of prayer to discern what God really wants."

Stephen Payne said, "Our interest is really to serve the church and that's primary in everything we do."

The pair also firmly believes that the media holds great possibility for furthering Catholic teaching. But the industry's creative side needs Catholics' support.

"The potential is huge for evangelization," said Stephen Payne. "Catholics have to come together to realize if (Mel Gibson's) 'The Passion' was possible, what else is possible?"

Conference explores small Christian communities

Roots and Wings: The Communities We Call Church."

Vincentian Father Jesus Guadarrama, who served as a Hispanic ministry coordinator in the Greensboro and Winston-Salem vicariates and is now director of the Center of Evangelization, San Vicente de Paul in Brooklyn, N.Y., spoke to Hispanic attendees on the Eucharist as the center of community and dialogued with them on how they saw their own small Christian communities.

A diocesan survey revealed that among the 43 responding parishes, SCCs formed from 1973 to 2000 include charismatic and other prayer groups, RCIA and Renew groups, Scripture study groups, a Newman Club and a Christian mothers group.

Father Cancro based his talk on Vatican II's "Lumen Gentium," Pope Paul VI's "Evangelii Nuntiandi," Pope John Paul II's "Redemptoris Missiones" and on the earliest small Christian communities, as described in the Acts of the Apostles.

SCCs, he said, "don't come in a particular form but are shaped by the needs of the community. We are deeply rooted in the essentials of the way Christ ministers in the world."

One SCC essential is engaging parish members in interpersonal relationships.

"Our tradition was going to church, was Jesus and me," Father Cancro said. "If you remember when we started singing and talking in church, you remember how uncomfortable that was for us. Communion was private."

"Now, the response after Communion is with our mouths open, singing a hymn, a response united in Christ," he said.

Other essentials involve mutual support and education in and reflection on faith — talking to people where they are on their faith journeys.

"Mutually, together," he said, "we are called to educate each other in what we have in common — our faith."

SCCs should be empowered for the mission of Christ.

"A group can become amazingly insular, very comfortable," Father Cancro said. "It's a red flag to hear things like, 'We've never done this before,' or 'We've never met on this night before.' You can never be turned inward. The mission of Christ is always to be turned away from that insular focus and out toward what might be."

People clap and sing during the first small-Christian-community conference in the Diocese of Charlotte held at St. Aloysius Church in Hickory April 16.

SCCs, he added, "are hotbeds of Gospel justice," in that they always have a sense of each person's "common dignity" and "equality" before God. "In our diversity, we are still one in faith, what Catholic means."

Additionally, "in a world that's good at batting down the idea of following Jesus," SCCs can be faith-filled oases.

"I think it's the job of the pastor, not to establish small Christian communities," he said, "but to establish (such as in his homilies) the notions of small Christian communities and then to step back and let the small Christian communities do their work while being patient enough for the Holy Spirit to do its work."

Father Cancro said that SCCs must maintain the church's mission, must "enter into a collaborative mode with parish life and be part of the bigger pie, not a small, separate dessert. They have to be open to the breath of the Holy Spirit and cannot become so insular — doing their own thing — that they are no longer assets to the parish."

Also, an SCC, he said, must "live, promote and practice communion — a communion of faith, purposefully intertwined with one another in their commonality, to realize that the Word we receive is never for our sole benefit but for each other as well."

"Small Christian communities help us to value who we are," said Ann Shaw of St. Pius X Church in Greensboro. "We all have a story. When we share our stories in relationship to God, it empowers us to grow in God. When we share our stories, we see the face of God."

"The story is meaningless without the face that goes with it," said her husband, Deacon Bill Shaw. "Small Christian community allows the greater community to have a face. As a deacon or a priest sitting out there, you see the faces but don't hear the stories."

Father Guadarrama based his presentation on the Eucharist on Pope John Paul II's "Mane Nobiscum Domine," published in October 2004 for the Year of the Eucharist.

"Eucharist nourishes us in our mission on earth," he said. "Our mission is to recognize God in the breaking of bread, and he leads us to go out and be the good news for others."

Father Guadarrama asked the Hispanic attendees about the strengths and weaknesses of their SCCs.

The strengths, he learned, were found in "a sense of support, a sense of family, expression of solidarity, learning Scripture, and in catechesis."

Weaknesses were that some people don't stay in the community and, in some cases, lack of access to a priest.

The Hispanics also wanted more integration with other cultures.

"They said they really liked the meeting today, because they felt welcome," Father Guadarrama said. "This is one of the dreams, the ideals, of the church, to really be one."

Mercy Sister Mary Edward Brennan dies at 97

Sister Brennan remembered for patriotism, friendliness

BELMONT — Mercy Sister Mary Edward Brennan, 97, died March 3 at Marian Center at Sacred Heart Convent in Belmont. She was received as a Sister of Mercy on Aug. 15, 1948, and was in her 57th year as a Sister of Mercy.

A Mass of Christian Burial was held March 7 at the Cardinal Gibbons Memorial Chapel with burial following at Belmont Abbey Cemetery.

Sister Brennan was born Oct. 3, 1907 in Belfast, Northern Ireland. Her secular name was Patricia Anne Brennan; she took the name Sister Mary Edward upon entering the religious order of the Sisters of Mercy Feb. 3, 1948.

Sister Brennan served as a physiotherapy technician in World War II after enlisting in the Women's Air Force in November 1943 and served through October 1945. By the time of her honorable discharge, she had received both the American Theater Ribbon and the Good Conduct Medal.

She was a graduate of McGill University in Toronto, Canada. She received certification from the state of Illinois as a registered therapist and received her certification as a registered X-ray technologist.

She ministered for two years in the X-ray department at St. Joseph's Hospital in Asheville before returning to Charlotte to begin what would be a 27-year ministry teaching in the School of Radiology at Mercy Hospital.

She was a member of the American Society of Radiologic Technologists, the American Registry of Radiologic Technologists and the North Carolina Society of Radiologic Technologists, where she served a term as vice president and also as chairperson of the group's public relations committee.

"There have been so many lovely things that have happened to me during my years as a Sister of Mercy," said Sister Brennan in 1998. "I would have to say that the best thing about the last 50 years was the opportunity to become friends with those I served."

"In fact, I still keep in touch with some of the people I met while I was at Mercy Hospital," she said.

Until 1997, she ministered in support service to her religious community. Her smiling face at the reception desk and her charming Irish accent greeted anyone who called at the Motherhouse, in person or by telephone.

Although her motto, "all things to all people," referenced her Lord, it could also describe her philosophy of hospitality. Visitors to Sacred Heart Convent were not visitors for long after they met Sister Brennan. Instead, they became fast-friends; indeed, as she would have said, "family."

Mercy Sister Mary Edward Brennan

Although it had been many years since Sister Brennan actively served in the Armed Forces, she remained a bastion of patriotism in Belmont. Until the Motherhouse renovation and a broken hip intervened, each morning and evening the proud veteran maintained her daily ritual of raising and lowering the American flag, accompanied by a snappy salute.

When the flag was on display in Marian Center, she returned to her "morning salute."

Sister Brennan is survived by her sisters in the Regional Community of North Carolina, her cousins and her friends.

Memorials may be made to the Sisters of Mercy, Sacred Heart Convent, 100 Mercy Drive, Belmont, NC 28012-4805.

Teen selected to attend N.C. Governor's School

CHARLOTTE — Jewel Sheehan, 15, a parishioner of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, was selected to attend the 2005 Governor's School of North Carolina, a six-week summer residential program for intellectually gifted high school students.

Jewel, a student at Weddington High School, was nominated in the mathematics category and will attend the program at Salem College in Winston-Salem.

Jewel is an active member of Life Teen at St. Matthew Church. She also participates in the parish's music ministry — she plays the flute, sings in the choir and serves as cantor at the Life Teen Mass.

She also is a volunteer at St. Gabriel School's developmental preschool program for children and those with disabilities.

At Weddington, Jewel is a member of the National Honor Society, student council and three-time varsity letter winner of the swim team.

The Governor's School of North Carolina's curriculum focuses on the exploration of the most recent ideas and concepts in each discipline, and does not involve credit, tests or grades. The program is entirely free of charge to all students, funded by the General Assembly of North Carolina.

Is purgatory still a part of Catholic faith?

Q. I am nearly 80 years old and was taught that everyone goes to purgatory after death, nobody goes to heaven immediately. But today there isn't much said about it. Is purgatory still part of our faith? Are we still to pray for the dead? (Michigan)

A. Purgatory is still very much a part of our faith. It is also true, however, that we speak more carefully about purgatory than we sometimes did in the past.

Perhaps one reason we hear less about purgatory today is that many of us have a lot of misunderstandings that could use some correcting. The hoary pictures of torture, pain and a punishing God, which used to be common and which made purgatory kind of a minihell, may scare someone to death, but most are irrelevant to authentic Catholic teaching.

Two things are clear in our tradition concerning purgatory. First, we believe there is some condition or circumstance in the process of dying or after death by which any punishment remaining for sins is satisfied. And second, Catholic teaching tells us that we can assist those who are "in purgatory" by our prayers and good works here on earth.

This is simply an aspect of our belief in the communion of saints, which unites in love all who are joined to Christ, whether still on earth or in the next world.

Equally clear is that the official teachings of the church do not intend to answer physical details about purgatory. Is it a state or condition, or a "place"? Is "time" involved or not?

Since the world after death would not appear to have hours or days or years as we know them, it seems unlikely that purgatory involves place or time as we experience them here.

A few years ago, Pope John Paul II challenged us to take a fresh look at heaven, hell and purgatory. When we hear those words we often pay more attention to popular images than to the doctrines themselves. A little reflection should warn us to be careful about the "beliefs" these familiar words and images might inspire.

In his reflections the pope made explicit what has been implicit all the time.

Does anyone really believe, for example, that heaven or hell or purgatory are "places" as we think of them in this life, somewhere out in another universe or on an unknown planet?

This tells us something about purgatory, according to the pope. Purgatory is not a place but a "condition" of purification for the saved whereby Christ "frees them from their imperfections." As the Catholic catechism says, purgatory is a process, a transition of purification and of cleansing.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

Christian spiritual theology and practice in fact recognizes often that this process can occur, at least partly if not wholly, even before we die. It is not uncommon, with Christian insight, to say of people in severe physical or emotional pain that they are "having their purgatory here on earth."

None of this changes or minimizes the ancient practice of praying for people who have died. Past, present and future are all one present moment to God. Our prayers, whenever they are said before or after death, go to a God who is not limited by when they happen to be offered.

Can you imagine God saying: "It's too bad your prayers are late. If you had said them yesterday or last year, I could have done something about it." Prayers lifted to God for the living or the dead "go back" over their entire lives, their final illnesses and their entrance into eternity. They are never lost or wasted.

Shrouded in secrecy

Common surgery for women leaves many unanswered questions

Four years ago, the Washington Post published a report on the highly secretive system of capital punishment in Japan. By some unknown process, prisoners are randomly selected for execution, including some whose appeals are still pending.

The day of execution remains a mystery to both the inmate and his family. The prisoner learns of the execution only once it is imminent: the guards come to his cell to escort him to the execution room. Blindfolded, a noose is placed around his neck. In another room, about five guards whose identities too are secret (perhaps even to their own families) are each poised to press a button.

One button operates a trap door through which the prisoner falls to his death. Not even the guards know who among them pressed the button that actually commenced the hanging.

After the execution, the inmate's family is notified, "We parted with the inmate today."

Each day in the United States, 3,500 women hold in their hearts a very secret pain, "We parted with our unborn children today."

After healing and reconciliation through programs such as Project Rachel, and Rachel's Vineyard some do speak out about their personal tragic stories. But most walk alone with this pain. They might be among our family members, colleagues, friends and casual acquaintances.

It is now 32 years after the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, mandating that abortion be legal throughout the nine months of pregnancy nationwide. But we know little about the children who are killed, when and why their short lives were ended or about the circumstances of the women who are harmed by the practice.

As a society, we spend little time reflecting on what this vast social experiment has done. Has it coarsened us? Has it actually worsened the social standing of women? Why has the "freedom to choose abortion" so often become the expectation to choose abortion? Is it a boyfriend's wish or economics or school and career advancement?

Physically, do women suffer from their abortions? The Centers for Disease Control reports that hundreds of women have died from legal abortion but no one knows the true number. How many more experience complications, such as uterine perforations or incomplete abortions?

And what of the psychological impact? Some women have offered their personal stories but no large scientific study has been undertaken.

Their unborn children remain a mystery to us. Each year, 1.3 million children are aborted; 19,500 abortions occur after the 20th week, the second half of pregnancy. At least 2,000 are killed by the partial-birth abortion method. Why were they selected for such a grisly procedure and so late in pregnancy?

Some children are targeted because they are disabled, but what are their disabilities? A cleft palate? Down syndrome?

Why do we keep abortion — perhaps the most common surgery performed on women today — shrouded in secrecy? Is it because we can't handle the truth?

Lessons of a term paper on television

Wishful thinking for responsible programming

I didn't expect Beaver Cleaver to be part of my Holy Week, but that's what happened.

Spring break from school arrived the week before Easter, and my 14-year-old found herself with a term paper to complete during vacation. So between movies, overnights with friends and Holy Week services, Maria — with a little help from me — researched how television has changed since the 1950s.

Maria found out what the Federal Communications Commission is, who Murphy Brown and Dan Quayle were, and why married people on television used to sleep in twin beds.

For Maria, old-time television meant reruns of "I Love Lucy." Her paper introduced her to "Father Knows Best," "My Three Sons" and "Donna Reed."

One day, I casually mentioned "Ozzie and Harriet." She gave me a quiz-zical look.

"Who," she asked, "is Ozzie?"

I tried again. "Ricky Nelson?"

"Ricky who?"

Here's what I learned: The big changes in television have come recently. It hasn't been a gradual evolution from twin beds to shows whose major themes revolve around sex and sexual innuendo. No, until the 1990s television was pretty tame stuff.

I also was reminded that while it would make life easier for me as a mom if Beaver and Eddie Haskell still dominated the airwaves, early television presented an unrealistic worldview.

Did you know the word "pregnant" was banned on television in the early days?

In television's infancy, children were overwhelmingly male. Yes, the father who knew best had two daughters, but check out "My Three Sons," "Bonanza" and just about every other popular show. Boys populated the airwaves.

Another thing: In a diverse nation, did we see racial diversity on screen? Were there Catholics and Jews in TV land? Were American Indians anything besides fodder for cowboys?

No one divorced, and homosexuality didn't exist.

Although the number of moms working outside the home was growing, on television they all stayed home. And honestly, did your mother ever wear pearls to vacuum?

History was tumultuous: the Civil Rights Movement, the sexual revolution, assassinations. Until Archie Bunker, no one on television noticed.

In the 1990s, Murphy Brown rocked things by rocking the cradle. Problem was, she was an unmarried mother; Vice President Dan Quayle was appalled. Some people suggested he congratulate her for not having an abortion. His ticket lost the presidency that year.

Today television still is mired in unreality, even while much of it is called "reality TV." The near constant sexual references are embarrassing, trite and unrealistic. If people really talked like that at the office, I tell Maria, someone would file a sexual harassment suit.

Women on television only grow thinner, while Americans grow fatter. While women finally have achieved respect as thinkers and doers, it's often at the expense of men, especially, and unfortunately, the bungling TV dad.

As a Catholic, I wish television mirrored my sexual ethos today instead of the raunchy behavior it dishes out as normal. At the same time, I wish that television, now and back then, witnessed to Catholic social justice concepts that are just as important.

It's hoping for too much from the medium that was, even in those innocent days, called a "vast wasteland."

Here's the scary part: As unhappy as we are with broadcast television, today it's the tip of the entertainment iceberg. Pornography is available to anyone with a computer, cable television has few limits, and video and computer games are bigger financially than the film industry.

Beaver's dad didn't know how easy he had it.

At first audience, pope shares reasons for choosing 'Benedict'

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — At the first general audience of his pontificate, Pope Benedict XVI expressed again his "awe and gratitude" that God chose him to lead the Catholic Church.

God, he said, "surprised me first of all."

Although leading more than 1 billion Catholics is a huge task, the knowledge that he will have the help of God and of the Blessed Virgin Mary and the spiritual support of the faithful "gives me serenity and joy," he said.

Pope Benedict began the audience by touring St. Peter's Square in an open popemobile, blessing the crowd.

He told the estimated 15,000 people gathered that in the coming weeks he would continue the series of audience talks Pope John Paul II had begun on the psalms and canticles used in the church's morning and evening prayers.

But first he wanted to share his reasons for choosing the name Benedict when he was elected pope April 19.

"I wanted to call myself Benedict XVI to bind myself to the venerated Pope Benedict XV, who guided the church in a troubled period because of the First World War," the pope said.

"He was a courageous and authentic prophet of peace and worked with valiant courage first to prevent the drama of war and then to limit its nefarious consequences," he said.

"In his footsteps, I want to place my ministry at the service of reconciliation and harmony among individuals and peoples, deeply convinced that the great good of peace is, first of all, a gift of God, a fragile and precious gift to invoke, safeguard and build day after day with the help of everyone," Pope Benedict said.

The second reason for choosing the name, he said, was to evoke the spirit of St. Benedict, founder of Western monasticism.

"St. Benedict is very venerated in Germany, particularly in Bavaria, my homeland; he is a basic point of reference for the unity of Europe and a strong reminder of the undeniable Christian roots of its culture and civilization," he said.

Pope Benedict asked the saint "to help us keep Christ firmly at the center of our existence. May he always have first place in our thoughts and in all our activities."

At the end of the audience, Pope Benedict led the crowd in singing the Lord's Prayer, which got off to a rocky start with some prelates singing in Italian and the pope singing more strongly in Latin. He waved his arms like an orchestra conductor, getting everyone singing the same language and in unison.

Breaking the law

Ignoring history and Scripture risks failure

I have never broken the law. I have never been arrested.

Yet I often think of Bishop Austin Vaughan, auxiliary bishop of New York, who, in the last years of his life of faithful service to the church, was arrested and imprisoned many times for rescuing unborn babies.

He saw what Christians were doing across the country as they peacefully blocked the doors of abortion mills to put their bodies between the babies and the instruments of death. Then one day he looked at his episcopal ring and realized that the three figures on it — St. Peter, St. Paul and the Lord Jesus — had all been arrested and imprisoned. He no longer hesitated to do so too if it was the price to pay for saving lives.

Human reason, Scripture and history teach us that while we are called to be law-abiding citizens, breaking the law is not always wrong. Take, for example, someone who breaks down the door of a neighbor's apartment to put out a fire, or jumps over a fence past the "no trespassing" sign into a neighbor's yard to save a child drowning in a swimming pool.

Those cases make it clear that saving lives takes precedence over laws that preserve less important values.

Lessons from Scripture abound. The Apostles were given strict orders not to teach in the name of Jesus (see Acts 4 and 5). Should they have obeyed? If they had, we would not know the Gospel. Would we obey if that order were given to us? What exactly would we say to the assembled crowd on Sunday morning if such a law had been passed on Friday?

In Exodus, we read, "The king of Egypt said to the Hebrew midwives ... 'When you help the Hebrew women in childbirth ... if it is a boy, kill him; but if it is a girl, let her live.' The midwives, however, feared God and did not do what the king of Egypt had told them to do; they let the boys live" (Ex. 1:15-17).

They disobeyed the king's order because it conflicted with a higher law, God's command never to kill the innocent. Daniel went to the lion's den because he disobeyed a law prohibiting prayer (Daniel 6).

History shows us Christians martyred for disobeying Caesar, people rescuing slaves, protecting Jews from the Holocaust and resisting segregation — all in violation of the law but in support of justice. The list of examples fills many volumes.

We risk failure if we ignore the lessons of history and the principles of Scripture.

It's easy to look back at those who broke the law in these cases and praise them. But when these same challenges face us, we find it difficult to acknowledge that sometimes the law must be broken. That's because now the sacrifices will be made by us.

I have never broken the law. I have never been arrested. But I cannot guarantee that I never will.

TRYON — The presence of the Benedictines in western North Carolina has done much to build up the Catholic Church since the 1870s, when members of the order arrived in Belmont to establish a monastery and college. The monastery was elevated to abbey status in 1884, and in 1910, the Benedictines were given the status of "nullius" — that is, without diocesan jurisdiction.

While operating under nullius status, the Benedictines extended their work beyond the 500-acre estate upon which they had built their monastery and school. One such place was Tryon, where, in 1911, they built the first church in their eight-county territory.

With fewer than a dozen people in attendance, the structure was dedicated as St. John the Baptist Church in October 1911 by Benedictine Abbot Leo Haid. The congregation included the church's primary benefactors, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hallahan of Philadelphia.

Benedictine Father Michael McInerney, the renowned architect of Belmont Abbey, had designed plans for the church. In 1924, he began a five-year pastorate of the Tryon parish.

Founded by the Benedictines of Belmont Abbey, St. John the Baptist Church in Tryon has provided a spiritual home for Catholics in Polk County since 1911.

From its founding until the reduction of the nullius to Gaston County in 1944, St. John the Baptist Church existed as a mission of Belmont Abbey. In 1923, parishioners — for decades numbering around a dozen — and local townsfolk directed a refurbishing project of the church and grounds. That year, a rectory was built. Father James Manley, the only priest in the church's early history who was not a Benedictine, served as pastor.

With the end of the Benedictine's pastorate in 1944 came St. John the Baptist Church's first resident pastor, Father Vincent Mahoney. Growth of the St. John the Baptist Church parish had been virtually nonexistent into the late 1950s; no reports exist stating that the church's seating capacity of 75 was ever filled. Still, an influx of retirees from the North, visiting and moving to the North Carolina mountains, began in the '60s, and a steady increase in church membership ensued.

Meanwhile, the rectory began serving a three-year period as a place of worship, when on June 25, 1959, the church burned.

With tremendous help from the local community, the parish immediately set out to build a new spiritual home. Gifts of money, materials and labor arrived from the area and from across the country. With a contribution from the Catholic Extension Society, construction began in January 1962.

Father (now Msgr.) Joseph Kerin served as pastor of the Tryon parish during the rebuilding phase, which ended when Bishop Vincent S. Waters of Raleigh dedicated the new church in August 1962. About 55 parishioners composed the church family at the time.

Having served as a multipurpose building, the rectory had become nearly uninhabitable by the mid 1960s, and in 1967, a new rectory was purchased.

The parish continues to grow, attracting members from outside its Polk County boundary. There are many ministries working to meet the needs of its members and the community.

With a continued increase in the area's Catholic population — thanks to the continued migration of northern Catholics as well as improvements in roads leading to the mountains — the parishioners of St. John the Baptist Church numbered 130 in 1973. By the mid-1980s, the figure had reached 300. Currently, more than 800 parishioners worship weekly at the church.

A Sunday evening Mass in Spanish draws about 40 worshipers and a newly formed faith formation program in Spanish is underway. Father Dean Cesa, who assumed the pastorate of St. John the Baptist Church in July 2001, has begun learning Spanish in an effort to communicate with his Hispanic parishioners.

The St. John the Baptist Church community celebrated its 75th anniversary in October 1986. As part of the jubilee, a church bell, donated by parishioners and the senior youth group was placed into the bell tower that had been built with the church in 1962.

Over the years, St. John the Baptist Church has been served by a number of outstanding diocesan priests, including Fathers Lawrence Heiney, Patrick Gavigan, Pius Keating, John Pagel, to name but a few of the parish's dedicated pastors.

SALISBURY — Eleven girls at Sacred Heart School in Salisbury are feeling a bit lighter today.

The girls volunteered to have at least 10 inches of their hair cut April 29 for Locks of Love, a nonprofit organization that provides hairpieces to financially disadvantaged children suffering from long-term medical hair loss.

Surrounded and cheered on by their classmates in the school courtyard, the girls — in kindergarten through fifth-grade — had their hair braided and then cut by Andrea Smith of Hair Associates.

"I think it's such a wonderful, unselfish thing to do, especially at their ages," said Smith.

"It took a lot of courage to be able to do that," said Principal Kathleen Miller. "Many of them didn't give it a second thought."

Because the hair may help young cancer patients, many of the girls were happy to give up their locks — several of them have parents and siblings affected by cancer and chemotherapy.

"It feels pretty good," said fifth-grader Carla Curiel, running her hands through her shortened tresses. "It's not what I expected."

"I'm glad I got my hair cut, and I'm glad I did it for Locks of Love," said third-grader Susannah Dixon. "It feels so good."

Two more students have volunteered to cut their hair in a few weeks after a music recital.

Women converge on Capitol Hill to tell Senate of their pro-life views

BY NANCY FRAZIER

CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — From college students to grandmothers, an assortment of women from around the country came to Capitol Hill April 27 to tell their senators that pro-life and anti-cloning views represent "real women."

The "Real Women's Voices" lobbying day, sponsored by six pro-life or pro-family organizations, brought more than 200 women to Washington, gave them a crash course in lobbying and sent them to meet with their senators about cloning, federal judicial nominees and parental notification before an abortion.

PRAYERS AND PERSECUTION

A Chinese Catholic woman prays March 27 at the state-sanctioned St. Ignatius Cathedral in Shanghai. Members of the underground church in China have sent messages of congratulations to Pope Benedict XVI while urging him not to forget that they are a persecuted community in a country that lacks religious freedom.

Chinese underground Catholics tell pope, 'Do not forget us'

ROME (CNS) — Members of the underground church in China have sent messages of congratulations to the new pope while urging him not to forget that they are a persecuted community in a country that lacks religious freedom.

One underground community of Catholics in northwest China wrote to Pope Benedict XVI asking him "not to forget the suffering church in China" because it struggles "without any freedom at all," said an April 29 report by Asianews, an Italian-based missionary news agency.

"Ever since China's religious affairs regulations came into effect March 1, underground Catholic priests must report weekly to religious affairs officials on their activities and must ask public security officials for permission to leave the parish," the Catholic community said in its message to the pope.

China created a government-approved Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association in 1957 to bring the church in line with communist goals and to separate it from "foreign interference," such as ties with the Vatican. An underground church continued to exist and face persecution.

In recent years, Hong Kong church officials said up to two-thirds of the underground bishops have reconciled secretly with the Vatican, and at the parish level, there is some mingling of the two churches.

Asianews said underground Catholics in Wenzhou Diocese in eastern China wrote Pope Benedict with their hopes that he would visit China soon and bring them "light and freedom" as well as lead them "in love and truth toward full communion with the universal church."

The news agency said the pope's choice of name had special meaning for Catholics in China.

Pope Benedict XV, who was pope from 1914-1922, "made special efforts for the church in China, enabling his successor, Pope Pius XI, to ordain the first Chinese bishops in 1926," it said.

In his note of congratulations to Pope Benedict, retired underground Bishop Casimir Wang Milu of Tianshui, in northwest China, said he was "praying intensely" that the new pope might visit China someday.

The bishop also wrote that Pope Benedict XV's 1919 apostolic letter, "Maximum Illud," called on Catholics in China "to sacrifice themselves for the sake of evangelization, not to indulge in court disputes, not to ask for compensation, but to forgive with love."

Faith not a factor in Americans' patriotism, Bush tells media

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Nonbelievers are "equally as patriotic" as people of faith, President George W. Bush said in a nationally televised press conference April 28.

"I view religion as a personal matter," the president said in response to a question about whether he agreed with the opinion that the Senate filibuster against his judicial nominees was "an attack against people of faith."

"I think a person ought to be judged on how he or she lives his life or lives her life," he added. "And that's how I've tried to live my life: through example."

Bush said he thought some opposed his judicial nominees "because they don't like the judicial philosophy of the people I've nominated" and because "they would like to see judges legislate from the bench."

But, he added, "I don't ascribe a person's opposing my nominations to an issue of faith."

Bush, a Methodist, said he took "great strength from my faith" but would not "condemn somebody in the political process because they may not agree with me on religion."

"The great thing about America is that you should be allowed to worship any way you want," he added. "And if you choose not to worship, you're equally as patriotic as somebody who does worship."

"And if you choose to worship, you're equally American if you're a Christian, a Jew, a Muslim," the president said. "And that's the wonderful thing about our country and that's the way it should be."

Bush's hourlong news conference focused primarily on Social Security reform, high gasoline prices, the war against terrorism and the situation in Iraq.

FROM THE VATICAN

Protecting culture includes recognizing religion, Vatican says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The protection of cultural diversity must include recognition of the importance of religion, said the permanent observer of the Holy See at UNESCO.

The observer, Msgr. Francesco Follo, addressed an April 27 meeting of the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization's executive council in Paris.

The U.N. agency has been working on finalizing a preliminary draft convention that would promote cultural diversity and exchanges.

Some countries already recognize "the cultural heritage of religious interests," which would be cultural or artistic treasures that the Catholic Church or other religions "regard as testimonies of faith" and are used in activities related to worship or other rituals, Msgr. Follo said.

Religious treasures of this type are not covered in the draft convention, he said.

He said religion is not isolated to individuals' private lives, but it also has an impact on the "public domain" and, therefore, deserves consideration for inclusion in the U.N. document.

Pope names Cardinal Sodano dean of College of Cardinals

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI confirmed the election of Cardinal Angelo Sodano, Vatican secretary of state, as the new dean of the College of Cardinals.

The post became empty April 19 when German Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger was elected pope.

The six top-ranking cardinals of the Roman Curia elected the dean from among their membership; approval of the election by Pope Benedict was announced April 30 at the Vatican.

Just five days earlier, Pope Benedict had promoted Nigerian Cardinal Francis Arinze, prefect of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, to his former place among the cardinal bishops, as the rank of the six is called. Cardinal Arinze participated in the election of the new dean.

International cooperation needed to stop crime, says Vatican diplomat

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — International cooperation is needed to prevent crime, especially crimes that attack human dignity and threaten peace, a Vatican diplomat said.

"Crime prevention is no more a question to be resolved locally," Archbishop Salvatore Pennacchio, the Vatican's nuncio to Thailand, told the U.N. Congress on Crime and Criminal Justice April 18-25 in Bangkok.

Archbishop Pennacchio said the Vatican's primary concerns were trafficking in humans, especially women and children; the sale and possession of firearms; corruption; establishing law and order in post-conflict situations; and defending the rights of prisoners.

He said the Vatican supported the idea of developing an international "Charter of the Fundamental Rights of Prisoners."

"In this document, particular attention should be devoted to a treatment of prisoners fully respectful of their human dignity and their meaningful reinsertion into society," he said.

On the issue of human trafficking, he told the congress that the problem is related to increasing restrictions on legal migration worldwide, creating a market for the unscrupulous who promise to help the poor or desperate get to a new country and find work. Many end up basically enslaved and forced into prostitution.

The archbishop also urged much stronger international controls on the sale and possession of guns and other weapons.

"Clearly, there is a link between crime and trafficking in firearms that feeds terrorism at national and international levels," he said. "A reduction in the availability of firearms will facilitate the establishment of peace and security."

International cooperation also is needed to fight corruption, which undermines the rule of law and justice, erodes democracy, creates havoc with the economy and increases the suffering of the poor, he said.

Corruption also is a frequent part of the criminal scene in countries trying to re-establish peace, justice and normal social structures after a war, he said.

Unless there are competent police officers and judges, effective laws and a fair application of them, crime can destabilize a nation struggling to return to normalcy, transforming "the hope and trust of a population into skepticism, desperation and disillusionment," Archbishop Pennacchio said.

Scouts earn Eagle rank

LINCOLNTON — James Quentin Judge and Cameron Joseph Judge, members of Boy Scout Troop 112, recently earned the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rank in Boy Scouts.

James and Cameron, parishioners of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton, received their recognition during a ceremony at First United Methodist Church in Lawndale March 19. Father Matthew Buettner, parochial vicar at St. Dorothy Church, gave the invocation and Benediction.

Among the key presenters was Mike O'Brien, mayor of Lawndale and former member of Troop 112.

"I appreciate the opportunity to be here today to recognize these young men, who have undertaken a journey down the same path sought by many great community leaders before them," said O'Brien.

"On behalf of the Town of Lawndale, I would like to say to the young men here and to Scouts everywhere, thank you for a job well done," he said.

For his Eagle Scout project, James spent 147 hours in April collecting 2,007 pounds of food and other items as part of a food drive to benefit the U-CAN (Upper Cleveland Area Need) at the Bliss Center in Lawndale.

James recruited fellow Scouts and family, Bliss Center staff and members of local churches for the project, which helped restore much of the center's food supply, depleted during the ice storm in December 2002.

Cameron's project involved partnering with the Cleveland County Sheriff's Department and Cleveland Regional Medical Center to help fingerprint and provide identification for more than 200 children during the Cleveland County Fair in September 2003.

Cameron recruited fellow Scouts and family, 25 students from Crest High School and eight law enforcement officers to fingerprint, photograph and fill out forms at the fair. The project took 110 hours to complete.

In addition to serving as altar servers, James and Cameron are active in helping the Knights of Columbus clean up the church grounds and with Operation LAMB.

A place of silence and solitude

Hundreds gather for St. Francis Springs Prayer Center dedication

BY DEACON GERALD POTKAY
CORRESPONDENT

STONEVILLE — The prayers and vision of Franciscan Father Louis Canino recently became a reality as the St. Francis Springs Prayer Center was dedicated in Stoneville.

More than 600 people attended the April 23 dedication of the new non-profit, interfaith retreat center where all denominations are welcome for spiritual growth.

"The purpose of this center is to foster contemplation, justice and peace; to help people grow in the depth of their prayer; to strengthen their desire to find God; as well as to implement the values of justice, peace and charity," said Franciscan Father John Frambes, co-director of the center.

"This center is dedicated to seeking peace for those who find themselves bringing justice to the world," said Franciscan Father John Felice, minister provincial of the Friars of Holy Name Province in New York.

"I can't get over how beautiful it is," said Father Felice. "What he (Father Canino) has managed to accomplish is no simple thing. His purpose is so wonderful. Father Louis was the driving force to make this happen."

Father Felice said Father Canino, director of the Franciscan Center in Greensboro, approached him in the mid-1990s with the idea of a prayer center to serve those in the Triad area. The request was unusual, he said, because at that particular time the Franciscans were closing prayer centers around the United States.

"Within every human being there is a call to be contemplative. Many are not aware of this potential," said Father Canino.

"The human psyche longs for solitude, silence and internal harmony," he said. "St. Francis Springs Prayer Center brings an ambience that will bring that into our lives."

"It is important to retain the contemplative spirituality of St. Francis while ministering to all sorts of people as Francis did," said Father Frambes.

The center features a chapel wing and a wing dedicated to the education of justice and peace, with classrooms for study.

"It is so unique. Every room has a view of the outdoors," said Ann Bauer, the center's business coordinator. "We are here to help people see how beautiful it really is out here."

Numerous volunteers helped make the center a reality. Eunice Barr, a parishioner of St. Pius X Church in Greensboro, said her husband Clifford and Dan Camia, a parishioner of St. Paul the Apostle Church in Greensboro, volunteered almost a year of their time working on the grounds.

"I'm glad to be a part of the whole thing," said Dora Garnier, a kitchen volunteer and parishioner of St. Joseph of the Hills Church in Eden. "I'm very proud of what Father Louis accomplished."

During the dedication ceremony, Father Canino thanked all those involved with the financing and construction of the center.

"This is a beautiful and peaceful facility," said Richard Crapse, a parishioner of Holy Infant Church in Reidsville. "It was remarkable that when Father Louis mentioned God, the sun broke through the clouds and stayed through that entire prayer. That inspired me."

"If everyone had a neighbor like Father Louis, what a wonderful world it would be," said Toby Koles, a parishioner of St. Joseph of the Hills Church.

FIGHTING FOR LIFE

Pro-life women converge on Capitol Hill

signed up online to participate "in spirit" by contacting their senators that day by phone, fax or e-mail.

"Women are the bearers of human life and we must therefore be the protectors of human life," said Kara Klein, a freshman at The Catholic University of America in Washington, at a press conference on the event.

"We must stand up for those who cannot speak for themselves and say no to the violence of abortion, no to the violence of death by starvation and dehydration, and no to all violence that is perpetrated against women," she added.

The Rev. Alveda C. King, a grandmother, linked the fight against abortion to the civil rights movement led by her late uncle, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

"If the dream of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. is to live, our babies must live," she said. "Our mothers must choose life."

Rev. King said she underwent two abortions before her six children were born, and suffered from guilt for years but eventually achieved healing.

"The doctor told me (the abortion) wasn't going to hurt any more than having a tooth pulled," she said. "It did."

Rachel Campos-Duffy, a former participant in MTV's "The Real World" reality series, described herself as "a product and former face of the MTV generation" — a generation, she noted, that has "never known a time when abortion was not legal."

Although women her age have been told since childhood that "the right to abortion was a hard-fought gift to us," she said, "my generation has more firsthand experience with the painful aftermath of abortion" than any other generation.

"We know that abortion represents failure: women in time of need being failed by their boyfriends, husbands, parents, friends and, of course, our society," added Campos-Duffy, who currently co-hosts the weekly cable series, "Lifetime's Speaking of Women's Health," with Florence Henderson.

Helen Alvare, an associate professor of law at Catholic University who recently was part of the five-member U.S. delegation to the Mass inaugurating the papal ministry of Pope Benedict XVI, said the new pope and his predecessor, Pope John Paul II, both "seamlessly ... wove together respect for the unborn alongside respect for every other human person — women, religious minorities, refugees and the poor, to name just a few."

"By contrast, how incongruous is the United States in allowing unlimited abortion rights alongside its many fine statements and demonstrations of respect for women and human rights," she said. "It doesn't fit together."

The "real women" lobbyists took messages to their senators in support of an up-or-down vote on President George W. Bush's judicial nominees, against human cloning and in favor of the Child Custody Protection Act, which would ban efforts to circumvent parental notification or consent laws in one state by taking a minor to another state for an abortion.

The House version of that bill, the Child Interstate Abortion Notification Act, was approved on a 270-157 vote April 27. Its chief sponsor, Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, R-Fla., expressed confidence at the press conference that the bill — already approved three times by the House — would also pass in the Senate this year.

Speaking about the rationale behind the bill, the congresswoman said, "A minor who is forbidden to drink alcohol, to stay out past a certain hour, or to get her ears pierced without parental consent is certainly not prepared to make a life-altering, hazardous and potentially fatal decision, such as abortion, without the consultation or consent of at least one parent."

Sponsors of the lobbying day were the Susan B. Anthony List, National Pro-life official praises House passage of parental notification bill

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops' chief pro-life spokeswoman hailed the April 27 House passage of legislation that would outlaw the practice of taking minors over state lines for abortions to circumvent parental notification or consent laws in the girl's home state.

Cathy Cleaver Ruse, director of planning and information for the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities, said in an April 28 statement that "taking teens across state lines for secret abortions strikes at the heart of the family and the rights of parents."

"But more than that, it presents a grave danger to the girls who are subjected to an invasive surgical procedure without their medical history or records, and with no medical follow-up or intervention," she added.

About half the states currently have laws requiring parental notification or consent, or a judicial bypass, before a minor can obtain an abortion.

The Child Interstate Abortion Notification Act, sponsored by Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, R-Fla., was approved by a 270-157 margin in the House April 27.

The legislation, then called the Child Custody Protection Act, has passed the House three times — in 1998, 1999 and 2002 — but the Senate has not acted on it. The version now pending in the Senate is sponsored by Sen. John Ensign, R-

Nev., and has 38 co-sponsors.

"Yesterday's vote affirms the proposition that parents should be involved in abortion decisions affecting their teenage daughters — even when their daughters are taken across state lines," Ruse said.

"Abortion advocates have lost another round against a common-sense measure supported by most Americans," she added.

A poll released April 27 showed that 75 percent of Americans strongly disagreed and another 7 percent somewhat disagreed with the statement, "A person should be able to take a minor girl across state lines to obtain an abortion without her parents' knowledge."

Only 7 percent strongly agreed and 8 percent somewhat agreed with the statement in the poll commissioned by the National Right to Life Committee.

"This is very encouraging, but another example of how far down the 'slippery slope' we have descended," said Maggi Nadol, coordinator of the diocesan Respect Life Office.

"The idea that a minor could be taken, without parental permission, for surgery to another state for a life altering procedure is incomprehensible," she said.

Editor Kevin E. Murray contributed to this story.

Right to Life Committee, Eagle Forum, Silent No More Awareness Campaign, Family Research Council and Concerned Women for America.

Jane Abraham, president of the Susan B. Anthony List, said the lobbying day was organized "because we know our nation is at a crossroads."

"We know that our senators' votes on judges, cloning and other pro-life issues this session will be decisive in determining what our nation will stand for in the coming generation — a nation that honors the dignity of women and children's lives or one that pits one against the other," she added.

We Have a Pope!

The premier papal biography, We Have a Pope! Benedict XVI answers the many questions—and assumptions!—about the new pope, detailing the real man behind the public persona shaped by the secular media.

Written by Matthew F. Bunson, D. Min., one of the nation's foremost papal experts and historians, the book explains the events leading up to the Conclave, the candidates, the important issues—but most of all, it offers a close, personal look at Pope Benedict XVI. What made him the man he is today, how is he different from the secular media portrayal, and how will he adapt to his new role as pope?

Vatican official: Children's first Communion can help whole parish

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Children's innocence, openness and ability to be awed mean that, when properly prepared, their first Communion can be a moment when the whole parish witnesses how great a gift the Eucharist is, said Cardinal Dario Castrillon Hoyos.

As soon as children are able to recognize the difference between regular bread and a consecrated host, preparations for their first Communion should begin, said the cardinal, prefect of the Congregation for Clergy.

In a January letter posted in Spanish, Italian and German on the congregation's Web site — www.clerus.org — the cardinal urged priests, in consultation with their bishops, to ensure that children in their parish are able to receive their first Communion when they reach "the age of reason," generally agreed to be 7 years of age.

In many countries, while Communion preparation classes accept 7-year-olds, many of the children do not receive their first Communion until they are 8 or 9.

Cardinal Castrillon said that in 1910, when Pope Pius X authorized publication of a decree saying that children could receive their first Communion "from about the seventh year," it "marked an important change for the pastoral care of children."

Pope Pius' decree noted that "a few errors" had been made in determining the "age of reason," so that until 1910 children under the age of 10 — and in some dioceses, under the age of 14 — were prevented from receiving Communion.

Allowing children to receive the Eucharist at a young age "has brought great grace to the church," Cardinal Castrillon said.

He told priests that Pope John Paul II praised the decision to allow young children to receive Communion.

In his autobiographical book, "Rise,

Let Us Be on Our Way," Pope John Paul said Pope Pius' decision was "a touching testimony of pastoral love for children."

The future Pope John Paul received his first Communion in May 1929, just after his ninth birthday.

Cardinal Castrillon told priests, "I think that one of the greatest joys for a pastor is to hear the first confession of children and then let them receive their first Communion."

"The younger they are," he said, the more certain a priest can be that the children "are worthy to receive in their hearts the sacramental Christ."

"In fact, the mind of a child who has reached the age where they begin to reason — and today this age is reached quickly — is open and available to welcoming the divine light that makes the mystery of God's love for man penetrate where it is able," the cardinal wrote.

"Faith raises us beyond reason," he said, "and this faith, which we frequently experience in our parishes, is very alive in children who are able — sometimes more than we are — to express their closeness to the Lord with prayer."

The cardinal did not mention ongoing discussions in the church about preparing mentally handicapped children for their first Communion and was not available Jan. 25 to discuss the question.

Cardinal Castrillon told the priests he hoped the "holy practice" of allowing young children to receive their first confession and first Communion would be better appreciated and followed during the Year of the Eucharist, which runs from October 2004 to October 2005.

The cardinal prayed, "May love for the most holy Eucharist be transmitted from the most tender age and the desire to receive the body of Christ become the surest path for building a future of peace and holiness, not only for the individual, but for the whole Christian community."

The first movement: The offertory Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 15

Last week, we were reminded that the Paschal Mystery — the passion, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ — is unfolded for us in every Mass in three distinct movements: the offertory, the consecration and the reception of holy Communion. Again, we discovered that these three movements together give glory to God and bring about the fulfillment of our redemption by applying the fruits of Christ's gift of redemption to our individual souls.

This week, we will take a closer examination of the offertory by answering the question: What is being offered at the holy sacrifice of the Mass?

1) The Collection. The first liturgical movement of the offertory involves the collection.

To support the financial needs of the clergy and the material needs of the church is one of the six precepts of the church. But more than an obligation, we have the opportunity to participate in the missionary efforts of the church by the funds that are collected at each Mass.

Our hard-earned money pays the bills to keep the church open and operational, supports the clergy, contributes to the work of evangelization and charity, and, most notably, buys the bread and wine that are necessary for the Mass.

Obviously, we do not have the capacity to give to God the thanksgiving that He deserves for all the generous gifts we have received, but we do make the best attempt by making a sacrifice of our own resources. The money represents our own time and talent given at work. And so the collection symbolizes the more important gift of ourselves given to God.

2) Bread and wine. Along with the collection, bread and wine are offered by the faithful in the offertory procession at the Mass.

These elements are so necessary for the celebration of the Mass that without bread and wine, a priest is unable to offer the sacrifice of the Mass. We will explore the use and significance of bread and wine in more detail in our next discussion.

3) Prayer, sacrifice, intentions. The collection, bread and wine are offered and presented to the priest during the offertory. But more importantly, we also bring our spiritual gifts.

During the offertory, we are invited to collect and present our prayers, sacrifices and intentions that are unique to the celebration of each Mass. We are given the opportunity to unite our own prayers, the many small sacrifices that we offered throughout the day or the week and the many intentions we bring with the perfect sacrifice of Christ in the consecration.

4) Ourselves. These prayers, sacrifices and intentions are the spiritual form of the offering. When combined with the material offering of money, bread and wine, they collectively represent the meager gift of ourselves, generously presented to God for sacrifice.

5) The priest. All of these offerings are collected and presented to the priest, physically and spiritually in the offertory of the Mass. The priest accepts these gifts. And on behalf of the entire church, he offers them to the Father in union with the perfect sacrifice of Christ on the cross.

6) Christ. Here, we finally discover that ultimately, the offertory of the Mass does not primarily answer the question, "What is being offered?" but rather, "Who is being offered?"

And through the eyes of faith, with the light of reason and expressed through the liturgy of the Mass, we come to discover that it is Christ, the high priest, who offers himself to the Father.

And because we are members of his mystical body through the sacrament of baptism, we are also offering ourselves in union with Christ. As he freely sacrificed himself to the Father on the cross, so we are invited and encouraged to follow his perfect example. There we will find salvation.

What is being offered in the Mass? It is Christ, the head of the church, in union with his mystical body, you and me.

Next week, we will continue our examination of the offertory by answering the following question: What is the purpose and the significance of the bread and wine used at the Mass?

Father Buettner is parochial vicar at St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Asheville Catholic stages successful musical

ASHEVILLE — The halls were alive with the "Sound of Music" at Asheville Catholic School.

Seventy-five students participated in the school drama department's production that played to sold-out audiences April 15-17.

Under the guidance of Alyssa Kennedy, religion teacher and drama coach, the production showcased the varied talents of the students, from acting and stagehands to cooking and making programs, tickets and costumes.

Pete McHugh, a parishioner of St. Eugene Church in Asheville who once managed the von Trapp Family Singers, had brought pictures and background information to the students prior to their production.

The musical's story is based on that of Austria's von Trapp family, who fled their Nazi-occupied country in 1938.

ASHEVILLE — Fourth- and fifth-graders set up their exhibits in the gymnasium of Asheville Catholic School for the first Math Fair Feb. 25.

Student participants explained their math projects to a panel of judges as well as to students, staff and guests. A group of students were then selected to compete at the 2005 State Mathematics Fair, sponsored by the North Carolina Council of Teachers of Mathematics, at Appalachian

State University in Boone March 19.

Fourth-grade teacher Pete Hutchens plans to make the fair an annual event.

"It's a way for students to express ideas and an excellent way for them to see math used all the time and to know that math is everywhere," he said.

Representatives competing against other schools at the math fair at Appalachian State were fourth-graders Emily Bradley (first-place winner), Robbie Mangone, Abby Lenderman and Natalie Beach, and fifth-grader Patrick Eckerd.

High school students see drunk driving dangers

PHOTOS BY KAREN A. EVANS

Fortunately, this scene was only a simulation designed to show the students of Charlotte Catholic what could happen if they drink alcohol before getting behind the wheel.

With proms and graduation celebrations approaching, the April 29 Mock DWI Fatality was well-timed as a warning to students about the all-too-real repercussions of drinking and driving.

"This is the season when kids get hurt," said Lonnie Billard, Charlotte Catholic's drama teacher who coached the students for the simulation.

"It seems to be the consensus that students are going to drink, then drive," said Beverly Doyle, English teacher.

Hosted by the Mecklenburg County Sheriff's Office, participants in the Mock DWI Fatality included the Mecklenburg EMS Agency, Charlotte Fire Department, Med Center Air, North Carolina State Highway Patrol, Charlotte Catholic chapter of Students Against Drunk Driving and other agencies.

Matt Bazluki of the special services division of the Mecklenburg County Sheriff's Office and Captain Jim Dedmon of the public information office of the Charlotte Fire Department initiated the demonstration. Both men are graduates of Charlotte Catholic.

The Mock DWI Fatality featured two cars that had been wrecked in actual recent accidents. In one car, the "driver" and "passengers" — student actors from Charlotte Catholic — had been drinking, while the occupants of the other car were all sober.

Radio traffic from the responding emergency agencies was broadcast over the stadium's loudspeakers so the students could hear all the communication between police, fire and ambulance crews.

At the end of the simulation, the names and conditions of each victim were read over the loudspeakers. One occupant of each vehicle died; the rest suffered various degrees of injury.

"It drove home the point that this is what happens when you drink and drive," said Christine Lawson, a senior at Charlotte Catholic and parishioner of St. John Neumann Church.

Fellow senior Lauren Maier agreed.

"(The presentation) gave us a visual image of what can happen," said Lauren, a parishioner of St. Ann Church. "It was more effective than other presentations we've seen."

Billard said his students asked him difficult questions, such as how they can protect themselves from drunk drivers.

But unfortunately there is no answer to that question.

"I hope they see the reality of drinking and driving," said Jerry Healy, principal of Charlotte Catholic. "If it makes one kid stop and think (before drinking), it's worthwhile."

'Crash' has redeeming effects?

Thandie Newton and Matt Dillon star in a scene from the movie "Crash," a powerful, beautifully crafted film with a strong moral center about a disparate, racially mixed group of Los Angeles residents whose lives will intersect in unlikely and redemptive ways.

Writer-director Paul Haggis takes a story and milieu that at first seems sordid and ugly, and with the help of a terrific ensemble cast, has fashioned a transcendently moving essay on the benevolence that may lie beneath racial intolerance, and the interconnectedness of human beings, showing how good and bad can coexist in all of us, and how the former generally prevails.

Much rough and crude language, some violence, many racial epithets, sexual situations, including one encounter with partial nudity, another with suggestive groping and innuendo, and a bloody traffic-accident injury. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is L — limited adult audience, films whose problematic content many adults would find troubling. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Each person has gifts to share

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Several years ago I had the privilege of coordinating our diocese's first synod, an endeavor which lasted three years from the initial stages of planning to the closing liturgy and publication of the synod proceedings. It was a powerful experience of local church that I'll never forget.

Because it was our "first" synod, and since I for one had never coordinated anything of that magnitude, I had a great deal to learn.

There was much discernment involved in selecting a task force, so I gathered names of prospects, thinking about the abilities and talents each person would bring to the table — some were bilingual, speaking Spanish or Vietnamese; some represented rural parishes; others had experience with youth; and still others were good communicators.

In addition, each person had to be able to fulfill a three-year commitment of meetings and tasks.

While the task force of men and women indeed offered the competencies that I expected, I was surprised nonetheless to discover gifts in them that I never would have anticipated — gifts that benefited us greatly in the ensuing months of preparation. One woman in particular wondered aloud whether she had any skills to offer, yet her prayerfulness and peaceful presence sustained us through many a meeting.

Another member proved to be my "rock" of encouragement, calling me up for lunch just when I was feeling overwhelmed by one challenge or another.

In addition to the surprising gifts brought by each individual, a collective spirit of good humor and optimism emerged that was contagious, spreading from that small group of 12 throughout the delegation of more than 500 men and women who met for the synod.

From that experience, I learned what it meant to trust in the Holy Spirit's creative and bountiful outpouring for the good of the church. Both the seemingly small and the considerably larger needs of God's people can and will be filled if each person surrenders to that life-giving Spirit and extends his or her own gifts for the benefit of others.

Catholicism, marathons twin themes for 'Saint Ralph' writer-director

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Michael McGowan, writer-director of the feature film "Saint Ralph," about a high school freshman who believes winning the Boston Marathon will be the miracle needed to bring his mother out of a coma, is like his film's protagonist: a Catholic and a runner. McGowan, who has run and won marathons, still runs four to five times a week to keep fit. "I can remember being a child and wondering, 'Why do people walk?'" he said. With "Saint Ralph" playing the film-festival circuit before its release in theaters, McGowan has been running — well, really, flying — from city to city to take questions from audiences and journalists about his movie. And in the meantime he still has a family to tend to in Mulmur Hills, Ontario; his family includes a 6-year-old son and a 19-month-old daughter. McGowan said he set "Saint Ralph" in 1953 and '54 to join its Catholic theme with its marathon theme. Catholicism provided "the bookends of people's lives" a half-century ago, he said. And, he added, it's plausible that a teenager who was a first-time marathoner back then would think he had a shot at winning the Boston Marathon if in the 1980s 16-year-olds were able to run a marathon in two hours and 16 minutes. He noted that the winning time of the 1954 Boston Marathon was 2:29. The Toronto-born McGowan, like the movie's Ralph Walker (Adam Butcher), was educated by the Basilian Fathers at St. Michael High School, an all-boys school in Toronto. "It was a great experience," he said. But that, the Catholic faith and the marathoning may be the only similarities between him and his character. Ralph is an only child; "I'm one of six kids," McGowan said. And while Ralph is in danger of being orphaned should his mother die, "both of my parents are quite alive." In the film, Ralph exhibits all the drive and confusion of a 14-year-old. Once his hospitalized mother slips into a coma and is told that only a miracle will bring her out of it, Ralph — recently assigned to the school's cross-country team to channel his energy — comes to the conclusion that winning the Boston Marathon would be that miracle.

"Saint Ralph" received a classification of A-III — adults — by the U.S. bishops' Office for Film & Broadcasting for "profanity, rear nudity, a nonexplicit masturbation scene, underage drinking and smoking." The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13, which means parents are strongly cautioned and some material may be inappropriate for children under 13. "But make no mistake," said Office for Film & Broadcasting director Harry Forbes in his review, "for adults and older adolescents, this is a lovely, extraordinarily touching film that conveys an admirable picture of filial devotion, self-sacrifice, faith, good sportsmanship and universal fellowship." Among references to Catholicism in "Saint Ralph" is the use of "title cards" to mark the passage of time. In addition to artwork of stained glass, the cards note a saint's feast celebrated that month, and the people or devotion for which he or she is a patron. To be honest, McGowan said, "we backpedaled" to include the cards after filming had been completed. "There are a million saints for every month, and we tried to retrofit them" into the finished film, he said. Among the saints featured are St. Jude Thaddeus, the patron of hopeless causes, and St. Bruno, referred to in the movie as the "patron of the possessed."

peacemaker, including in the Middle East, and might well continue his predecessor's efforts to bring world religions together.

They also suggested a pope with a lower public profile than that of the late pope might be healthy for the church.

Raymond Flynn, ambassador to the Holy See from 1993-97, told of arriving in Italy to take that job and meeting with Pope John Paul II to discuss the U.S. government's diplomatic interests at the Vatican, including working for peace in the Middle East.

The pope said, according to Flynn, "if I had any problems I was to talk to Ratzinger — that's how he said it."

Pope John Paul added that then-Cardinal Ratzinger was "very committed" to peace in the Middle East. "He wants to see this happen," Flynn said he was told by the pope.

Flynn said the biggest challenge to the new pope's peacemaking efforts will be to bring together leaders of various religious faiths "so they can step over the political leaders" and encourage peace efforts by the people of their countries.

"I think he can do it," he said.

Newsweek contributing editor Kenneth L. Woodward, who has covered religion for the magazine since 1964, said he would expect Pope Benedict to make few changes in how the church approaches relationships with European nations and to continue to pursue peace and justice around the world.

Less certain is how the new pope will approach the question of whether the Vatican might back down from its strict opposition to the use of condoms in areas where HIV/AIDS is rampant, he said.

"I'm not so sure this pope is quite so intractable on this as his predecessor was," Woodward said, adding that it might depend upon what Benedict hears on the topic from the bishops of Africa.

A third panelist, Father J. Bryan

Hehir, a professor of religion and public life at Harvard University, was even more reluctant than Woodward and Flynn to try to predict the direction Pope Benedict might take the Vatican and devoted much of his commentary to discussing the differences in challenges for the new pope and his predecessor.

Pope Benedict stepped into a very changed world from the one that faced Pope John Paul in 1978, Father Hehir said.

The late pope became the head of the church at a time when the world's politics and problems were much more black-and-white. Since then, the Cold War has ended, political boundaries have become less clearly defined and relationships of governments have gone from interdependence to globalization, he explained.

Because most of the official documents of the Vatican are written as collaborations, and are not just the work of the pope, Father Hehir said, he expects continuity in most areas.

Flynn said in some ways the attention of the last 26 years to the individual at the head of the church has been misdirected.

"We've been putting too much emphasis on the pope as a person," Flynn said. "There should be more emphasis on Mrs. O'Malley," meaning average Catholics.

"We shouldn't be looking to the Vatican for every point ... about the faith," he said.

Woodward said it might be a good thing for the church if Pope Benedict is more of a stay-at-home, low-profile kind of pope than Pope John Paul was.

Much of the recent image of the church and the papacy has been directly related to the personal charisma of Pope John Paul II, Woodward said. A pope who is not as highly visible in all the workings of the church would open the opportunity for the world's cardinals to become more of the voice of the church, he said.

"We might see that the cardinals have something to say, something worth listening to," Woodward said.

Public to get free memorial prayer cards

The Pope's Final Blessing is now being sent free as his lasting memorial to all

BY K.J. TEDESCHI
Universal Media Syndicate

(SYNDICATED) – Hundreds of thousands from all faiths are flooding call lines to get the emotionally gripping “Final Prayer and Blessing of Pope John Paul II.”

This final “Prayer and Blessing” is being received as a lasting sacred gift. Arrangements have now been made to send the free memorial prayer cards directly to all who want a lasting memory of the great John Paul II.

It has been announced that money can not be accepted for “The Final Prayer and Blessing of Pope John Paul II.” The memorial prayer cards are being given away free to all who request one. Those requesting the cards are only asked to help by volunteering a dollar to cover postage, handling and order confirmation costs.

This special devotion pictures the remarkably young looking Pope, caught deep in reflection while praying his personal papal Rosary. He was particularly fond of blessing rosaries for special visitors to the Vatican. The Pope's touching prayer itself appears below his image which appropriately begins “I leave you now with this prayer...”

“This closely guarded official Vatican photograph is truly stunning. It miraculously captures the Pope during his long Spiritual walk in life,” said John T. White, Director of Universal Museum Collections which has been granted special permission to give the prayer cards away free. “It is the most tranquil image of the pope ever,” White said.

Because of his worldwide following, it can not be guaranteed that there will be enough for everyone. But for at least the next ten days from the date of this publication, all those who request one will be assured of getting the special prayer card free.

Universal Museum Collections is providing the information needed for all to get the Pope's free memorial Prayer Card along with information on how to protect it. Readers of this publication can call now 1-800-236-7918 toll free for instructions on how to get the free prayer card. A controlled number of larger full color laminated cards are also available free and have been specially reserved for those requesting one of our special rose scented Papal rosaries (shown right at eleven dollars).

Pope John Paul II gave his entire life in service and dedication to people everywhere. And now, the world is flocking to honor this humble man of God in the most fitting way possible.

The release of these sacred gifts gives people everywhere something special to remember him by. He was a great leader and a truly great man of God. ■

Writer's note: “I attended an audience with the Pope and was deeply touched by his charisma and spirituality. We were fortunate to get the special rose scented Rosary he had blessed. I believe the love of God radiated from his very presence.”

■ EVERYONE IS TRYING TO GET IT: This is the closely guarded photograph of the late beloved Pope John Paul II taken by an official Vatican photographer. It appears at the top of the special Prayer Card, for which some are volunteering a dollar to cover shipping and service costs. The heart wrenching final prayer is printed below the Pope's image as he carries his personal papal rosary. Optional prayer card lamination and special rose scented rosaries are also available.

Calling for an end to the death penalty

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

May the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.

It is very likely that in the next several weeks the North Carolina House of Representatives will vote on House Bill 529, which calls for a two-year suspension on executions in North Carolina. During this proposed two-year hiatus on executions, a thorough review of how the death penalty is administered in North Carolina will take place.

The Catholic Church calls for the death penalty to be rarely used, if it is to be used at all. In March, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops launched the Catholic Campaign to End the Use of the Death Penalty. My voice is joined with those of my fellow bishops of the United States in calling for an end to the use of the death penalty in our land. Our renewed call to end this most severe of punishments comes at a time when U.S. Catholics are becoming less supportive of the use of the death penalty (as revealed in a opinion poll conducted in November 2004 by the noted pollster John Zogby).

Whether or not our society chooses to end the use of the death penalty, the Catholic Church lends its most urgent support to all measures that seek to eliminate bias in the application of the death penalty and that ensure innocent persons are not erroneously charged with capital crimes and sentenced to death. I therefore support a moratorium on the use of the death penalty in the state of North Carolina as called for in House Bill 529.

I share with you below section 2267 of the Revised Catechism of the Catholic Church (1997):

"Assuming that the guilty party's identity and responsibility have been fully determined, the traditional teaching of the Church does not exclude recourse to the death penalty, if this is the only possible way of effectively defending human lives against the unjust aggressor. If however, non-lethal means are sufficient to defend and protect people's safety from the aggressor, authority will limit itself to such means, as these are more in keeping with the concrete conditions of the common good and more in conformity with the dignity of the human person.

"Today, in fact, as a consequence of the possibilities which the state has for effectively preventing crime, by rendering one who has committed an offense incapable of doing harm — without definitely taking away from him the possibility of redeeming himself — cases in which the execution of the offender is an absolute necessity are very rare, if not practically non-existent."

The Church's teaching on the death penalty is based on the principle that all human life is sacred, made in the image and likeness of God. If the innocent of society can be protected from aggressors with non-lethal means, then indeed, such means are preferable to the use of lethal force. Modern society has the resources to separate the violent offender from society and protect the innocent, a choice that also gives the violent offender the opportunity to reflect on wrongdoings and seek the path to redemption.

The Church's teaching on the death penalty (expressed in the very first sentence of the catechism's statement on the death penalty) states that this most severe and final of all punishments is to be used only when the guilty party's identity and responsibility have been fully determined. Support for a death penalty moratorium receives added weight and increased urgency from recent case histories and research documenting that the death penalty sentencing process has erred in convicting innocent people. At least 119 people have been released from death row in the U.S.A. since 1976, of which five have been released from prison in North Carolina.

Even assuming that there may be a limited and just reason to use the death penalty to protect society, the death penalty process must ensure that innocent persons are not executed. Since the evidence clearly suggests that we are not sure that this will always be the case, further study of the death penalty process is warranted.

It only seems prudent that executions should be halted while a study of the death penalty process takes place. An execution is currently planned for May 6, 2005 in Raleigh. Does it make sense for our state to continue executions in the coming weeks,

God protects, guides his people through hardships, says pope

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — God will watch over and protect his people at all times, even as they encounter life's dangers, temptations and hardships, Pope Benedict XVI said at his May 4 weekly general audience.

"The divine shepherd knows no rest in his work of protecting his people," he said. "God will take care of us at every moment with love, protecting our life from every evil."

For his second general audience, Pope Benedict gave his first catechesis on a series of psalms and canticles Pope John Paul II had begun before his death April 2.

In Psalm 121, "a psalm of trust," Pope Benedict said that God is shown to be the vigilant, attentive and caring "custodian" or "sentinel" that guards his people, keeping them "from every risk and danger."

The pope explained how this ancient psalm still has resonance today in people's lives.

As the psalmist speaks of the people of Israel who on their long journey toward Jerusalem resisted the temptations of the pagan temples on the hills by holding to their faith in God, Pope Benedict said people today will face similar temples of deceit on "our pilgrimage of life."

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

The lofty ideals of "wealth, power, prestige, a comfortable life, (are) heights which are temptations because they really appear to be the promise of life," the pope said.

"But we in our faith" in God know that these "summits are not true, are not life," he said.

Pope Benedict said those who put their faith in God have the "confidence of not being abandoned" during times of "trial, the assault of evil, persecution."

God protects at all times, "even during the night of our life," he said.

The pope ended his audience with a reminder that the month of May was dedicated to Mary, and he called on young people to "turn to the school of Mary in order to learn to love and follow Christ."

when we know full well that the House of Representatives will soon consider HB 529? Would it not be prudent that our state cease executions until the House of Representatives has at least had a chance to vote on HB 529?

The Church's teaching on the death penalty offers us a path to diminish violence in our society, not increase it. The teaching also considers the immortal soul of the evildoer, the one guilty of the terrible crime who is justly separated from society and punished for his transgressions. As we proclaim Christ's "Good News," our desire is that all might hear and accept Christ's message of salvation, including those among us who have committed heinously sinful acts.

The Church's opposition to the use of the death penalty in modern society and the Church's current concern that the death penalty process needs to be studied (to eliminate bias and errors in its application) in no way diminishes the Church's heartfelt concern for the victims of terrible acts. I call on all the faithful to reach out to those who have experienced the violent death of loved ones. Let us pray for their healing and for the souls of their departed loved ones.

Many of you respond to the advocacy appeals of the diocesan Respect Life Office and Office of Justice and Peace that encourage respect for human life. I commend such action that heightens our society's respect for human life. In contacting your legislators and executive leaders to urge passage of laws that promote the values and teachings of our Church, especially those that relate to the protection of human life, you promote the "Gospel of Life."

In time, such action can only serve to have a positive effect in increasing respect for the dignity of all human life, at all stages of development and growth.

Please continue to join your prayers with mine as we humbly ask our Lord to strengthen our efforts to promote a respect for all human life.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

+ Peter J. Jugis

Radio, the lost medium

"Radio, it's the theatre of the mind."

So said Al Gardner of Charlotte's 50,000-watt powerhouse, WBT-AM, during a recent interview with Bishop Peter Jugis. The bishop and Gardner were guests on "The David Chadwick Show," a weekly program devoted to spiritual issues and hosted by Rev. David Chadwick, pastor of Forest Hill Presbyterian Church in Charlotte.

Bishop Jugis was on the program to talk about our new pope, Benedict XVI, and the spiritual journey we Catholics have been on during the last month. It was a wonderful discussion by men of God that provided listeners with an hour's worth of insight and spiritual nourishment.

Unfortunately, The David Chadwick Show and Gardner's own morning news programs are two of few bright spots on what is a becoming a barren, almost dangerous landscape in the medium of talk radio in America.

Too often the theatre of the mind of American radio is a shrill voice of complaint against the people for whom America isn't the land of milk and honey. Gays, Hispanic refugees and the media are favorite targets for on-air diatribes that last for hours, days and weeks.

And it isn't just the hosts. Callers to these "shows" often voice hate-filled opinions that suggest imprisonment, banishment and even death for the target of the day. And all too often, the hosts encourage these venomous speakers with smirking silence or out-and-out agreement.

If radio can be "theatre of the mind," as Gardner suggested, then a nightmarish vision of a radio netherworld can be found in the movie, "Hotel Rwanda." The film depicts the ethnic cleansing and genocide that killed more than 1 million people in Rwanda in 1994.

At the start of "Hotel Rwanda," the audience hears the soothing, convincing voice of a radio announcer making racist comments about the Tutsi minority.

As the country descends into the bloody chaos of civil war, the radio announcer is heard again and again. Each time he is more strident and bloodthirsty as he calls upon the Hutu majority to murder innocent people. Finally the announcer directs mobs from one killing zone to another in the capital city of Kigali.

It is the nature of media to push constantly toward the outer bounds of sensibility. Elvis' gyrating hips were too risqué for a 1950s television audience. Beer-guzzling revelers on an MTV spring break program would laugh "the King" off the beach for being overdressed.

In talk radio, this change has led to louder voices, less tolerant attitudes and more sensational parsing of the facts. A significant portion of the medium is in a downward spiral.

I know it's a free country and opinions are like cell phones — everyone has one. But at some point we have to recognize that the level of discourse in America is sinking and we have no one to blame but ourselves.

Catholics & the Media

DAVID HAINS

As I watched "Hotel Rwanda," I wondered: How different is the radio announcer in the film from the real-life announcers we listen to every day? It is a matter of degrees. How long would it take for talk radio to spiral down to the lowest level of hatred and the promotion of violence? Two years? Five years?

Perhaps it will be longer, but the clock on the downward spiral is ticking. When are we going to stop listening and stop supporting the talk-radio trash? When are we going to demand that stations who are given the privilege of using the public airwaves be more fair minded and respectful of the diversity of American culture?

Letters to the Editor

Governor poor example of Catholic politician

I find it a little over-reaching when The Catholic News & Herald features Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida as an example of a Catholic politician who balances church and secular laws ("Governor says Catholic politicians can balance church, secular laws," April 29).

I don't know if we are to be edified or dismayed by Gov. Bush's approach to rationalizing his support of the pope's positions on abortion and end-of-life issues. For Bush, Vatican positions on abortion and end-of-life help him realize the "value of life," while Vatican positions on the war in Iraq and capital punishment only "cause him some concern."

He even gets uneasy when the Vatican writes him letters about a death-penalty case. What is unsaid, however, is that Bush is not about to change his mind about capital punishment and the Iraq war, both of which are politically expedient issues, especially in Florida.

In my opinion, Gov. Bush is not a good example of a politician who can balance church and secular laws.

No room for 'silliness'

It was disheartening to see the picture of a stain some thought to resemble the Blessed Virgin Mary on an underpass in California in such a prominent place in The Catholic News & Herald ("Our Lady of the Underpass," April 22).

It's a shame such silliness gets reported in our diocesan newspaper.

How did St. Paul learn Christian doctrine?

Q. Recently there have been some interesting questions, both at home and in our Catholic education classes, about St. Paul. The first is about his self-described "thorn in the flesh" (2 Cor 12:7). I've heard he was the first recorded stigmatic.

Second, where did he get his Christian training and authority? He had a dramatic encounter with Christ, but never met him in person. He did not know the other apostles until later. Where did he acquire the background he needed to teach Christian doctrine? (Indiana)

A. That's a very good question, because Paul's history as a Christian authority is special; there's no one else like him.

The simplest answer to your question is that he received his "Christian education" and authority to preach the Gospel directly from Jesus, no one else. Paul himself insists on this point. In his letter to the Christians in Galatia, he refutes attacks on his teaching with the claim, "I did not receive it from a human being, nor was I taught it, but it came through a revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal 1:12).

Other information in his letters and the Acts of the Apostles supports that claim.

Born in Tarsus in Asia Minor of Jewish parents, Paul eventually went to Jerusalem, where he became a disciple of the illustrious rabbi Gamaliel. Paul was a fervent rabbi himself and a rigid Pharisee. But neither this nor any other previous experience could prepare him for that kind of conversion.

After his famous encounter with the Lord on the road to Damascus, it seems he went to "Arabia" for three years, then preached the Gospel in Damascus before returning to Jerusalem where he met the apostles for the first time (Gal 1, Acts 9).

Clearly, he did not vacillate about his authority as an apostle, even to the point of challenging (and convincing) Peter and the Christians "reputed to be important" in Jerusalem about the need to be circumcised before baptism.

Key to his conversion and theological formation, of course, was his mysterious personal confrontation with Christ as Paul was on his way to Damascus to attack the followers of Jesus. Paul asked, "Who are you, sir?" The Lord answered, "I am Jesus whom you are persecuting."

For the rest of his life, those words remained alive in Paul as a fountain of theological learning. Practically all the dominant themes of his teaching flowed significantly from his reflection on what Jesus said at that moment, particularly his majestic image of the church as the body of Christ.

On that day Christ did not say: I am Jesus whose friends or followers you are persecuting. He literally identified himself with those who believe in him.

Over the years Paul drew the conclusion he expands on, for example, in 1 Corinthians 12 and 13. You have a variety of talents and gifts, he told them, bestowed by the one Spirit. But that Spirit of Jesus makes all of you one with him; you are together "Christ's body, and individually parts of it."

Another large element in Paul's formation, together with his mystical experiences (see for instance 2 Cor 12:1) is the conflict with the other apostles, referred to above, over the requirement that Christian converts be held to traditional Jewish laws. The resolution of that struggle contributed much to the development of the major themes of Paul's theology.

There's no question that Paul's total and immediate transformation by Jesus Christ has no parallel in Christian history, perhaps in all the history of religion.

Speculation never stops about the "thorn in the flesh." Was it sickness? Disability? Temptation? Pain? Interestingly, Hebrew Scripture sometimes uses that expression as we use "thorn in the side," referring to a person.

The context of those words certainly is open to that possible meaning. But there's no way to know.

Senior citizens enjoy camaraderie, education at annual Spring Fling event

HUNTERSVILLE — Once again, seniors from across Diocese of Charlotte descended upon St. Mark Church in Huntersville for a day of enrichment and entertainment at the 19th Annual Spring Fling April 28.

More than 225 seniors gathered for recreation, camaraderie and safety presentations. This year's fling featured storyteller Barbara Freeman, who entertained the participants in the morning.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated the closing Mass to conclude the day's events.

Each year, the diocesan Office of Elder Ministry hosts the Spring Fling as a day where seniors can forget the demands of life and join others in the spirit of oneness and friendship, said Sandra Breakfield, director of Elder Ministry. All costs for the event are covered by registration fees.

Elder Ministry, a division of Catholic Social Services, provides guidance to parishes within the Diocese of Charlotte in order to enhance the well-being of older adults. Annual events such as the Spring Fling and Fall Day of Reflection provide an opportunity for senior citizens to gather for entertainment, camaraderie, education and spiritual enrichment.

"Our goal is that the seniors enjoy being together and participating in the activities," Breakfield said.

"The spirits and faces of the people spoke volumes — everyone seemed to enjoy themselves," she said.

Many of the attendees took advantage of the opportunity to participate in several of the recreational activities, including chair exercise, crafts, line dancing and more.

Aside from an abundance of recreational activities, the seniors had several opportunities to focus on their health and security.

Participants were offered a free osteoporosis screening and information on arthritis. They also could learn about fraud and scam prevention from Maryanne Dailey from the Better Business Bureau.

"We try to offer opportunities for fun and fellowship, but also add a learn-

MOTHER'S ABORTION

LAWRENCE, Kan. — "I was aborted and did not die." That statement might sound like a headline from a supermarket tabloid.

But in the case of Gianna Jessen, 28, of Nashville, Tenn., it's true.

Jessen told 500 students at the University of Kansas that her mother was seven-and-a-half-months pregnant when she went to a Los Angeles clinic for an abortion in 1977. But the saline solution injected into her mother's womb to abort the fetus somehow failed to accomplish its deadly task.

"By the sheer power of Jesus Christ," she said, "I did not die that day."

Lebanese clergy inspect the site of a bomb blast in the port city of Jounieh, Lebanon, May 7 after a bomb blast May 6 destroyed the Voice of Charity radio station, operated by the Congregation of Maronite Missionaries.

Catholic-run radio station in Lebanon bombed; one person killed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (CNS) — A Catholic-run radio station in Lebanon was destroyed in a bombing attack May 6, the latest in a series of attacks in Lebanon's Christian areas.

The attack was an apparent response to the station's campaign regarding the plight of Lebanese detained in Syrian prisons.

The Voice of Charity, operated by the Congregation of Maronite Lebanese Missionaries in the port city of Jounieh since 1984, was completely destroyed in the attack, caused by an estimated 50 pounds of explosives in the main square outside the building. One person was killed, and more than 20 were injured.

Several adjoining buildings were also destroyed in the blast.

On the day of the attack, the Voice of Charity broadcast live from outside Beirut's U.N. house, where families of Lebanese detainees staged a sit-in. Approximately 600 Lebanese — including two Maronite priests — have been either missing or detained in Syrian prisons since Lebanon's civil war, which ended in 1989.

Syrian authorities have denied the existence of the prisoners, and the Lebanese government has ignored the issue.

Former prisoners of Syria recounted their experiences of torture in Syria's prisons during the Voice of Charity's live broadcast, and family members of current prisoners shared their frustrations about not knowing about their loved ones.

"We consider this attack as a kind of political response" to the May 6 broadcast, said Maronite Father Maurice Chidiac, co-director of the Voice of Charity.

"From now on we will consider the cause of the Lebanese prisoners as our case," Father Chidiac said. "It is a kind of democratic expression of our will and our prayers that this case will be sorted out very soon."

An hour after the attack, the station resumed broadcasting hymns from a transmitter from a mountaintop sanctuary; a liturgy was arranged in the station's parking lot May 8, and the following day a eucharistic procession was held around the grounds of the station and the surrounding damaged neighborhood.

The Voice of Charity has been broadcasting for nearly 21 years. The 24-hour station was able to reach Syria, Israel, the Palestinian territories, Cyprus and parts of Egypt and Jordan via its satellites and around the world via the Internet; its Web site is: www.radiocharity.org.

Bush urges Americans to pray in thanksgiving for their freedom

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Americans need to pray in thanksgiving for their freedom and for the wisdom to use their freedom wisely, said President George W. Bush on the annual National Day of Prayer May 5.

At a White House ceremony, the president said prayer "continues to play an important part in the personal lives of many Americans."

"Every day, millions of us turn to the Almighty in reverence and humility. Every day our churches and synagogues and mosques and temples are filled with men and women who pray to our Maker," he added.

The president was joined in the interfaith ceremony by other speakers including priests and a rabbi.

The president stressed that Americans need to pray in thanks for their freedom, which he described as a "gift from God" meant for "all men and women and for all times."

He also said Americans should "pray for help in defending the gift of freedom from those who seek to destroy it" and they should pray especially for the "troops who are defending our freedom against determined enemies around the globe."

President Bush also noted that Americans should pray to understand the limits of human strength and to recognize that their plans are not always God's plans.

He urged Americans to ask God for the "strength to do what is right and help those in need."

"We who ask for God's help for ourselves," he added, "have a particular obligation to care for the least of our brothers and sisters within our midst."

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope says modern media should help ‘tear down walls of hostility’

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI called on the world’s news media to help “tear down the walls of hostility that still divide humanity” by reporting objectively and in a way that respects human dignity.

Speaking at a noon blessing May 8, World Communications Day, the pope said news media represent an extraordinary resource in the modern age, capable of bringing people together. An example came during the death and funeral of Pope John Paul II, he said.

But the media are also capable of damaging people and societies, he said.

“It all depends on the way the media are used,” he said.

“These important instruments of communication can favor mutual awareness and dialogue, or on the contrary feed prejudice and contempt between individuals and populations. They can help spread peace or foment violence,” he said.

The pope stressed the importance of news coverage being at all times objective, respectful of human dignity and sensitive “to the common good.” That depends in great part on a sense of personal responsibility among those in the communication professions, he said.

IN MESSAGE TO RABBI, POPE CALLS FOR CONTINUED DIALOGUE WITH JEWS

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In a message to the retired chief rabbi of Rome, Pope Benedict XVI said it was important for the Catholic Church to continue dialogue with Jews.

The pope made his comment in a greeting sent to Rabbi Elio Toaff, who was celebrating his 90th birthday in Rome. The message was read May 8 by Cardinal Walter Kasper, head of the Vatican’s Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews.

Rabbi Toaff welcomed Pope John Paul II to the Rome synagogue when the late pope made his historic visit there in 1986. Pope Benedict thanked the rabbi for his efforts at building Catholic-Jewish relations during the previous pontificate.

“Your birthday is a good occasion for renewing the commitment to continue our dialogue, looking ahead with trust to the future,” the pope wrote.

After Pope John Paul died in April, Rabbi Toaff was one of the first to pay his respects.

Papal power must be used to protect faith, Pope Benedict says

ROME (CNS) — The pope’s power is not absolute, but must be used to defend church doctrine against attempts to water it down, Pope Benedict XVI said as he took possession of his cathedral as the bishop of Rome.

“The pope is not an absolute sovereign whose thoughts and will are law,” Pope Benedict said. “He must not proclaim his own ideas but instead, in the face of all attempts to adapt or water it down, and of every opportunism, he constantly must bind himself and the church in obedience to the word of God.”

On May 7 Pope Benedict took possession of Rome’s Basilica of St. John Lateran, the diocesan cathedral, as thousands of Romans gathered outside to welcome him.

During the liturgy inside the basilica, he stood at the foot of the bishop’s throne listening to Cardinal Camillo Ruini, his vicar for Rome, reminding him that the pope must be “the servant of the servants of God.”

In his homily, Pope Benedict said it is the duty of the pontiff to protect the word of God “so it is not torn to pieces by continuous changes in fashion.”

The pope cautioned against studying sacred Scriptures in situations too detached from the “live voice of the church.”

While the work of scholars can shed light on the Scriptures’ historical development, Pope Benedict said that nevertheless “science alone cannot provide a definitive and binding interpretation. It is not able to give us, in interpreting, that certainty with which we can live and with which we can die.”

Warning against “erroneous interpretations of freedom,” Pope Benedict also cited Pope John Paul II’s calls for the defense of human life “from the moment of conception to natural death.”

“Freedom to kill is not true freedom but rather a tyranny that will reduce human beings to slavery,” the pope said.

Pope Benedict said that whoever takes on the ministry of pontiff must be conscious of his own fragility and weakness and of the constant need for “purification and conversion.”

“But he also can be conscious that from the Lord will come the power to confirm his brothers and sisters in the faith,” the pope said.

Parishioners praise, reflect on Blessed Virgin Mary during annual event

BY JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

MAGGIE VALLEY — Parishioners, singing "Mary's Song" (a version of the "Magnificat") walked out of St. Margaret of Scotland Church.

Beside the front door, they gathered before the gray concrete statue of the Virgin Mary. Viola Henry, Maggie Valley's first Catholic resident, lovingly placed the crown of pink, white and purple flowers on Mary's head.

May 7, the eve of Mother's Day, was beautiful — warm and sunny after several chilly, cloudy days. Traditionally, St. Margaret of Scotland Church holds its "May crowning" the day before Mother's Day.

"I came to know [Mary] in 1978, when I prayed to her, 'Let me come to know and love you as one of my friends,' because I was a convert and did not know her at all except through rosaries at wakes," said Janet Horne, who makes the floral crown every year.

Augustinian Father Francis Doyle, pastor of St. Margaret of Scotland Church, led everyone in praying the rosary's "luminous" mysteries: "Jesus' baptism in the Jordan," "Jesus reveals himself at the wedding feast of Cana," "Jesus proclaims the kingdom of God and calls us to conversion of heart," "Jesus' transfiguration on Mount Tabor" and "Jesus institutes the most holy Eucharist."

"What does grace look like, or images of Mary?" Father Doyle asked in his homily following the Gospel account of the Annunciation.

In different cultures, Mary looks like the people of those cultures.

"However we image Mary," he said, "what was important to God was what was in her heart, her willingness to cooperate fully with God. As we near the feast of Pentecost, we see that she was right in the midst of the disciples, right in the midst of the Church."

What did Mary say to the disciples?

"I suspect that her counsel to them was to 'do whatever he tells you,'" Father Doyle said, adding that this is true for everyone — to listen to and act upon whatever God tells them.

Father Doyle referred to the slew of televised "makeover" shows, in which people try to change their appearances or to look like other people.

"The self-image that's important is that we are created in the image and likeness of God," he said.

Parishioner Mary Witte's image of Mary is one of constant support. Witte said she owes her own name to her mother's prayers, who prayed that if she had a daughter, she would name her Mary.

"I am Mary's namesake," Witte added. "She's always been there for me. I read Harry's (her late husband) memoirs again last night, and he wrote about his devotion to Mary."

Among the things that Harry Witte had prayed for was that the mother of God would help him find the right wife. Harry and Mary Witte were married 55 years.

Holy Angels honors volunteers

BELMONT — Holy Angels presented its 2005 Volunteer Awards during the 15th Annual Volunteer Appreciation and Awards Banquet at the Sisters of Mercy Administration Building in Belmont April 20.

The banquet, celebrated during National Volunteer Appreciation Week, began with guest speaker Deborah Tourloukis, a Sept. 11, 2001 World Trade Center attack survivor, who spoke about the spirit of volunteering in the aftermath of that tragedy.

She applauded Holy Angels' volunteers and encouraged them to continue "carrying the light," which represents the spirit of volunteerism.

The 2005 Holy Angels Volunteer Award winners were:

Volunteer of the Year: Robert Grant, who has volunteered at Holy Angels almost weekly since June 2003; Volunteer Group of the Year: Duke Energy, whose volunteer group has assisted Holy Angels for four years; Ed Sabatini Advocacy Award: Bob Gwiazdzinski, a Knight of Columbus who has coordinated Holy Angels residents' annual Knights Boat Ride, Knights Christmas Party and Family Association Cookout; and Dennis McClain Volunteer of the Year: Michelle Gassaway, who works with Holy Angels residents at Cherubs Café.

Volunteers to receive the Touched by an Angel award were Bob Moran and Mary Kane and "volunteers" Wesley Thomas, Katie Gray, Nelli and Krystal Strader. Named in memory of volunteer Kevin Patrick Crosby, this recognition is given to volunteers who offer angelic touches to their volunteer work.

Volunteers to receive the Angel of Friendship award were Tom Long, Smitty and Gail Hanks, Gail Blackburn and Sister Jill Weber. This new award was established to honor the one-on-one personal time and commitment that extends beyond the regular volunteer service and results in a special friendship with a resident.

Holy Angels, founded in 1956 by the Sisters of Mercy, is a nonprofit corporation that provides residential services and programs for children and adults with varying degrees of mental retardation and physical disabilities, some of whom are medically fragile.

A 'glorious tradition' of a 'small army with great ideals.' — Pope Benedict XVI

Swiss guards swear to defend pope

Apostolic Palace.

The ceremony is held each year on May 6, the anniversary of the date in 1527 when 147 guards died defending Pope Clement VII during the sack of Rome.

The new recruits swear an oath to "faithfully, loyally and honorably" serve the pope, "sacrificing if necessary" their lives to defend him.

In his speech, Pope Benedict thanked them for their dedication, saying that by devotedly protecting the pope, the Swiss Guard allow the pontiff to carry out his mission "free of worry for his safety."

The pope asked the new recruits to seek out and nourish the spirit that makes the Swiss Guard such a special corps. May it also lead to "a true spiritual bond" among the guards, he said.

Pope Benedict said the Swiss Guard is built upon the "great ideals" of a "firmness of Catholic faith, a convinced and convincing Christian way of life, unshakeable trust and a profound love for the church and for the vicar of Christ."

He said the guards also represent "conscientiousness and perseverance in the small and great tasks of daily service, courage and humility, attention to others and humanity."

Swiss Guard recruits are required to be Swiss citizens, unmarried Catholic men between the ages of 19 and 30, and at least 5 feet 8 inches tall. Even though they must have completed Switzerland's required military service, prospective papal guards still undergo a rigorous selection process and further training in defense and security.

Though Swiss Guards are no longer fighting battles with their broadswords and halberds, their daily life includes 24-hour shifts that often require standing for long periods of time guarding the Vatican's major entrances or working at liturgical celebrations and audiences.

The guards' one day off every three days tends to be busy as well, since it is often dedicated to inspections, briefings, marches, additional courses and shooting practice.

At the early evening swearing-in ceremony May 6, the Swiss Guard band played Gloria Gaynor's 1978 dance hit, "I Will Survive."

Starting in June, the Swiss Guard will begin a string of jubilee celebrations that will include festivities Jan. 22 marking their founding 500 years ago.

The guards will create a historical re-enactment of the Jan. 22, 1506, arrival of 150 Swiss soldiers at the Vatican marking the start of their centuries-long service to the see of Peter at the request of Pope Julius II.

The jubilee will conclude May 6, 2006, when some 100 former Swiss Guards attend the swearing-in ceremony after marching from Switzerland to Rome in 26 days — a much swifter excursion than the seven-month trek it took the first Swiss Guards to make in 1505-06.

Father Roger Arnsparger, pastor of St. Barnabas Church in Arden, speaks about the Year of the Eucharist to members of the Charlotte Catholic Women's Group at Myers Park Country Club May 2.

Base everything in Eucharist, says priest life of the Catholic Church, and also the mission of the church," said Father Arnsparger.

Pope John Paul II announced in June 2004 that a year of special emphasis on the Eucharist would be observed from October 2004 to October 2005.

"(The Eucharist) is where we get our energy to be built up in the body of Christ and also to bring others into (the church), so it becomes a part of the new evangelization," Father Arnsparger said.

Father Arnsparger said he hopes people will realize that the Eucharist is a treasure.

"When we walk down the aisle to holy Communion ... we go on pilgrimage to Jesus and he comes to us," he said. "Our hearts should be ready to leap, much as John the Baptist leaped in the womb of Elizabeth as Jesus came toward him in the womb of Mary."

"If we could develop a 'culture of the Eucharist,' that leads to peace, because we realize Jesus is walking with us — that we are not alone," Father Arnsparger said.

Father Arnsparger also hopes Catholics will have greater appreciation for the Mass and for all the liturgy, such as the liturgy of the hours, which "leads us to reflect on God's saving acts."

If people study the Mass, their participation will become more active and conscientious, Father Arnsparger said.

"I'm hoping (the Year of the Eucharist) will lead them to spend time outside of Mass in adoration of the Blessed Sacrament," he said. "People are so busy today, and they need to take some quiet time in adoration."

According to Father Arnsparger, during the Year of the Eucharist, people also need to focus on Sunday as a day of rest and recuperation.

"Sundays must be regained for the Lord," he said. "We need to reawaken to the fact that we need a day to rest."

"Often we put Jesus on to Sundays, even if that, and we get it over with," Father Arnsparger said. "But Jesus is walking with us every day, and it starts on Sunday."

According to Father Arnsparger, the more people become amazed at the mystery of the Eucharist, it will change hearts.

"It will change the way we make decisions. It will change our marriages," he said. "It will change my priesthood. Every day, as I become more amazed, I become a better priest."

The Year of the Eucharist is meant to lead people to a higher standard of holiness and the art of prayer, Father Arnsparger said.

"Prayer must be based in what God has revealed, otherwise we've made a new religion," he said.

Father Arnsparger offered several suggestions for observing the Year of the Eucharist, including: participation at Sunday Mass, visitation to the Blessed Sacrament outside of Mass, setting aside Sunday as the day of the Lord, attending the diocesan Eucharistic Congress in September and forming a disciplined and ordered daily prayer life.

"We must be in communion with Jesus, so that we may receive Communion," Father Arnsparger said. "When we are in communion, then we develop deeper into being with God rather than being with each other."

A life of devotion

Priest urges renewed emphasis on eucharistic devotion

BY TRACY EARLY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

YONKERS, N.Y. — Franciscan Father Benedict Groeschel, an internationally known specialist in spirituality, called for a renewal of emphasis on eucharistic devotion and adoration.

He said attacks on practices such as exposition of the Blessed Sacrament had been expressed in books used in some Catholic seminaries, colleges and high schools and had led to the decline of such practices.

This "declining eucharistic devotion" is a "measure of the loss of faith," said the priest, who is a Franciscan Friar of the Renewal.

Preceded by Cardinal Avery Dulles and Father Richard John Neuhaus, Father Groeschel spoke during a March 14 lecture in a Lenten series sponsored by the seminary of the Archdiocese of New York, St. Joseph's in Yonkers, on the Year of the Eucharist.

Pope John Paul II announced last June that a year of special emphasis on the Eucharist would be held from October 2004 to October of this year.

He issued an encyclical titled "Ecclesia de Eucharistia," on the church and the Eucharist, in 2003, and Father Groeschel called his lecture a commentary on that document.

Holding a doctorate in psychology and based at a New York archdiocesan retreat center, Father Groeschel has built a growing reputation through extensive retreat work, writings and appearances on Mother Angelica's Eternal Word Television Network, known as EWTN.

In 1987, he also led a group of six Capuchin Franciscans in forming the order to which he belongs. The order emphasizes preaching, missionary work and service to the poor.

The marked esteem and reverence in which Father Groeschel is held by many beneficiaries of his ministry appear to have intensified since his recovery from a near-fatal accident in Orlando, Fla., in January 2004.

Some lasting effects of his severe injuries were evident. He walks with a cane, and he remained seated to lecture. But at the age of 71 he has resumed an active schedule. He is a prolific writer and a popular retreat leader.

Father Groeschel traced the history of eucharistic exposition to actions taken about A.D. 700 in Lugo, a Spanish town near the pilgrimage center of Santiago de Compostela.

While the Eucharist had traditionally been reserved for delivery to the sick and dying whenever needed, believers in Lugo began the practice of putting it in a container that enabled everyone to see it, he said.

The widespread popularity of this practice developed later through the influence of St. Francis of Assisi and others, he said.

Father Groeschel said eucharistic devotion has spiritual importance because it is a way of responding to Christ that puts worshippers in his presence.

"He may not be present to you because you are not responding to him," he said.

The tabernacle containing the reserved sacrament should have a prominent place in the church, and should be presented in a manner marked by dignity and beauty to demonstrate its importance, he said.

Although there is a divine presence everywhere, Christ is found in his humanity in the body and blood of the Eucharist, he said.

Father Groeschel said eucharistic devotion was expressed privately through personal adoration and publicly through such activities as eucharistic processions.

EUCHARIST AND EVANGELIZATION

Vatican posthumously publishes pope's World Mission Sunday message

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — In his last message published to the world, Pope John Paul II called on the faithful to be “generous evangelizers” by fighting injustice and poverty while spreading the Gospel. On April 15 the Vatican released the pope’s annual World Mission Sunday message, which was signed by the late pope and dated Feb. 22, the feast of the Chair of St. Peter.

“In our day human society appears to be shrouded in dark shadows while it is shaken by tragic events and shattered by catastrophic natural disasters,” the late pope wrote.

He said the eucharistic celebration is “bread from heaven, which gives eternal life and opens the human heart to a great hope.”

The Vatican said Pope John Paul wished the message to be made public April 15 so that bishops’ conferences around the world had time to prepare for World Mission Sunday, which will be celebrated Oct. 23 in most dioceses.

Addressing this year’s theme, “Mission: Bread Broken for the World,” the pope highlighted the task of pastoral workers and missionaries who “travel unexplored paths to carry the bread of salvation to all.”

The Eucharist is not meant just for oneself, he wrote; it is a gift that must be shared with all people.

“Passionate love for Christ leads to courageous proclamation of Christ, proclamation which, with martyrdom, becomes the supreme offering of love for God and mankind,” he wrote.

Pope John Paul wrote that the “Eucharist leads us to be generous evangelizers, actively committed to building a just and more fraternal world.”

He said he wished this year of the Eucharist would help inspire all Christians to show concern for and solidarity with those suffering from “the many forms of poverty present in our world.”

In his message, the pope said he hoped the many missionaries who died in paying witness to the Gospel would serve as examples that will help attract “numerous men and women to tread the path of heroic fidelity to Christ.”

Bread and wine

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 16

We have been examining the first movement of the Liturgy of the Eucharist, known as the offertory. Clearly the most essential elements that are presented to the priest and offered for sacrifice are the bread and wine. Without bread and wine there is no Mass. Nothing may be substituted for these elements.

What is so important about bread and wine? Why do we use bread and wine at every Mass? We do because the Catholic Church faithfully imitates Jesus Christ.

At the Last Supper, the first holy Mass, Jesus commanded his apostles — his college of bishops — “Do this in memory of me,” thus giving them the power to offer the sacrifice of the Mass. The church faithfully follows the command of the Lord since she has no authority to change the essential elements of the sacrament.

In the same way that Christ ordained men, his apostles, to be his priests, the church may only use bread and wine for the sacrament of his Body and Blood (Cf. Catechism #1577). The church has the authority only to continue what Christ established.

In instituting the sacrament on Holy Thursday, Jesus accepted the gifts presented at the Passover — namely, the bread and wine — blessed them, gave them to his apostles and fulfilled the meaning of the Passover with his perfect sacrifice. Here, at the first holy Mass, Our Lord delivered the blueprint for perfect worship, which necessitated the use of bread and wine.

Therefore, the church has legislated that bread and wine are essential, necessary to the sacrifice of the Mass (CCL #924;926). What is so important about bread and wine?

At this point, we must penetrate a little deeper into the mystery of the sacrament. To do this, we will inspect these two elements on four distinct levels: the natural, the symbolic, the theological and the mystical/spiritual.

Guest Column

On the natural level, bread and wine have nourished mankind for centuries; they are common ingredients in the human diet almost from the beginning of time. It is natural that bread and wine would signify nourishment.

On the symbolic level, both bread and wine symbolize the work of God and man — God provides the wheat and grapes, but man must labor to produce bread and wine. In order to manufacture bread, wheat is cultivated and harvested, sifted and ground into flour, added to water, kneaded and baked, before it can be used in the Mass.

Likewise, wine is the end product resulting from the tending of grapes, harvesting them, crushing them and fermenting the juice into a fine vintage. The process is time-consuming and arduous, symbolizing the cooperation of God and man, divine providence and human labor.

On the theological level, bread and wine are first mentioned in the Book of Genesis in reference to the mysterious priest and king, Melchizedek.

Melchizedek offered bread and wine as a gift pleasing to God. His sacrifice foreshadowed the one, true and perfect sacrifice of Jesus Christ, who is the definitive high priest and king. Further, since many grains of wheat compose the bread and many grapes are crushed to produce wine, the bread and wine also theologically represent the church, composed of many members.

And on the mystical or spiritual level, since grains of wheat must be ground into flour and baked and grapes must be crushed into liquid and fermented, the actual process represents the agony, the suffering and the passion of Christ that brought about our redemption.

The natural, symbolic, theological and mystical/spiritual levels all demonstrate that bread and wine are not only necessary, but appropriate elements to be used in the perfect sacrifice of Christ offered in an unbloody manner at each holy Mass.

Next week, we will return to the ritual of the Mass to examine the preparation of the altar and the offertory procession.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar at St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Is That Your Final Answer?

"When I'm gone, who will receive the gifts God gave me?"

A will is your final answer to the question. 60-70% of Americans die without a valid will. If you die without a will, the laws of the state you live in will determine how your assets are divided including assets to your family. Aborted woman says Christ helped her live that I was born during a saline solution abortion," Jessen said in a recent talk. "There's no medical explanation of why I'm here."

"It's like being burned alive in your mother's womb for 18 hours," she said. "The abortionist on duty that day wasn't there and I thank the Lord or he would have strangled or suffocated me."

Jessen's early life was not much easier, until she was removed from the abusive foster home in which she had been placed and adopted by Penny Jessen.

Although the doctors had predicted the baby would be "no more than a vegetable," unable to speak, see or walk, the kindly older woman spent hours with Jessen in intensive physical therapy that soon bore fruit.

In fact, none of the doctors' predictions came true. By age 4, Jessen was able to walk with a walker and leg braces. Today, she walks without the aid of braces, walker or cane.

Lifting leg weights has strengthened her legs and prevented her from falling down as often as in the past.

Now, her only visible disability is a limp. But she doesn't let that hold her back. She told the students she had been running several miles daily in preparation for a 26-mile marathon in Nashville in early May.

"The doctors said there was no hope and I would never progress beyond that point," she said. "They said, 'We know you'd never want to live like that.' What arrogance. How can you look at any human life and say there is no hope?"

Jessen said she has forgiven her biological mother, whom she has never met. But she criticized her mother's selfishness and cautioned young women in the audience to avoid the same trap.

"My biological mother thought she was making a decision affecting only her," she said. "If abortion is merely about women's rights, then what were mine?"

Jessen also said that she does not condemn any woman who has had an abortion. But she told any girl listening who was pregnant to find counseling and support rather than an abortion clinic.

Jessen's strong views have frequently put her in the public eye. She has testified twice before the U.S. Congress — in 1996 against partial-birth abortions and in 2000 in support of the Born Alive Infant Act.

The born-alive act says any infant who is fully born and shows signs of life is considered a human person entitled to the full protection of the law — even if the baby is born during a failed abortion.

In 2001, following an abortion debate, Jessen received a standing ovation from a crowd of supporters of legal abortion.

In 2002, she was invited to the White House to witness the signing of the Born Alive Infant Act by President

George W. Bush.

Not everyone agrees with Jessen's viewpoint, however. When she was only 16, she testified before the Alabama Legislature. Afterward a woman in the audience told her, "Children with disabilities are a burden to society."

"That shouldn't be shocking because that's where we're heading as a society," Jessen said. "I love this country, but we've done some shameful things."

"When does it end, people?" she asked. "When we diminish life? What happens when it's you?"

Gianna Jessen, 28, of Nashville, Tenn., who lived after her mother aborted her in 1977, tells her story to about 500 students at the University of Kansas April 5. Though doctors predicted she would be "no more than a vegetable," Jessen was preparing to run her first marathon.

Poll shows majority in U.S. oppose all human cloning, most abortions

WASHINGTON (CNS)— The majority of Americans think all human cloning should be banned and abortion should be legal only when the life of the mother is threatened or in cases of rape or incest, according to a new poll released April 27.

The new survey by an organization called the polling company also found that 75 percent of Americans strongly disagreed with the statement that "a person should be able to take a minor girl across state lines to obtain an abortion without her parents' knowledge." Another 7 percent said they disagreed "somewhat."

"It's almost impossible to find an issue on Capitol Hill where you can get 75 percent" of the population to strongly agree, said Kellyanne Conway, CEO and president of the polling company, at a Washington press conference where the poll results were released.

Later that day, the House of Representatives passed the Child Interstate Abortion Notification Act, 270-157. The legislation would make it a federal crime to take a minor across state lines for an abortion in violation of the minor's home state parental consent or notification laws. A similar bill is pending in the Senate.

On cloning, half of the 1,000 survey respondents were offered four possible responses across a spectrum of opinion. In all, 40 percent chose one of the three options that would permit some or all cloning, while 55 percent said all human cloning should be banned.

The rest of the respondents said they did not know or refused to answer.

Only 8 percent said all human cloning should be allowed, 28 percent said cloning that "creates and then destroys human embryos for stem-cell research should be allowed, but cloning human embryos which would result in the birth of children should be banned," and 4 percent said cloning that would result in the birth of children should be allowed but cloning to create human embryos that would be destroyed for stem-cell research should be banned.

Among the 500 offered only two possible responses, 41 percent said they strongly or somewhat supported the statement that "cloning to create human embryos for stem-cell research which would destroy them should be allowed and only cloning for reproduction should be banned," and 54 percent said they believed strongly or somewhat that all human cloning should be banned.

Because the sample for the cloning questions was only 500 people, the margin of error for those responses was plus or minus 4.5 percentage points. For the other questions, the margin of error was plus or minus 3 percentage points.

All 1,000 respondents were offered six possible responses when asked to describe their position on the abortion issue. Sixty-two percent chose one of the three responses considered "pro-life," while 35 percent selected one of the "pro-choice" options.

Here are the responses, and the percentage that selected them:

— Abortion should never be legal, 17 percent.

— Abortion should be legal only when the life of the mother is in danger, 14 percent.

— Abortion should be legal only when the life of the mother is in danger or in cases of rape or incest, 31 percent.

— Abortion should be legal for any reason during the first three months, 21 percent.

— Abortion should be legal for any reason during the first six months, 4 percent.

— Abortion should be legal for any reason at any time during a woman's pregnancy, 10 percent.

The survey was commissioned by the National Right to Life Committee, one of the sponsors of a "Real Women's Voices" lobbying day, which focused on several issues pending in the Senate, including a ban on human cloning and the appointment of federal judges.

A separate poll conducted by Ayres McHenry Association and commissioned by the Judicial Confirmation Network in March found that 82 percent of Americans agreed that any nominee for a federal judgeship who is well-qualified deserves an up-or-down vote on the floor of the Senate.

Nearly as many — 79 percent — disagreed with the statement, "If a well-qualified nominee is pro-life on abortion, he or she should be disqualified from serving on the U.S. Supreme Court."

"I believe what we are seeing from these various surveys is an informed society," said Maggi Nadol, coordinator of the diocesan Respect Life Office.

"People have seen first-hand what the fallout can be from laws that do not respect the dignity and sanctity of life," she said. "It has manifested itself in many unfortunate ways, both individually and culturally."

Editor Kevin E. Murray contributed to this story.

We don't wonder what kind of man can make a difference.
We wonder what kind of man cannot.

The Knights of Columbus is a leading service organization. Our members are men of character and distinction who strive to act on behalf of their faith and their conscience. To date, we number over 1.6 million worldwide and have helped raise more than $128 million for charitable causes. And our goals for tomorrow are even greater, because the need is, too. So if you think you cannot make a difference, keep in mind this simple truth. That countless men just like you already have. St. Mark School students raise $22,000 in diabetes walk HUNTERSVILLE — Some children with diabetes will have a better summer thanks to the students of St. Mark School. The entire student body — 530 students — participated in the School Walk for Diabetes April 18.

Sherri Petrilli, St. Mark School's nurse, coordinated the event, which supports the American Diabetes Association (ADA). The school raised $22,134, which will be donated to ADA-sponsored residential camps for children with diabetes.

In 2004, St. Mark School raised more than $16,000 for the ADA, the highest amount in the Southeast and the ninth highest in the United States.

According to Suzanne Fulcher, coordinator for the State of North Carolina School Walk for Diabetes, the money raised by St. Mark School students this year will likely keep the school in their first-place regional and top 10 national spots.

"With the prevalence of type 2 diabetes today, the walk provided an educational opportunity for the children," Petrilli said.

A few weeks before the walk, the students learned about both type 1 and type 2 diabetes. They also learned about the importance of good nutrition and exercise in the prevention of diabetes.

Type 1 diabetes results from the body's failure to produce insulin, the hormone that allows glucose to enter and fuel the cells of the body. Approximately five- to-10 percent of Americans who are diagnosed with diabetes have type 1.

Type 2 diabetes results from insulin resistance, in which the body fails to properly use insulin, combined with relative insulin deficiency. Most Americans are diagnosed with type 2 diabetes.

Having diabetes increases the risk for many serious health complications, including heart disease, blindness, nerve damage and kidney damage.

"The students had a lot of fun, plus they helped two of their classmates, who are diabetic," said Petrilli.

Mercy and Samaritans

Our Lady of the Assumption students raise funds for AIDS patients

CHARLOTTE — Students from Our Lady of the Assumption School in Charlotte sit with Stan Patterson, president of House of Mercy, a six-bed residential home for AIDS patients, after presenting Patterson with a check for $1,730 April 14. More than 165 students raised the money by participating in a "Laps for Lent" walk in March.

Patterson compared the children to the Good Samaritan, who cared for the injured man he found on the side of the road. Recently, a patient came to House of Mercy in Belmont after being found on the side of the road.

"When each of you raised money for House of Mercy, I believe you were following the example of the Good Samaritan," said Patterson. "You decided to help someone you don't even know."

Immaculata scores at chess championship

HENDERSONVILLE — Students from Immaculata School in Hendersonville "cleaned the board" at this year's North Carolina Scholastic Chess Championship.

Twenty-six students from the school took part in the tournament in Charlotte March 5-6.

Out of 132 students participating in the K-5 division, Immaculata's K-5 team went home as the 2005 North Carolina state champions. Students were Josh Horwitz, Landon Rimbault, Aidan Balkan, Seth Jones, Adena Allen, Jarret Miller, Daniel Araya and Elena Durvas.

Individually, Josh Horwitz placed 11th and Seth Jones placed 19th.

Out of the 135 students participating in the K-3 division, Immaculata's K-3 team placed third. Students were Reid Motter, Taylor Jones, Alex Borg, Cassie Born, Clare Little, Cori Patrick, Brenden Balken, Patrick Tobacco, Korey Lovett and Phillip Katsadourous.

Individually, Phillip Katsadourous placed 9th and Reid Motter placed 13th.

Out of the 130 students participating in the K-8 division, Immaculata's K-8 team finished fifth. Students were Matt Horwitz, Britt McDanel, Rose Stroup, Vasili Katsadourous, Nicolas Araya, Owen Schoeff, Will Patrick and Nerissa Durvas. Matt Horwitz placed 11th and Britt McDanel placed 12th.

In a separate tournament that was part of the state championship, Matt Horwitz placed 3rd in the Blitz Chess Tournament.

At Last—What Many Catholics Have Been Waiting For... Are you missing out on this life-changing opportunity?

Dear Catholic Friend,

Yes, there is a life-changing opportunity awaiting you, and I'll tell you about it in just one minute. But first, please let me introduce myself...

My name is Tom Allen and I'm editor-in-chief and president of Catholic Exchange, the premier homepage for Catholics on the Internet. Among our major programs is Catholic Scripture Study (CSS), the world's fastest-growing Bible study program for Catholic parishes.

Already, many thousands of Catholics in the U.S. and around the world are deepening their spirituality, increasing their knowledge of our faith and growing closer to Christ through Catholic Scripture Study in their parishes.

Let me tell you more about Catholic Scripture Study and how it can enrich your faith, just as it has for so many other Catholics throughout the world...

Fascinating, thoroughly Catholic Bible studies

The Catholic Scripture Study program starts each year in September and runs through May. This fall, 2005, we will offer the following exciting studies, all written by CSS authors Dr. Scott Hahn and Mark Shea...

✓ The Book of Revelation. In this study, you'll learn why and how the book of Revelation is the key to understanding the Mass...how to enter into the Mass with a renewed heart and greater love and enthusiasm...Revelation's explanation of the queenship of Mary and intercession of the saints...

...Plus, there will be a special, eye-opening session on "The End Times," "The Rapture" and an absolutely devastating expose' of the "Left Behind" book series!

✓ The Book of Exodus—perhaps the Bible's most riveting book—in which you'll learn the real story of the ten plagues...the true meaning of the parting of the Red Sea...how the Passover prefigures the Eucharist and why that is so important for Catholics to understand, and much more.

✓ The Gospel of John, certainly one of the most beautifully written books of the Bible, authored by the "beloved" Apostle. You'll learn fascinating facts about the woman at the well, the marriage at Cana where Jesus performed His first miracle, why it's crucial that Catholics truly understand the miracle of the loaves and fishes, and why many of Christ's disciples left Him.

About the Authors of Catholic Scripture Study

Dr. Scott Hahn is Professor of Theology and Scripture at Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio. Scott earned his Ph.D. in Biblical Theology at Marquette University. He is also Founder and Chairman of the St. Paul Center for Biblical Theology.

Mark Shea is an internationally acclaimed writer and speaker. The author of Making Senses Out of Scripture, By What Authority and This Is My Body, Mark is a frequent guest on both Catholic and secular TV and radio programs.

"This Bible study program is rooted in sound Biblical scholarship and in the Church's magisterium. I hope you will welcome and support this important Bible study program in your parishes."

Most Rev. Peter Jugis
Bishop of Charlotte

Officially approved by the Catholic Church

CSS, which draws on the Catechism and writings of the early Church Fathers, is completely true to Catholic teaching and has the endorsement of the Most Reverend Peter J. Jugis, J.C.D., Bishop of Charlotte, NC.

Enthusiastic praise from Catholics enrolled in Catholic Scripture Study

"Finally, an in-depth CATHOLIC Bible Study! I love it!" Kathy Petley, Pennsylvania

"The CSS lectures bring me to a deeper realization of the meaning of our faith and Scripture itself." Ron Iwaskiewicz, Michigan

"I love the combination of Bible study and learning the Catholic faith. I have seen people completely change their view of the Church." Georgeann McGarry, Belgium

"I'm amazed at how much I learn each week. I'm growing in my understanding of the Catholic faith through the Bible. I'm very glad I'm doing this study." Sue Alston, Indiana

"It is not an overstatement to say that your program stands head and shoulders above all the rest. It was a unanimous decision to try CSS and we began with the Exodus study. We have found it to be excellent!" Mary Johnston, Missouri

"Our men's group loves the study. It feels like eating a Thanksgiving meal worth of knowledge every week."

Michael Osetinsky, Washington State

"I want to thank God and you for organizing this study. It is such an answer to prayer for so many."

Bonnie Cangelosi, Florida

An easy fit for your schedule

Each of your weekly Bible study meetings will last ninety minutes—90 fascinating minutes that will leave you eagerly looking forward to your next Bible study session!

ly looking forward to your next Bible study session!

Plus, CSS runs parallel with the average school year, taking the regular holiday breaks along with special feast days and holy days. This makes it easier still for you to benefit from these spiritually-enhancing Bible studies tailored especially for Catholics.

So much for so little

Catholic Scripture Study is very affordable! For less than the cost of a round of golf or an evening dining out, you can feed your soul and enrich your life.

The thirty-week course, including the study binder with all the lessons, is less than $2 per week, and if you enroll and pre-pay before June 1, there's a $5 discount. Study Leaders receive their study materials at no charge.

You'll have to agree that's a small price for a study program that's sure to give you a deeper understand of your Catholic faith and bring you closer to Christ!

A special message from Gail Buckley, Executive Director of Catholic Scripture Study

Dear Brothers & Sisters in Christ,

My name is Gail Buckley and I am a convert to the Catholic Church. I thank God every day for bringing me and my husband "home." I know that the Lord did this for our good but I truly believe with all of my heart that part of His plan was for your good too! Let me explain.

Twelve years ago I had a sudden, profound conversion of heart. One night, in anguish, I called out to God and He answered in an amazing way. Immediately I was completely transformed. I was truly a new person because I had been given a new heart.

I didn't know at that time what the Lord had in store for me, but I was so grateful for His mercy and His patience in having waited so long for me to come back to Him that I vowed that I was His willing servant, ready to do whatever He desired. I never really thought He would expect much from me since I didn't believe I had any special talent He could use. But as I later realized, God doesn't need anything from us but our willingness to serve Him. He provides all that is needed.

It soon became evident to me that God did have something particular in mind for me, but I didn't have any idea what it was. I prayed constantly asking Him to reveal this to me but unlike that initial life-changing prayer, this prayer seemed to fall on deaf ears.

It wasn't until a few years later that I realized what was happening. It's always in hindsight that we see what God has been doing in our lives, isn't it? I'm sure He knows we'd probably freak out if we knew beforehand what He has prepared for us. I think Moses would have run for the hills if He knew beforehand that God was going to send him into the wilderness to spend forty years listening to all those grumbling and complaining people, don't you?

God knows us and He knows how to prepare us. He leads us gently by the hand and before we know it, we're somewhere we never expected to be doing something we never dreamed we'd be able to accomplish. And you know what? He usually chooses the least likely people to accomplish things because then others will realize that it must be God doing this!

I have been working with Catholic Scripture Study since the inception of the Catholic Exchange website, where we initially posted the studies. During that time I've corresponded with thousands of people about Bible study.

I quickly learned that most people want to have a truly Catholic Bible study program in their parish but they want someone else to start it. Very few people feel qualified to start a group study program. This was very frustrating to me because I had a burning desire in my heart for my Catholic brothers and sisters to know the transforming power of God's Word which I felt could be best experienced in a group study setting.

I'd had that in my life and knew it to be true. I wanted others to have that same life-changing experience too.

Then I realized, I knew the answer. Even though I had long ago ceased asking, God finally responded to my plea to reveal His plan for me. It was crystal clear to me. God wanted me to bring to my Catholic brethren the same experience I had in Bible study as a Protestant.

So I made a proposal to Catholic Exchange to write and develop a Bible study program for group use in parishes using their wonderful studies written by Dr. Scott Hahn and Mark Shea. They enthusiastically agreed and gave me their full support. I got off the phone and said, "Oh Lord, what have I done? How am I going to do this?" But I knew, deep in my heart, that it was not me, but the Lord who was going to do it. And He has!

Catholic Scripture Study (CSS) was launched in 2003 with 60 groups around the U.S. participating. It wasn't long before God moved the program into other countries and we changed our name to Catholic Scripture Study International to reflect our new status. Now, in our second year, we have QUADRUPLED our membership and have groups in Israel, China, Belgium, Africa, the Philippines, New Zealand, Canada, Germany, Sweden, the United Kingdom, India and the United Arab Emirates! See what God has done!

And this is the purpose of this letter. I want everyone to know about Catholic Scripture Study. It is truly a life-changing Bible study. How can it not be with Scripture scholar Dr. Scott Hahn and award-winning writer Mark Shea as its authors? The weekly class format is also so enriching. The group dynamic is something that can't be beat. Coming together with other Catholics and studying God's Word is a true spiritual adventure.

God wasn't finished designing our wonderful program, though. As we know, God does things perfectly so He sent two of His best men, Father Patrick Winslow and Father Matthew Kauth to complete His gift (yes, I truly believe this Bible study program is a gift to His Church). These two priests are wonderful, young and super-talented speakers and they are doing the lectures for the Bible studies.

I hope you won't pass up this opportunity to enrich your life with a Bible study that gives you not only Scriptural knowledge, but also a deeper understanding of your own Catholic faith and how your faith is rooted in the Bible. And you'll not only learn and grow spiritually but you'll build friendships that will last a lifetime with people who will grow with you and support you in prayer.

Please take the time to review the rest of the information on this page and learn more about Catholic Scripture Study and how it can change your life, just as it has changed the lives of thousands of Catholics around the world!

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Gail Buckley

Bishop McGuinness sweeps Harvard Model Congress

KERNERSVILLE — A group of students from Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School in Kernersville was recently recognized with awards of excellence.

Twenty-five Bishop McGuinness students were among the 1,300 students who participated in the 20 annual Harvard Model Congress in Boston March 3-6. Facilitated by Harvard University students, the Harvard Model Congress is the largest government simulation in the country.

The Harvard Model Congress is designed to inspire high school students to participate in civic life by creating a dynamic environment where they can learn from one another and through their interactions with American democracy.

Currently, nearly 2,000 students participate each year in the Harvard Model Congress conferences in Boston and San Francisco.

At the Boston conference, Bishop McGuinness students were recognized with 15 awards of excellence, 20 percent of all the awards given and eight more than the next-recognized high school.

The Bishop McGuinness Supreme Court team of Rachel Anemone and P.J. Dascoli took top honors out of 28 teams. Student John Valitutto was recognized as "Best Delegate" in the Constitutional Convention while student Brendan Regan took top honors in the Historical Committee.

Award winners in the House and Senate include Matthew Balser, Nick Butler, Jordan Cain, Samantha Cibelli, Chris Coggin, Matt Maloney, Michael O'Shea, Matthew Pentz, Jennifer Spillane, Richard Valitutto and Lauren Watkins.

Michael Streich and alumnus Charlie McCurry coached the team. Other faculty advisors included Tara Porter and Carol London. The Supreme Court team was coached by Liz Arias, Joanne Waters and Stuart Brock of Womble Carlyle Sandridge & Rice.

Alumnus Patrick Nolan also joined the group during the event to help team members and give expert testimony in the House Armed Services Committee.

Other Bishop McGuinness delegates included Alexa Carda, Jordan Foley, Heather Hofmann, Jonathan Merlini, Neil Miller, Margaret Minton, P.J. Stanford, Matthew Sutter, Andy Ronan and Jennifer Williams.

Students also participated in a tour of Boston's Old North End and Old Sturbridge Village, traveled to the Harvard campus to sit in on classes and attended Mass.

Charlotte Catholic senior wins prestigious scholarship

CHARLOTTE — Samson Zebene Mesele, a senior at Charlotte Catholic High School, was among 43 high school students to win the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's most prestigious scholarship program.

Mesele was among 22 semifinalists from Mecklenburg County and 112 finalists from the nation for a 2005 Morehead scholarship, provided by the John Motley Morehead Foundation. The scholarship, among the largest and most competitive in the United States, pays all expenses for four years, including a laptop computer, and four summer enrichment experiences.

The winners, chosen from 1,362 students nominated by their high schools in October 2004, were announced by the Morehead Central Selection Committee March 11. The value for this award is about $80,000 for residents of North Carolina.

"This year's candidate group was the strongest and largest in the history of the Morehead Program, and the committees had to make a lot of difficult decisions," said Charles Lovelace, the foundation's executive director.

Mesele, who was born in Germany to Ethiopian parents, is the highest-ranked senior at the high school. He is also a National Achievement Scholar, a "commended" student in the National Merit Scholarship Program and was nominated by Principal Jerry Healy for this year's Principal Leadership Award, given to a senior through the National Association of Secondary School Principals.

Mesele was nominated for the Morehead scholarship by Charlotte Catholic's scholarship committee.

He also was nominated by Charlotte Catholic faculty to participate at this summer's African American Catholic Leadership Development Seminar at the University of Notre Dame. This scholarship-based seminar is for 40 students chosen from national and international nominations.

Mesele also was selected to represent Charlotte Catholic at this year's North Carolina Summer Ventures in Science and Mathematics at Appalachian State University.

Additionally, he plays on the school's championship soccer team; is an Eagle Scout; a black-belt competitor and instructor in Tae Kwon Do; vice president of his school's Executive Student Council, Beta Club and Spanish Honor Society; president of the National Conference for Community Justice; and a talented musician and actor.

"A common expression used by faculty in describing Samson's class work is that he is both academically gifted and the hardest-working student in class," said Sandy Needham, a guidance counselor who recommended Mesele for the scholarship.

"Samson is the quintessential well-rounded student," said Needham. "He is the complete package as a student, athlete, leader, volunteer and worker."

Students of Bishop McGuinness High School in Kernersville raise the roof of Winston-Salem's Reynolds Auditorium with their production of "Beauty and the Beast" March 9-12.

BMHS marks landmark show with 'Beauty and the Beast'

KERNERSVILLE — Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School scored one of its biggest musical and drama production successes with Disney's "Beauty and the Beast," presented in Winston-Salem's Reynolds Auditorium March 9-12.

The participation of more than 91 students — including cast, orchestra and technical crew — marked this ambitious project undertaken by the school's drama program.

"This production has elevated the standard and level of our entire program," said Sister Ann Thomas Taylor, dean of students and one of the show's producers.

"We put up a show that is not typical for a high school," she said. "Our students and all of the parent volunteers put their hearts into this project, dedicated their time and energy and considerable talent to make it a great success."

After acquiring the rights to the show in September, the students began a well-orchestrated 10-week journey of set construction, costume creation and design. Additionally, Micki Sharpe, a Philadelphia-based actress with performance experience in Philadelphia and New York, directed the production. She spent 10 weeks in North Carolina overseeing the project as well as directing the performers' intensive singing and dancing rehearsals.

"I am immensely proud of everyone — students, parents and colleagues — who helped to make such a successful production," said Dr. Alan Hirsh, head of the school's music program.

"The sheer amount of music in 'Beauty and the Beast' exceeds that of other shows we've done in the past," he said. "But the orchestra faced this challenge head on and the result was amazing. I was truly inspired by our students' hard work, time and energy."

The role of Belle went to senior Alona Metcalf. It was her ninth and final performance at Bishop McGuinness. Junior J.C. Bobbitt made his fourth appearance in a school production in the role of the Beast.

"This was the finest production in the school's history, a real showcase for the extraordinary talents of our students with interest in the performing arts," said Principal George Repass.

"Our quest for excellence in this area has been one of our highest priorities in recent years, and the exceptional product yielded by this project is real proof of the success of that effort," he said. "We are all extremely proud."

IHM social studies project entered into U.S. Library of Congress

HIGH POINT — A project undertaken by students at Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point will be a part of the U.S. Library of Congress.

In 2003, teacher Sharon Kalbaugh had students interview U.S. military veterans — their family, friends and neighbors — as part of a social studies project.

The interviews included video, audio and written accounts from the students' subjects. The interviewees signed release forms, allowing Kalbaugh to send the project to the U.S. Library of Congress' Veterans History Project.

The accounts are being processed and will soon be a permanent part of the U.S. Library of Congress.

According to its Web site, the Veterans History Project is designed to preserve the extraordinary first-hand wartime stories of ordinary people. It features veterans from World Wars I and II, the Korean War, Vietnam War, Persian Gulf, and Afghanistan and Iraq conflicts.

IHM eighth-grader competes in state contest

HIGH POINT — Jackson Sams, an eighth-grader at Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point, qualified to compete in the National Geographic Bee's state competition in Raleigh April 1.

Winner of the school's Bee several weeks prior, Jackson then took the written test to qualify to compete at the state level. State winners then go to the national Bee in Washington, D.C. for a chance to win a $25,000 college scholarship from National Geographic.

Jackson is the second student of teacher Sharon Kalbaugh in four years to have advanced to the state level.

Student artwork exhibited in gallery

HIGH POINT — The artwork of 10 students at Immaculate Heart of Mary School was selected to be on display at the Theatre Art Galleries in High Point in April.

The exhibit, located in the Kaleidoscope Youth Gallery, was part of the gallery's 29th Annual Student Show, which is themed "What Lies Beneath: Symbolism."

The school's art teacher, Ann Jones, entered the students' pieces into the show.

Eighth-grader Emily Sickelbaugh won third-place honors for her butterfly mask. Other students who had items on display were sixth-grader Rebecca Goldston; seventh-graders Jennifer Lindh, Gabrielle Amundson, Josh Rathburn, Anna Tillery, Kiersten Anderson and Connor Gehling; and eighth-graders Christa Dolan and Elizabeth Sheffield.

Matthew-Morgan classroom receives continued support

CHARLOTTE — The Foundation for the Education of Children with Down Syndrome has made a $10,000 donation toward the Matthew-Morgan Pilot Classroom at St. Patrick School in Charlotte.

The program, originally funded by the foundation, was established at St. Patrick School in 2002 for students with Down syndrome, a congenital condition characterized by moderate to severe mental retardation and other symptoms.

The program teaches students basic academic curriculum as well as life skills based on their levels of ability. Students join the St. Patrick School students in the lunchroom, on the playground, at Mass and in some classes.

"The Board of Directors of the Foundation ... are extremely pleased with the program and the effect that it has had on the students with Down syndrome, as well as the other students in the school," said J. Riley Grier, president of the foundation, in a January letter to Linda Cherry, superintendent of Catholic schools.

Grier expressed his gratitude to Principal Angela Montague for "her work in making this classroom such an integral part of her school."

"Including these kids in the day-to-day activities helps make them feel part of the school and creates an environment of acceptance for these children," said Grier.

"Catholic education should be for all children, incorporating all types of students into mainstream society," said Montague in a 2003 interview with The Catholic News & Herald.

"They are part of our community, and we would be lost without them," she said.

Catholic group ends eBay boycott after auction site changes policy

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Catholic groups called off their boycott of eBay once they received word from the Internet auction site May 1 that the site would no longer allow consecrated hosts or other sacred objects to be sold.

"We're glad that the concerted efforts of so many individuals and groups, including the league, have led to this positive change in eBay's policies," said Phil Horgan, president of the Catholic Civil Rights League in Ottawa.

Catholics had been urged to boycott the site after it allowed an Iowa man to try to sell shortly after Pope John Paul II's death a Communion host reportedly consecrated by him.

The host was later withdrawn by the seller, no money exchanged hands and the host was properly disposed of according to church law. But groups urging the boycott insisted that eBay should never have allowed the auction of an item that is sacred to Catholics.

A Web site devoted to the initial boycott, www.boycottebay.org, was updated May 3 telling Catholics the boycott was over. The updated site credited eBay for changing its policies and officially stating "that, under its existing policies, sales of the Eucharist, as well as other unspecified holy objects of Catholics and other religious faiths, will not be permitted."

The Web site also posted a letter from eBay's community watch team sent May 1 to those who protested the auction of the consecrated host.

The letter stated that the auction site strives to "respect the diverse perspectives of our sellers" and has policies in place to remove listings for illegal items as well as highly offensive listings that promote hate or intolerance.

"We understand that the listing of the Eucharist was highly upsetting to Catholic members of the eBay community and Catholics globally," the letter said.

It added that once the auction item came to the attention of eBay officials they sought advice from Catholics and members of other religions about items that "might also be highly sacred and inappropriate for sale."

"As a result of this dialogue," the letter continued, "we have concluded that sales of the Eucharist and similar highly sacred items are not appropriate on eBay. We have, therefore, broadened our policies and will remove those types of listings should they appear on the site in the future."

The letter encouraged people to notify eBay of violations to the updated policy or to directly communicate with the seller of an item if they find its sale offensive.

The Catholic Civil Rights League also urged its members to make sure eBay sticks to its new policy.

"Because most of the posting processes are automated, we join eBay in encouraging all users to be vigilant about enforcing it," the group said.

Volkswagen said to have been owned by Pope Benedict XVI sold on eBay

BERLIN (CNS) — A Canadian-based online casino, known for making some unusual and expensive purchases of religious-themed items, can now add to its list of acquisitions a 1999 Volkswagen Golf said to have been once owned by Pope Benedict XVI.

The Golden Palace Casino, based in Kahnawake, Quebec, placed the winning bid for the gray hatchback May 6 on eBay for 188,938 euros, the equivalent of US$244,800.

According to a report by the British news agency, Reuters, the seller of the car was a 21-year-old German man, Benjamin Halbe of Olpe. He purchased the car locally for the equivalent of about US$13,000 in January.

The news story said that at the time he did not realize it belonged to then-Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger until he later looked at the car's registration documents.

In his listing on the eBay site, Halbe included a photo of the car's registration that showed the automobile was registered to Joseph Ratzinger in 1999, although it is not clear if the current pope even has a driver's license. The Associated Press reported May 6 that it could not be verified if the vehicle had at one time belonged to the pope.

The car was to be picked up by the winning bidder, but some German newspapers reported that Halbe did not want to release the car to the online casino. He cited problems with the final stage of bidding; some people claimed they were not able to put in their bids on the eBay site.

But Richard Rowe, CEO of the Golden Palace, said he is the proud owner of the vehicle. In a statement on the casino's Web site, he said he was "delighted to own this holy vehicle."

"We have amassed a collection of what many consider to be holy artifacts," he said, adding that it "seems only natural to get a blessed vehicle to carry these items. We are planning to showcase our acquisitions by bringing them on tour and allowing people to enjoy the experience of sitting in the divine car, in an effort to raise as much money for charity as possible."

Other items the Golden Palace Casino has purchased online include: a grilled cheese sandwich that supposedly bears the image of Mary, for $28,000; a tortilla chip resembling a pope's miter, for $1,029; and a charred image of Christ on a frying pan, for about $80.

God found in unexpected places, moments

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

The parking lot fills to capacity. Families tumble out of SUVs with seemingly enough paraphernalia to sustain themselves for days. Across the fields, the sounds of children's laughter and the chaos of joyful screams fill the air.

Then the unmistakable crack of a baseball bat colliding with a well-thrown ball ignites a crowd somewhere in the distance. In an adjacent field a man shouts, "Baseball ready!" to a team of grade-school boys.

My husband and I are devoted fans. "Baseball ready!" has become our Saturday mantra. One of the players is our grandson; our son is the head coach. Veterans of freezing drizzle and the relentless Texas sun, the coaches spend hours of their precious time teaching the boys not only the fundamentals of baseball, but the rules of life as well.

Besides the coach-player relationship, the fan-team relationship has become extraordinary over the years. We are a truly diverse group with a common goal to love and support the boys and their coaches.

Friendships have emerged among us. A baby has celebrated her first birthday. A dad served in Iraq and returned. All the while we try our best to teach by example how to behave in the euphoria of winning and in the cold silence of defeat.

On a baseball Saturday this past April, only one word would describe the weather: "glorious." Balmy 70s, blue sky, whipped-cream clouds, a light breeze and the familiar cry, "Baseball ready!"

Throughout the bleachers, "It's the perfect day for baseball!" is part of everyone's conversation. Soon we'll swelter in summer's blazing heat, but today — today, thank you, Lord. Today is just right!

In this Trinity Sunday's readings we hear about the courageous encounter between God and Moses on Sinai, the assurance from Jesus in John's Gospel that he is the Son of God and St. Paul's Trinitarian blessing of the church at Corinth at the close of his second letter. Our readings span thousands of years, but the message is clear: God loves us and wishes all of us to live in the peace that is Shalom.

Our vocabularies always will pale in trying to describe the attributes of God, but we may catch glimpses of God in the most unexpected places.

Question:

Describe a time when you felt the omnipresence of God's love.

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"For God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved through him" (John 3:17).

Orlando Bloom stars in a scene from the movie "Kingdom of Heaven."

'Kingdom of Heaven' is bloody but engaging film

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

"Kingdom of Heaven" is a sweeping, if bloody and somewhat revisionist, historical drama set in the time of the Crusades about a disillusioned blacksmith (Orlando Bloom) elevated to knighthood who journeys to Jerusalem in search of redemption and becomes embroiled in the power struggle between the tolerance-advocating Latin king and a war-mongering would-be usurper, who threatens to disrupt the tenuous truce between the Christian and Muslim forces.

Spectacularly directed by Ridley Scott and full of grand-scale battle scenes and period detail, the epic film takes license with the facts, but overall portrays both sides as a mix of vice and virtue (though in its skewed telling of the events Christians come off as the prime villains) and imparts a timely message of peaceful coexistence, as well as a strong condemnation of violence, ideological hatred and war.

Recurring intense battlefield violence and associated gore, including decapitations, hacked limbs and flaming bodies, as well as a brief adulterous sexual encounter.

The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is L — limited adult audience, films whose problematic content many adults would find troubling. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Singer-songwriter is anything but an 'average' college student

Song about Terri Schiavo to be performed for Schindler family

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Her life is just like any other college student's.

Except for the press conference in Washington in April. And the appearance in Kansas City, Mo., in May. And the concert at World Youth Day in Cologne, Germany, coming up this summer.

"I lead a pretty average life," said singer-songwriter Kara Klein, who was wrapping up her freshman year as a philosophy and voice major at The Catholic University of America in Washington.

"I've traveled more than I'd like to this year," she added. "I've had so many blessings, but I've learned that with blessings there are also sacrifices."

One of Klein's blessings is a close family in Mandeville, La., where she belongs to Mary Queen of Peace Church. Another is a beautiful voice that first led her to a part in a local community theater production of "Babes in Toyland" at age 8, followed by "many more musicals" and more choirs than she can count.

But the 19-year-old is not just another pretty voice. She writes her own songs, including the 10 on her first CD, "A Touch of Your Grace."

She's also written "tons and tons of songs" for a second CD but has not been able to find the time to record them.

Her latest recording, "Still Beautiful — Terri's Song," is dedicated to Terri Schindler Schiavo, the severely brain-damaged Florida woman who died this spring, 13 days after her nutrition and hydration were withdrawn with a court order obtained by her husband and fought by her parents.

"Do you think I'm beautiful now?" the song asks. "Even when you're carrying me because I am too weak to walk./And I have lost control of everything somehow./Do you think I'm beautiful now?"

Klein sang that song in late April at a reception for members of Congress and for women from all over the country who had come to Washington for the "Real Women's Voices" lobbying event. She will sing it for members of the Schindler family in June at the National Right to Life Committee convention in Minneapolis.

"That's going to be really difficult," Klein said of her appearance before the Schindlers. "But I'll be completely depending on God's grace. I'm always very dependent on him."

Klein said she was not thinking of Terri Schiavo when the words to "Beautiful Still" first came to her.

"Sometimes I don't understand why I write them," she said. "I was in a place where I was struggling, feeling very broken, something we all feel." Those feelings made her think of asking God, "Do you still see me as beautiful?"

But when her mother first heard the song, she immediately said, "That's Terri's song," Klein recalled.

It was from her mother, too, that Klein got her strong pro-life views. The singer is dedicating $1 from the sale of each "A Touch of Your Grace" CD to the Susan B. Anthony List, which helps fund the legislative and congressional campaigns of pro-life women candidates.

Profits from "Beautiful Still" are going to the Terri Schindler Schiavo Foundation, which works to protect people disabled like Schiavo from euthanasia.

Although she had always been pro-life, Klein said her "eyes were opened to the culture of death" when she had an opportunity to attend a special session of the United Nations on children's rights in New York in 2002, during her sophomore year at St. Scholastica Academy in Covington, La.

The session's draft document, "A World Fit for Children," called for allowing abortions for girls as young as 9 without parental consent, rewarding teens for condom use and establishing five genders — homosexual male, heterosexual male, homosexual female, heterosexual female and transgender — instead of the usual male and female.

Those provisions were removed from the document before its final passage, she said.

Klein and her friends who attended the session "could not help but wonder how world leaders could hope to help the young women of the world by indoctrinating them into a mentality of violence and death," she said.

"It's frightening to consider where our world will be in the near future if we do not put a stop to this culture of violence and death," she added.

After some scheduled appearances this spring and summer and a trip to Germany for World Youth Day, Klein is not sure what life will bring.

She has decided to take a year off from school to record her second CD. She is considering continuing her education with distance-learning classes.

And then? "I'll be speaking and singing," she said, "and seeing where that leads."

Firefighter's words: miraculous?

were completely surprised. They included Msgr. William Gallagher, a priest in the Buffalo Diocese who ministers at the Father Baker Manor nursing home in Orchard Park, where Herbert has been a patient for nearly a decade.

In 1995, Herbert suffered a head injury and was deprived of oxygen for six minutes after a burning apartment building's roof collapsed on him. He remained in a coma for two and a half months.

In 1996, he regained consciousness but had speech and vision problems and could not eat or walk without help.

Msgr. Gallagher says Mass once a month at the nursing home. He was at the facility April 29 and saw Herbert, who is Catholic, at the Mass the priest celebrated in the nursing home's chapel.

Herbert did not receive the Eucharist, but the priest gave him a blessing.

The next day, Herbert, who had not communicated for nearly 10 years and had been described by doctors as "minimally conscious," startled everyone by talking for about 16 hours.

The priest heard about it from parishioners who volunteer at the nursing home. Later that day, word spread to the fire department where Herbert had previously worked and then to local and national media.

"Everyone was shocked," said Msgr. Gallagher May 6, noting that most people did not have much hope for Herbert's recovery. "Maybe it's a miracle with a little 'm,' but it's definitely miraculous."

He said he felt more confident in speaking about the possibility of something miraculous happening after hearing some of the doctors discuss Herbert's condition in a May 4 press conference.

One doctor described Herbert's sudden burst of talking April 30 as rare, but something that medical science knows can occur. Another said it was a combination of the medications Herbert was taking and God's will.

A third doctor called it a miracle.

Since the sudden burst of conversation, during which Herbert caught up on events with his wife and four sons, the 44-year-old has not been as animated, but doctors continued to monitor him closely and people in Buffalo were praying for his full recovery.

Immediately after Herbert's day of talking, some speculated that his recovery could be linked to the intercession of Msgr. Nelson Baker, for whom the nursing home is named and a candidate for sainthood. Msgr. Baker, most often referred to as Father Baker, started and expanded many programs to help children, the poor and the sick in the Buffalo area.

Msgr. Robert Wurtz, pastor of Our Lady of Victory Church in Lackawanna, and promoter of Msgr. Baker's sainthood cause, is approaching the case with caution.

The priest told The Buffalo News that Herbert's dramatic improvement is "the kind of thing we're looking for" to move the cause forward, but he also added that proof is needed that the recovery was "solely through divine intervention on Father Baker's part."

Msgr. Wurtz said he was eager to talk to the firefighter's family. He also stressed that criteria are strict for a miracle to be attributed to someone's intercession.

There have been unconfirmed reports that Herbert had at least one photo of Father Baker or artifact of the priest in his room. Msgr. Gallagher said pictures of Father Baker are everywhere in the nursing home.

The priest noted that his parishioners, many of whom have "wheeled Donnie to Mass" at the nursing home, were thrilled with his day of talking and were praying for more signs of his recovery. They also hope Father Baker had something to do with it.

"The people of Buffalo are looking for a saint," Msgr. Gallagher said.

Giving thanks through prayer

Over the course of the last month, as Pope John Paul II died and was buried, as the cardinal electors gathered to choose a successor and as Pope Benedict XVI was introduced to the world, Catholics have been called upon to offer special prayers.

As I traveled around the Diocese of Charlotte after the selection of Pope Benedict, many news reporters have asked me the same question: "Why are you gathering to pray? After all, the pope has been elected; what is done is done."

It is a good question. This special prayer journey for the Catholic Church actually began on April 2 when our beloved Holy Father, John Paul, a true servant of God until the very end, passed from this life. There was an emptiness in the days after John Paul's death. The visible center of our unity, the father of the family of the Church, had been taken away from us.

We gathered in large numbers to pray for the repose of John Paul's soul. The world watched in awe as millions of pilgrims flocked to Rome to pay a final tribute to this humble and holy man.

Then we gathered as a diocesan family to pray for the cardinal electors as they met to choose a successor to St. Peter. Our hearts yearned for a new shepherd. As I was preparing to celebrate a Mass at the Cathedral of St. Patrick in Charlotte on the second day of the conclave, I learned that the Holy Spirit's guidance to the electors had come quickly. We had a new pope!

The news was met with a spontaneous outbreak of applause in the cathedral. The same joy was evident on the faces of the thousands who gathered in St. Peter's Square to greet Benedict XVI.

And finally, in the days after the selection of Pope Benedict we gathered to give thanks at special diocesan Masses in Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Asheville. Whenever we ask for a gift from God, we always return to give thanks.

We pray also for the new pope, so that he may have the strength to carry on the responsibilities as the vicar of Christ on Earth. We pray for his health and we pray that God will grant him wisdom as he guides the flock of 1.1 billion Catholics all over the world.

I was struck by the words of the Holy Father as he delivered his homily at the Mass of investiture. With the eyes of the world on him as the symbols of the office of pope were conferred, he asked us to pray for him, not once, but three times.

He said, "Pray for me so that I will learn to love the Lord more and more. Pray for me so that I will learn to love the flock more and more." And finally he said, "Pray for me, that I may not flee for fear of the wolves."

Our new Holy Father is fully aware of the evil and the dangers that lurk in our world. He describes those dangers as deserts:

"There is the desert of poverty, the desert of hunger and thirst, the desert of abandonment, of loneliness, of destroyed love. There is the desert of God's darkness, the emptiness of souls no longer aware of their dignity or the goal of human life. The external deserts in the world are growing, because the internal deserts have become so vast."

It is wonderful to know that Pope Benedict XVI began his ministry as our shepherd by reminding us that prayer can turn those evil deserts into an oasis of God's love.

And so we have prayed in sadness, in hope and in thanks. Now let us pray in joy for our new pope, Benedict XVI, who describes himself as, "a simple, humble worker in the Lord's vineyard."

Let us go forward with him, confident in the risen Lord's help.

Focusing on agendas in the church

Emotions were mixed when Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger was elected pope. Some rejoiced, while others did not.

The enchanted see him as a seasoned churchman needed to restore order in a church that is out of order. They believe he will come down hard on the opposition.

The disenchanted feel he will foster a church that is out of touch. They fear most that he will be true to labels some have given him such as "The Enforcer" and will lack compassion.

Conservatives and liberals definitely have opposing agendas. I often wonder if they consider ways that a pope's pressing concerns may take priority over theirs.

Europe, once predominantly Catholic, has become very secular. Not only this, its birthrates are falling, and suddenly the continent is growing fearful that it could end up predominantly Muslim.

Pope Benedict XVI faces the challenge of reaching the youth of Europe who are the promise of its future Catholicity, while at the same time seeking friendship, understanding and cooperation with Muslims. This presents a dilemma: How do you energetically evangelize Europe while at the same time embracing Muslims?

The new pope's agenda must extend to Africa where millions are dying of AIDS and where government corruption is the scourge of the land. His agenda must extend also to Latin America, which is losing its Catholicity.

Terrorism and the threat of a nuclear holocaust also must assume important places on Pope Benedict's

The Human Side

FATHER
EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

agenda. Popes and saints in the past have been able to secure peace. But how can a contemporary pope do this in an age when war has taken on totally new forms and become demonic?

Catholic tradition always aims to communicate God's wisdom. But how does a pope apply this wisdom in ways that motivate nations to preserve the world's resources for generations to come? What wisdom is needed to move our age of surging scientific discovery beyond "playing God" to revealing God's majesty?

These priorities — global priorities — call for Pope Benedict's attention. But are they his priorities alone or are they ours also? There is great focus right now on the new pope's agenda. But I believe this also is a time for all Catholics to focus on what their agenda is for the church.

No doubt a more horizontal and less vertical church in which people have more to say needs to be addressed. But before this happens, both the right and the left in the church need to examine their consciences.

I urge them to meditate on the open arms of Christ on the cross as the perfect expression of worship precisely because they express complete devotion to us; because they are a gesture of embrace, of full and undivided brotherliness and sisterliness.

Christ is all "for" us. This gives us a first principle of Christianity. If we are to be truly church, we must be like him — our agendas must be based on this first principle of Christianity, this embrace, this being "for" each other as true brothers and sisters.

Waiting for the next 'Star Wars'

Epic story has lasting message

I have been a "Star Wars" fan since I was tiny, memorizing every line from all three of the first three movies.

"Return of the Jedi" was my favorite as a child because I loved it when Luke finally got all of his powers. He could flip, throw things with his mind and wield a pretty good lightsaber. Cool. I thought, "It all ended up perfect."

As I grew older, "The Empire Strikes Back" became my favorite. It rose to the top of the Star Wars Trilogy because it didn't have a happy ending. I enjoyed the reality of it — that the good don't always win.

My mom says I cried at the end because it didn't end perfectly. Now I wonder how it would feel if I saw it for the first time without knowing the outcome of "Jedi," knowing that good did finally come back to conquer evil.

I think knowing that it all worked out well, with the emperor being tossed by a protective father (Darth Vader) into the heart of the new Death Star, afforded me the opportunity to love "Empire."

I think if I could see "Empire" again without knowing the outcome of the entire series, I would feel angered, even scared that things might not work out for the good guys, that the evil emperor would control the fate of all in the universe.

Knowing that this isn't the case, however, I can love "Empire." I can relish its bitter ending, knowing that some day that protective father would save the son's life.

I remember asking my parents after Darth said, "I am your father," if it was true. They told me that they didn't know.

"It can't be true," I told them. Darth is too bad to be Luke's father.

When young, that truth was too much for me to handle. Too many questions for a small mind to comprehend.

We are afforded the same opportunity to enjoy our lives even though they aren't perfect. We are given the gift to look at the bad things that happen to us and say, "I learned something from that."

We, luckily, can take the good out of the bad and move on with our lives, and even enjoy the good more because of the bad — because of what we've learned and risen above.

We can do all of this because we already know the end of the story. Our protective Father will be there for us in the end, and it will all be good when we leave this part of the series.

The only difference is that our protective Father always has been there, is there now and will be there for us, promising us a happy ending.

Studies show harmful effects after abortion

I was both pleased and disappointed with the guest column by Maureen Bailey of the U.S. bishops' Pro-Life Secretariat ("Shrouded in secrecy," April 29). I'm pleased any time someone attempts to address the fact that abortion harms women, and pleased any time that Rachel's Vineyard, a program offered in our diocese, is mentioned as a resource for healing.

But I'm disappointed at Bailey's comment that "no large scientific study has been undertaken" regarding the psychological impact of abortion. That's incorrect.

Numerous studies in prestigious medical journals have highlighted both the physical and psychological harms of abortions. For example, a large study using public health data from Finland showed a 650 percent increase in suicide deaths in women during the first year after their abortion, compared to women who gave birth.

A similar study by Dr. David Reardon was undertaken using California Medicaid records for 173,279 women who had state-funded abortions or deliveries. Again, a large increase in the suicide rate was found in the women who aborted compared to those who delivered. The increased suicide rate persisted for the eight years of the study.

That is, among post-abortive women, even eight years after their abortions, this group continued to have a higher suicide rate, indicating that the effects of abortion appear to be relatively enduring over time.

These studies are just the tip of the iceberg, as many women don't actually kill themselves, but do have psychiatric illnesses related to the abortion; for example, they experience a rate of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) that is similar to that experienced by people living in combat zones.

Guest Column

GUEST COLUMNIST

Besides PTSD, there are panic episodes, depression, anxiety disorders and a large increase in a substance abuse as a coping mechanism.

Sadly, many post-abortive women abuse alcohol and other drugs even during subsequent pregnancies, only one of several ways that the effects of abortion are carried into the next generation. Research also shows that there is an increase in domestic violence in post-abortive families and emotional and behavioral problems in the children.

There are also numerous physical effects of the abortion itself. More than 30 studies worldwide have shown a link between abortion and breast cancer.

Also, increased breast cancer has been observed in experiments done with rodents who were given surgical abortions.

The abortion/breast cancer link was mentioned in a highly regarded surgical textbook more than a decade ago, and the mechanism is so well understood that there shouldn't be any controversy about this issue. However, many physicians are ideologically committed to the myth that abortion has to be safe because women "need" it.

Additionally, physicians who have performed abortions or referred patients for abortions are at risk financially through breast cancer lawsuits as this link becomes established. More information can be found at www.abortionbreastcancer.com.

Most of the physical effects of abortion are less controversial than the breast cancer issue. The book, "Detrimental Effects of Abortion: An Annotated Bibliography with Commentary (3rd Edition)," edited by Thomas Strahan, lists 1,200 studies, each referenced with a short summary.

These studies include both harmful medical and psychological effects of abortion. More information and books can be found at www.afterabortion.org. The Web site is a rich source of current research and explanations of the research in easily understandable terms.

Pope says God rises above chaos as 'supreme judge' of world

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — The world is not in the hands of dark forces, chance or human folly — God rises above the chaos as "supreme judge" of what happens in the world, Pope Benedict XVI said in his weekly general audience.

"God is not indifferent to human events, but he penetrates through them, instilling his 'ways,' that is, his projects and his operative works" to guide history "to the dawn of the new heaven and the new earth," he said in his May 11 catechesis.

From the steps in front of St. Peter's Basilica, the pope continued a series of reflections on the psalms and canticles that his predecessor, Pope John Paul II, had begun before his death.

Focusing on Chapter 15 of the Book of Revelation, Pope Benedict said that in this canticle "God invites 'all the people on earth as well as every one of us to conversion.'"

The world's "nations must learn to 'read' God's message in history" and to realize that "humanity's adventure is not obscure and meaningless," he said.

The pope said that by comprehending the immense power of God working within human history the faithful "open themselves up to fear of the Lord's name."

"Fear," in biblical terms, the pope said, does not mean dread or fright, but rather signals "the recognition of the mystery of divine transcendence."

"The Lord, your God, asks of you to fear him and love him with all your heart and soul," he said.

The fear or awe of God renders the faithful unafraid of "the evil that rages throughout history" and allows one to "vigorously resume the road of life," he said.

As he did in his last general audience, the pope departed from his written text to further explain this point to the 17,000 pilgrims gathered in St. Peter's Square.

"It's thanks to this fear of God that we are not frightened of the world and all its problems; we are not afraid of men because God is more powerful," he said.

"Be strong and fear not," the pope said, because by understanding God's glory, feeble hands will be strengthened and weak knees will be made firm.

After greeting pilgrims in seven different languages and leading the singing of the Lord's Prayer in Latin, the pope devoted more than 30 minutes to meeting with sick and handicapped children and adults, newlyweds and other audience members.

Ashes of the deceased

Q. In the eyes of the Catholic Church, is it permissible to keep ashes of the deceased in the house? One priest says it is all right, but others have said it is not. (New Jersey)

A. Two documents, "The Order of Christian Funerals" and "Reflections on the Body, Cremation and Catholic Funeral Rites" published by the U.S. bishops in 1997 explain the care we should have for the bodies of our dead. Both stress a preference for burial or entombment of the deceased, even after cremation.

The latter document expresses it very clearly: "The remains of cremated bodies should be treated with the same respect given to the corporal remains of a human body."

"This includes the manner in which they are carried, the care and attention to appropriate placement and transport, and their final disposition. The cremated remains of a body should be entombed in a mausoleum or columbarium (a burial place reserved for ashes after cremation); they may also be buried in a common grave in a cemetery."

The practice of scattering remains on the sea or on the ground, it continues, or keeping cremated remains in the home of a relative or friend, are not proper.

The same applies to the extraordinary practice of dividing the cremated remains so they may be placed in brooches, or necklaces, or other jewelry. This, too, overlooks some important truths about our care for loved ones who die.

Anthropologists often note that one way we learn the quality of a culture's civilization is how they treat their dead. We need to be sure that how we respect

WINSTON-SALEM — There's no hiding the students' creativity as they work on making masks at St. Leo the Great School in Winston-Salem.

Creating the masks has been a special project for the eighth-grade art class, and the students are hardly without in-

The holes in the corrugated tin roof of the village church were caused by gunships and shrapnel, he said. Some damage was caused by soldiers, who shot through the roofs, he added.

John Foppe, who was born without arms, signs a book with his foot as his wife, Christine Fulbright-Foppe, looks on following a speech at Denver's Hyatt Regency Tech Center April 29. More than 500 people turned out to hear Foppe's message of faith, hope and love in overcoming his disabilities.

Speaker born without arms talks about challenges he has overcome

DENVER (CNS) — Born without arms, John Foppe knows a lot about challenges — and about transcending them.

More than 500 people turned out at an April 29 luncheon to hear his message of faith, hope and love as he described how he overcame his disabilities to find personal fulfillment and professional success as a motivational speaker.

The 35-year-old Foppe, who uses his feet as his hands, calls his physical disability a "condition."

"A condition is basically anything that can get in your way of living a full, happy and productive life," Foppe said. "It's never about the condition itself. It's always about our response to it."

Foppe drives without any special equipment — he uses his feet but the vehicle must have automatic transmission and power steering. He has lived alone, has skied, has snorkled and has earned a master's degree.

He also has written a book, "What's Your Excuse? Making the Most of What You Have," now required reading for all freshmen at St. Louis University. Foppe earned his bachelor's degree and master's degree at the Jesuit-run university.

"Our only real handicaps in life are the mental and emotional ones that prevent us from participating in life — pity, anger, fear, guilt, doubt, prejudice, ignorance," Foppe said. "Those are the real cripples in life, those thoughts we have that blind us to the possibilities in life."

He said that despite being raised in a loving Catholic family of eight boys and being educated in the local Catholic school he had developed a "victim mentality" by the time he was 10.

But his mother ended that with "tough love." She forbade his siblings from helping him with daily tasks. The first morning that Foppe had to dress himself became a turning point.

He embarked on a journey to discover what he really can and cannot do that continues to this day, Foppe said. He credits his family's sacrificial love and the acceptance and encouragement he received at his Catholic grade school with helping him along that path.

After becoming a successful speaker several years ago, Foppe achieved something else that as a child he believed was impossible. He fell in love and married.

Today, Foppe is grateful for — even proud of — his condition.

"There was a time in my life when the condition had me," he said. "But no longer. I have a condition. What's yours?"

Poll finds majority of Americans oppose embryonic stem-cell research

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A majority of Americans oppose federal funding of stem-cell research involving the destruction of human embryos, according to a new poll commissioned by the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

For the government to promote the destruction of human life "when a clear majority of the taxpayers ... reject this approach would be especially irresponsible," said Richard Doerflinger, deputy director of the secretariat.

The poll was released May 16 as the U.S. House of Representatives was considering legislation that would allow federal funding of stem-cell research using embryos created but not used for in vitro fertilization. A vote was expected on the legislation before the summer recess.

In the survey conducted by International Communications Research, 1,010 Americans were told that "Congress is considering the question of federal funding for experiments using stem cells from human embryos" and that embryos "would be destroyed in their first week of development to obtain these cells."

Asked whether they "support or oppose using your federal tax dollars for such experiments," 36 percent were in support, 52 percent were opposed, 10 percent didn't know and 2 percent refused to answer.

Next, respondents were told stem cells "can also be obtained from adults, from placentas left over from live births, and in other ways that do no harm to the donor" and that "scientists disagree on which source may end up being most successful in treating diseases."

Twenty-two percent said they supported "all methods, including those that require destroying human embryos, to see which will be most successful," while 60 percent said they favored "research using adult stem cells and other alternatives to see if there is no need to destroy human embryos for research."

Israeli official says pope plans to visit synagogue in Germany

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Israel's ambassador to the Vatican said Pope Benedict XVI told him he would visit a historic synagogue in Cologne, Germany, in August.

Ambassador Oded Ben-Hur told an Israeli newspaper the pope made the promise May 12 at the end of an audience with diplomats accredited to the Holy See. The Vatican press office had no comment on the ambassador's remarks.

Officials involved with planning Pope Benedict's August trip to Cologne for World Youth Day said May 16 they were still working with the Aug. 18-21 dates for the papal trip set when Pope John Paul II was still alive.

As of mid-May, they said, the only definite events on Pope Benedict's schedule in Germany involved World Youth Day, although the papal itinerary was still open to change.

If Pope Benedict does go to the Co-logne synagogue, it would be only the second time in modern history that a pope visited a synagogue. Pope John Paul went to the Rome synagogue in 1986.

Pope honors 'heroic' German priest for saving Jews during WWII

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI praised the "heroic dedication" of a German-born priest who, during World War II, persuaded Nazi officials to spare the lives of Jews and political dissidents imprisoned in Rome.

Salvatorian Father Pancrazio Pfeiffer was general superior of the Society of the Divine Savior in Rome during the nine months Italy was occupied by German troops.

He became known as "the pope's messenger" as he took advantage of his German origins to gather information and mediate on behalf of Pope Pius XII with German authorities to get immunity for religious institutes in Rome and win clemency for Jewish and political prisoners.

Because Father Pfeiffer developed numerous personal contacts with some members of the German forces, he was able to save the lives of hundreds of prisoners.

On the occasion of the 60th anniversary of Father Pfeiffer's death May 12, the Vatican's secretary of state, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, sent a telegram on behalf of Pope Benedict praising the priest's example.

The pope "wishes the shining example of this eager religious may encourage a renewed dedication to the building of a civilization of love," said the telegram.

REBUILDING AFTER TSUNAMIS REQUIRES COOPERATION, VATICAN OFFICIAL SAYS

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Rebuilding Southeast Asia after December's devastating tsunamis will require continued cooperation between the area's Buddhists and Christians, said a top Vatican official.

The Dec. 26 disaster triggered "an outpouring of prayers, expressions of compassion and acts of generosity on a scale the world has rarely witnessed," said Archbishop Michael L. Fitzgerald, head of the Pontifical Council for Inter-religious Dialogue.

Many people of different religions came together to help the victims and map out the future of their communities, he said.

"The long-term requirements of reconstruction call, however, for a continuation of these interreligious expressions of solidarity," the archbishop said in an annual message to Buddhists.

The Vatican released the written message May 16 as Buddhists worldwide prepared for the May 22 feast of Vesakh, which commemorates the principal events in the life of Buddhism's founder, Siddhartha Gautama.

However, "this year's feast of Vesakh will find many families missing some of their members," the archbishop wrote. "I wish to assure them that their loved ones will not be forgotten but will be remembered in our prayers."

The tsunamis that swept through 11 countries in Asia and East Africa left more than 170,000 people dead, tens of thousands missing and hundreds of thousands homeless.

Some countries where Buddhists and Christians "live and work side by side" already have been cooperating in social development and peace, said the archbishop. But in the wake of the tsunamis, "nowhere has the need for collaboration been felt more keenly" than in these countries still struggling to rebuild.

Pope names bishop of Honolulu, coadjutor for Fort Worth

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI has appointed Father Clarence Silva, vicar general of the Diocese of Oakland, Calif., as bishop of Honolulu.

He also named Msgr. Kevin W. Vann, vicar for priests in the Diocese of Springfield, Ill., and pastor of Blessed Sacrament Church in Springfield, as coadjutor bishop of the Diocese of Fort Worth, Texas.

Bishop-designate Silva succeeds Bishop Francis X. DiLorenzo, who was named bishop of Richmond, Va., in March 2004.

As coadjutor, Bishop-designate Vann will automatically become head of the Fort Worth Diocese upon the death or retirement of Bishop Joseph P. Delaney, 70, who has headed the diocese since 1981.

The appointments were announced May 17 in Washington by Archbishop Gabriel Montalvo, apostolic nuncio to the United States.

Advocates trained to assist in marriage nullity cases

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

BELMONT — The Diocese of Charlotte now has 35 advocates to assist people after divorce and in pursuing marriage nullity.

After attending monthly classes from September 2004 through May 2005, the participants had their last class at the Sisters of Mercy community in Belmont May 14. The new advocates took the tribunal oath, administered by Father John Putnam, judicial vicar for the Diocese of Charlotte and pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, and received certificates of completion.

The advocates, both deacons and laity from parishes around the diocese, were recommended by their pastors to participate in the program. Currently, 19 parishes have at least one tribunal advocate to assist the parish with its ministry to divorced and remarried people.

The advocates also may accompany divorced persons in their petitions to the diocesan tribunal for a declaration of marriage nullity.

"The program is geared to provide more in-field contact with both the petitioners and the respondents," said Father Putnam. "The advocates will provide more personal contact and better instruction for the cases, which will benefit everyone all the way around."

To complete the program, advocates had to be thoroughly trained in a variety of topics, including the theology of marriage, human sciences, an overview of canon law, the canonical process, jurisprudence (dealing with the sanctity of marriage), impediments and canonical form.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis addressed the new advocates and spoke of the importance of canon law in advocacy, and the importance of the tribunal in the marriage nullity process.

"Through the process of the tribunal, the truth gradually emerges, and truth brings peace," said Bishop Jugis.

He instructed the advocates to perform their jobs with this message: "Receive them as Christ would meet them."

Correspondent Deacon Gerald Potkay contributed to this story.

aid he had a "joyful announcement" to make before he listened to the priests' comments and questions.

He then read, in Latin, a letter from Cardinal Jose Saraiva Martins, prefect of the Congregation for Saints' Causes, to Cardinal Camillo Ruini, papal vicar of Rome.

The letter said that at an April 28 audience, Pope Benedict, "considering the special circumstances that were explained," had decided "to dispense from the five-year period of waiting after the death of the servant of God, Pope John Paul II. ..."

Pope Benedict had to wait several minutes to finish the sentence — saying he was authorizing the immediate opening of the "cause for beatification and canonization" — because the priests broke into a loud and sustained standing ovation.

When they quieted, he said, "I see you all understand Latin very well." The comment brought more applause.

Complex procedure

Although the process for considering the holiness of Pope John Paul was to begin immediately, it was not expected to conclude quickly.

Even after the normal five-year waiting period, causes for beatification and canonization require years, if not decades of studying the person's life, writings and relationships.

Those who knew the candidate are interviewed, and everything the person wrote must be scrutinized, a process that may take years, especially for a pope who was a prolific writer and speaker.

Two years after the 1997 death of Mother Teresa of Calcutta, Pope John Paul set aside the five-year waiting period for the opening of her cause, but she was not beatified until 2003.

Jesuit Father Paolo Molinari — who helped prepare her cause and is working on the cause of Pope Paul VI, who died in 1978 — said the process for a pope entails much more work.

"If this is done properly, it will take years," he said.

Pope John Paul beatified Popes Pius IX and John XXIII in 2000 — 122 and 37 years, respectively, after their deaths.

Just the interview with the pope's longtime personal secretary, Archbishop Stanislaw Dziwisz, "will take days," Father Molinari said.

Then there are hundreds of other people, collaborators in the Roman Curia, longtime friends, bishops and priests, who also must be interviewed. His published work will be examined, but also letters, articles and poems held in archives in Poland and in other parts of the world, Father Molinari said.

The material must be compiled into a multivolume biography, then a "positio" or position paper on how the candidate heroically lived the Christian virtues is written.

Historians and theologians examine the material and make recommendations to members of the Congregation for Saints' Causes, whose opinion is presented to the pope.

Verifying miracles

After the pope declares a candidate lived a life of heroic virtue, beatification still requires the verification of a miracle attributed to his intercession. Separate boards of theologians and of physicians are called to examine miracles alleged to have occurred after the candidate's death.

Father Molinari said that when Pope Benedict decided he would preside only over canonization ceremonies — leaving Cardinal Saraiva Martins to celebrate beatification Masses — "he made it clear that he was not simplifying the process for beatification."

The Jesuit said he was not surprised the pope set aside the waiting period because of the widespread public acclaim of Pope John Paul's holiness and because of Pope Benedict's long relationship with him.

"He has been a faithful servant of John Paul II. He had a personal relationship with him and admiration for him," Father Molinari said.

During Pope John Paul's April 8 funeral, people held up signs and banners proclaiming the late pope a saint or calling for his canonization.

Cardinal Saraiva Martins said that while popular recognition of holiness was important, "canonical recognition" that someone is a saint requires the certainty that comes from a process developed and refined over the years.

Devoted to Mary

In schools across the Diocese of Charlotte, students celebrate the month in which Mother's Day falls by honoring the mother of Jesus and participating in special services for the May crowning of the Virgin Mary.

Since the Council of Nicea in 787, the Catholic Church has often asserted that it is lawful to venerate images of Christ, Mary and the saints. The official liturgical "Order of Crowning an Image of the Blessed Virgin Mary," published in 1987 by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, states coronation is one form of reverence frequently shown to images of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

The popes not only endorsed this devout custom but also "on many occasions, either personally or through bishop-delegates, carried out the coronation of Marian images."

According to the document, the queen symbol was attributed to Mary because she is a perfect follower of Christ, who is the absolute "crown" of creation.

The offertory procession and preparation

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 17

We have spent the past few weeks focusing on the significance of the offertory. We discovered that ultimately Christ is offering himself as both the priest and victim of the sacrifice of the Mass. And since we are members of his mystical body, the Catholic Church, we are also offering ourselves with him. "Through him, with him and in him," we offer ourselves as a gift to the Father.

But before the offerings and gifts are consecrated, they must be collected and presented for sacrifice. Let us return to the ritual of the liturgy of the Eucharist to see how this is accomplished.

At the beginning of the offertory, the altar is prepared. A square linen cloth, called the corporal, is unfolded in the center of the altar. The name "corporal" comes from the Latin corpus meaning "body," since this linen cloth is unfolded to catch particles of the host or drops of precious blood.

Along with the corporal, the chalice and communion chalices (if Communion is distributed under both species) are also brought to the altar with their purificators. The purificator is the linen cloth used to wipe and cleanse the chalices or other sacred vessels.

Finally, the Roman Missal is placed on the altar. The altar is now prepared to receive the gifts of bread and wine.

Previously we recalled that the first action of the offertory is the collection. Here, the faithful have the opportunity to support the various material needs of the church with their generous contributions.

We also recognized that these donations not only support the needs of the church, but also purchase the bread and wine that are also presented. Ultimately, the collection symbolically represents ourselves: our work is rewarded with money, from which a portion is given to God as a sacrificial offering.

It is important to note that the bread and wine, along with the collection, are brought forward in procession by members of the faithful. In the early church, the faithful would bring various gifts to be offered and presented at the offertory, including bread and wine, and other items for the poor, such as food, money and clothing. Since we live in a society where money is the basic mode of exchange, we generally limit these offerings to the essential gifts of bread and wine, along with the collection.

Still, the ritual allows the presentation of other gifts that are "for the sake of charity toward the poor," but these must be placed away from the altar of sacrifice (Redemptionis Sacramentum 70).

The gifts of bread and wine are accepted by the priest or deacon and carried to the altar with the assistance of servers. During the offertory collection and procession, the Offertory Hymn or chant may be sung by the choir or the congregation, at least until the gifts have been placed on the altar.

As the gifts arrive at the altar, the celebrant raises the paten above the altar and offers a prayer in silence or, if there is no music, he may recite the prayer aloud. This prayer praises God for providing the elements for man to produce the bread used in the sacrifice.

After this prayer, the celebrant places the paten and any ciboria with hosts on the corporal. The chalice is prepared by the deacon or, if there is no deacon, by the celebrant. He adds a drop of water into the wine and recites a prayer in silence: "By the mystery of this water and wine may we come to share in the divinity of Christ, who humbled himself to share in our humanity."

It was common in ancient Roman society to drink wine mixed with water. This social practice entered the sacred rites of the Mass and assumed a spiritual significance: the wine represents the divinity of Christ and the water, his humanity.

The mixture of wine and water also represents the mystery of divinization: the water represents man elevated by God (as the fathers of the church taught, "God became man that man might become God").

After the chalice is prepared, it is elevated above the altar while another short prayer of praise is recited silently or aloud by the celebrant. He places the chalice and any Communion chalices on the corporal and he may cover the chalice with a stiff square cloth, called the "pall."

We will conclude our discussion of the offertory next week.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar at St. Dorothy Church in Lincoln.

Pope confirms, shortens October Synod of Bishops on Eucharist

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Though Pope Benedict XVI confirmed October's world Synod of Bishops on the Eucharist, he decided to cut back on the length of the meeting by nearly a week.

The assembly of the world's bishops had been convoked by Pope John Paul II and scheduled to run Oct. 2-29 at the Vatican.

But after Pope John Paul's death April 2, the synod and other major Vatican initiatives were suspended.

The Vatican announced May 12 in a written statement that Pope Benedict reconvened the synod, but that it would be shortened by six days and run Oct. 2-23.

The reduced number of weeks dedicated to the synod suggests there would be changes made in how the synod was to be organized and scheduled.

"Perhaps the pope feels the work of the synod can get done in that amount of time instead of dragging on and on," said one Vatican official.

Though the official said he did not know the pope's reasons for the change, he noted that the usual length of the synods — about four weeks — kept bishops and archbishops away from their dioceses "a long time."

While no "big changes" were on the horizon, he said, some modifications would be expected given the reduced schedule.

Details of the changes were set to be published in the next few weeks with the release of the "instrumentum laboris" or working document on the synod.

The May 12 Vatican statement said Pope Benedict also reconfirmed the four cardinals and the archbishop chosen by Pope John Paul to lead the synod discussions.

The late pope had chosen Italian Cardinal Angelo Scola of Venice to be the synod's general rapporteur, or recording secretary, introducing and later summarizing the bishops' discussion.

Though Pope Benedict, as pontiff, is president of the synod, three cardinals will take turns presiding over the synod's daily sessions. They will be Cardinals Francis Arinze of Nigeria, prefect of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, Juan Sandoval Iniguez of Guadalajara, Mexico, and Telesphore Toppo of Ranchi, India.

The synod's special secretary will remain French Archbishop Roland Minnerath of Dijon.

The theme of the synod, also chosen by Pope John Paul, is "The Eucharist, Source and Summit of the Life and Mission of the Church."

The October gathering will be the 11th worldwide Synod of Bishops to be held since the Second Vatican Council. The last synod was held in 2001 and focused on the role and ministry of the bishop.

Pope asks new priests to lead people to Christ through Eucharist

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Maintaining a tradition of his predecessor, Pope Benedict XVI ordained 21 priests and urged them to lead people to Christ through the Eucharist.

By centering their mission on the Eucharist, the new priests can bring "the joy of Christ to those who suffer, those in doubt and even those who are reluctant," the pope said during the Mass in St. Peter's Basilica May 15.

The newly ordained, who completed their priestly studies in the Diocese of Rome, included 11 from Italy and 10 other countries in Europe, Africa and South America.

During his homily, the pope said the Eucharist should be the focus of the priest's spiritual life and the stimulus for their evangelizing work.

"Consider the possibility of worthily celebrating the Eucharist as the center of every day," he said. "Lead people again and again to this mystery. Help them, starting out from the Eucharist, to bring the peace of Christ into the world."

The pope framed his remarks about the priesthood in a description of the "mission of the Holy Spirit" and the church's duty to spread the Gospel. That is a task that has implications for human freedom, he said.

He said the Ten Commandments represent the foundation for the just ordering of freedom in human society, which cannot exist without reference to God. The Holy Spirit, he said, helps people understand this perspective and helps the church spread its message.

"The church must continually become what it already is: It must open borders between peoples and break down the barriers between classes and races," he said. "In the church there are only the free brothers and sisters of Jesus Christ."

The pope asked the priests to remember that the strength given by the Holy Spirit is in a special way "the strength of forgiveness."

"Forgiveness comes from the cross; (Christ) transforms the world with the love he gives ... and only this grace can transform the world and build peace," he said.

He added that the forgiveness given in the sacrament of penance is one of the church's "precious treasures."

The pope, noting that it was Pentecost Sunday, made a point he has touched upon more than once in the first month of his papacy: the "indissoluble link that exists in the church between the Spirit and the institution." That link extends to the church's teaching authority, he said.

"Without the Holy Spirit, the church would be reduced to a merely human organization, weighed down by its own structures," he said. In God's plan, the Holy Spirit works through human means to affect history, he said, and this helps explain the church's role.

man characteristics. They (the students) were encouraged to go beyond what they usually think of as a traditional mask and to use different art elements, such as texture, shape and color."

"I enjoyed being able to be creative with the mask instead of following specific guidelines," said student Chas Kissick.

The Mexican masks were a gift from Nelson Grice, an anthropologist who lived in the Winston-Salem area and often traveled to Mexico on field studies. He visited the school several years ago to speak with students about his work and, according to Iauco, he never forgot the polite behavior and genuine interest shown by the students.

Last year, before moving to New Mexico, Grice donated some of the masks he had collected over the years to the school. The masks not only offer lessons in Mexican folk art, but also tell the history of the country's religion and society.

"All art is based in culture," said Iauco. "It helps us to understand the world around us."

"There are a lot of religious concepts in art that our [parochial school] children understand," she said. "The whole spiritual concept is more real to them. They have a deeper appreciation for symbolic aspects of other cultures since they have studied the history of the church and religious symbolism."

Masks have been an integral part of Mexican life, even before the Spanish took over the country in the early 16th century, according to Iauco.

In pre-Hispanic times, she said, the Indians held ceremonies at certain times of the year in which masks were worn in processions, dances and theatrical-type performances. This was done not only for the Indians to honor and entertain their deities, but also to encourage the blessing of abundant rain, fertile crops, good health and general well-being.

It was also a way to gather communities together for fun and enjoyment, said Iauco. Descriptions of these festivals and of the masks that were worn are included in chronicles from Catholic priests during the first decades after the Spanish arrived.

As the Spanish brought Christianity to the region, they influenced the Mexican festivals. The priests who worked in the villages persuaded the Indians to adopt a Catholic festival cycle — Christmas, Holy Week, All Saints and All Souls days, feast days for the Virgin Mary and popular saints, and others.

The priests assigned each village a patron saint, whose feast day became highly celebrated.

The priests also introduced Spanish dramas to the Indians as a means for teaching Christianity. Many of these dramas told the story of the defeat and expulsion of the Moors from Spain. Christian morality plays, which depict conversion and the struggles of good and evil, were also introduced in this way.

The plays and festivals soon became a blend of the two cultures and are still

BAC graduates 181, honors N.C. leaders with honorary degrees

BELMONT — Hundreds of families and friends cheered and applauded as the graduating class of 2005 made their way across the stage.

Belmont Abbey College presented 181 traditional and adult graduates with diplomas during the 127th annual commencement ceremony May 7.

The college also presented honorary doctorates to Bishop Joseph F. Gossman of Raleigh; Paul Polking, a retired vice president of Bank of America; and Helmut Deussen, a member of the college board of trustees who in 1995 was selected by Textile World magazine as one of the top 10 leaders in the industry.

Benedictine Father Christopher Kirchgessner, an Abbey professor, served as this year's master of ceremonies; graduate Katherine Bogie was named valedictorian; and graduate Sean Dunne was named Student of the Year. After graduation, Dunne plans to join the monastery at Belmont Abbey.

The college also recognized faculty achievements, including associate professor of math and physics Stephen Brosnan as the recipient of the 2005 popular today.

The various festivals and plays have certain important characters in them. Each mask represents a different symbol, many of which have Christian connotations.

"A double-faced mask commonly portrays the fight of good versus evil," said Iauco.

"Some masks are exaggerated forms of people, while others take on animal forms and represent different strengths and weaknesses," she said. "The jaguar represents beauty and physical prowess, but also the underworld with mysterious qualities."

The mask collection at St. Leo the Great School includes masks made from clay, wood, tin, yarn and coconut husk.

Inside more than half the masks, notes Iauco, there are tiny "shelves" positioned under the wearer's chin to help hold the masks in place. On many of these shelves are worn pieces of linen.

"This is a good indication that these masks were really used," said Iauco.

Panelists say Pope John Paul II's last book rooted in his Polish homeland

BY TRACY EARLY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK (CNS) — "Memory and Identity," the last book by Pope John Paul II, shows him developing his thought from the specific perspective of his home country, according to participants in a panel who discussed the book in New York May 16.

Cardinal Edward M. Egan of New York said that in this book the pope "let his hair down" and allowed his love for his native land and culture to show through.

In "Memory and Identity," the pope developed his philosophy and theology through the lens of his own experience as a "son of Poland," and created a work that will help in understanding his more formal writings, the cardinal said.

Held at the Italian Academy of Columbia University, the panel was arranged by the Crossroads New York Cultural Center, a recently established agency of the lay Catholic movement, Communion and Liberation.

The publisher of the pope's book, Rizzoli, jointly sponsored the event. Rizzoli's president told the audience that the book was doing "extremely well" in sales.

The book was issued in Italian in February, and the panel was arranged to help call attention to its availability now in English.

Msgr. Lorenzo Albacete, spiritual leader of Communion and Liberation in the United States, was panel moderator.

Carl Anderson, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus, also emphasized the Polish influence on the development of Pope John Paul's thought in "Memory and Identity."

The pope saw in the experience of Poland a "universal value" and affirmed the moral value of patriotism, Anderson said.

He suggested that the pontificate of Pope John Paul II could mark the beginning of a spiritual renewal coming from Poland equivalent to that which emerged from the work of St. Ignatius Loyola, the Jesuit founder.

"Memory and Identity" will have special significance for the intellectual formation of Catholics who want to work for the transformation of culture, Anderson said.

That the pope's last book is rooted in his experience as part of the Polish nation was developed more fully by Father Richard John Neuhaus, director of the Institute on Religion and Public Life, based in New York, and editor of its journal, First Things.

"How very Polish it is," he commented.

Patriotism, the nation and the church all come together for the pope in this book, Father Neuhaus said.

He said the pope also saw Poland as the embodiment of the suffering of Christ and, as one who played a role in the resurrection of his crucified country, found salvation history inseparable from his experience in his homeland.

When he was elected pope, he believed that in some sense Poland had been elected, Father Neuhaus said.

The pope, he said, was right in seeing the unfolding of a Catholic cultural possibility in Poland.

However, Father Neuhaus also emphasized that the situation of American Catholics was quite different from that of Polish Catholics.

While Pope John Paul could look back to the "baptism of Poland" in its conversion to Christianity a millennium before, American Catholics cannot look to any comparable event in the history of their nation, Father Neuhaus said.

He also noted that the pope could call for building on the Catholic tradition of his country as a way of obeying the Fourth Commandment to honor parents, but American Catholics could not look in a similar way to Native Americans or early settlers such as the Puritans.

And as a nation of immigrants from all countries of the world, the United States does not have a national culture comparable to that of Poland, Father Neuhaus said.

Noting that the United States remains a Christian country sociologically, he said it was also "a very Protestant country."

These factors bring about a "necessary tension" between Catholic Americans and the culture of their country, not a convergence, Father Neuhaus said.

Catholic Americans hope there will not be a conflict between their allegiance to their country and their faith, but their primary allegiance is to their church, he said.

EVERYTHING ABOUT JESUS IS ACTION

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

When I was a young girl I had an enormous fear of going to Communion.

I attended a Protestant church, so the Communion ritual was held only once a month. My parents let me stay in the pew because I had such anxiety about the whole thing: I got nervous. I'd break out in a sweat, and my hands would shake so much that I could barely hold the tiny glass without spilling the grape juice.

I was comfortable in my role at church as spectator and was afraid to stand up, walk to the altar and "partake" in front of everybody. Too much responsibility.

But in receiving the consecrated body and blood of Jesus in the Eucharist as an adult Catholic, I discovered it to be "true food" and "true drink," as John's Gospel says. As such, it naturally creates in believers an appetite for the life of Christ within us.

This weekend's readings remind us that the body and blood of Christ is active, not static. It nourishes and flows. The essence of the body of Christ is that it is alive and requires our active participation in it to carry its meaning into the world.

Everything about Jesus is action. Here is your God: walking, teaching, touching, living, healing, praying, suffering, dying, being resurrected, forgiving, seeking, preaching, hungering. He gives us his body and blood, not for us to observe, but to feed us and flow through us for action — the way to salvation, the way to life.

I was not the first to want simply to sit still and in awe before Jesus. The disciples who witnessed his Transfiguration were struck in the same way. But Jesus himself discouraged them from building booths and instead led them down the mountain to participate in his life of struggle and action.

As Paul explained in his letter to the Corinthians, participation is the key to the life of Christ. He wants to be actively part of us and for us to be part of him.

Jesus is not to be kept at arm's length — his own words insist otherwise: "Unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, you do not have life within you."

Two top Vatican Radio officials convicted of polluting the environment

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Two top officials at Vatican Radio were convicted of polluting the environment with electromagnetic waves from radio broadcasting towers in a suburb north of Rome.

A Rome court May 9 found Jesuit Father Pasquale Borgomeo, Vatican Radio's general director, and Cardinal Roberto Tucci, president of the radio's management committee, guilty of "dangerous showering of objects," a criminal charge, and sentenced them to 10 days in jail.

The court decision comes after a five-year legal battle waged by residential and local environmental groups against the radio's top directors.

Inhabitants around the radio's transmission center alleged that its levels of electromagnetic radiation had increased the risk of cancer in children.

Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi, Vatican Radio's program director, said the radio would appeal the court's decision.

While the radio "appreciated the acquittal of one of the defendants," it would challenge the court decision that "remains clearly unjustified," Father Lombardi said May 9.

He said the radio's transmission center outside Rome had always met with international norms of accepted levels of electromagnetic radiation "even before the existence of Italian standards."

When Italy established its own stricter radiation levels in 1998, the radio began to "carefully respect" the new norms, said Father Lombardi. Their adherence to the norms could be verified by a joint commission from Italy and the Vatican that has been in charge of monitoring radiation levels, he said.

The joint commission convened May 16 to review the radio's compliance with the norms, according to a Vatican statement May 18.

Experts from Italy's environmental and communications agencies told the commission that the electromagnetic radiation emissions were "in conformity with" the levels required by law, the Vatican statement said.

When constructed five decades ago, the transmission center occupied open countryside in Rome's northern outskirts, but Italian authorities allowed housing construction to surround the site.

In an effort to meet Italy's more stringent norms, in 2001 Vatican Radio began to reduce the power of some of its antennae. The radio also moved some of its European broadcasts to a transmission center in France and other locations.

During the commission's May 16 meeting, the Vatican said it was continuing to convert some of the radio's short- and medium-wave transmitters to digital, which would "permit Vatican Radio to air its programs with less power and lower emissions" as well as with "better broadcasting quality."

Even though the World Health Organization concluded in 1996 that there was no convincing scientific evidence of a link between radio frequencies and cancer, it called for further studies to investigate possible health risks associated with electromagnetic fields.

Father Lombardi said May 9 that with the strict standards in place limiting electromagnetic radiation "there is no justified reason for local residents to be worried."

He said he hoped the Italian courts would eventually recognize that radio officials had always acted "properly."

He also expressed his wish that the justice system would someday help "clear away the dark shadows" that tainted the radio's "good reputation and contributed to feeding unfounded fears in people."

The Rome court also decided that Vatican Radio would have to pay all the plaintiffs' legal fees.

Italian news reports May 10 said representatives of some of the plaintiffs said they were "satisfied" with the court's findings.

Schiavo case should inspire talks and wills tional Press Club in Washington.

"Of the 100 things that can happen at the end of life, a living will will typically cover two of them," said David Magnus, director of the Center for Bioethics at Stanford University School of Medicine in Palo Alto, Calif. "There are a million variants."

"Living wills are not the solution" to disputes among family members over end-of-life care, said Art Caplan, chairman of the medical ethics department and director of the Center for Bioethics at the University of Pennsylvania.

Both ethicists were critical of the media handling of what Caplan called the "soap opera" surrounding Schiavo, the severely brain-damaged Florida woman whose March 31 death came 13 days after her feeding tube was removed at the direction of her husband, Michael.

Bob and Mary Schindler, Terri Schiavo's parents, had fought for years in the courts and in the media to keep their daughter alive. Legislators in Florida and in the U.S. Congress passed special laws written to aid the Schindlers in their efforts.

"But was anything broken" regarding termination-of-care practices in the United States, Caplan asked, responding in the negative.

"Did (Schiavo) have adequate protections under the law?" he added. "I believe she did. Does medicine know what it's doing regarding PVS (persistent vegetative state)? I think it does."

Caplan said the media contributed to public misunderstandings about the persistent vegetative state, giving the impression that it is "an uncertain diagnosis," that patients in this state "can suffer" and that people can awaken from a persistent vegetative state.

For patients such as Schiavo, whose brain was deprived of oxygen for a time, persistent vegetative state is "a rock-solid diagnosis," he said.

Magnus said the media were guilty of causing "confusion between balance and showing two sides" in the dispute over Schiavo.

"When we have a broad consensus, with 99.9 percent of neurologists in agreement" about persistent vegetative state in general and Schiavo's condition in particular, it is not balanced journalism to find one doctor who disagrees and then to present each view as equal, Magnus said.

Magnus said state laws on termination of care vary widely, adding that if the Schiavo case had taken place in Texas or California Schiavo's death "could have taken place much, much earlier, even against the wishes of Michael Schiavo."

Terri Schiavo's parents meet Vatican official, thank him for support

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The parents of the late Terri Schindler Schiavo visited a top Vatican official to thank him for his defense of their daughter's right to life.

Cardinal Renato Martino, head of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, received Bob and Mary Schindler, parents of the 41-year-old Florida woman who died March 31, nearly two weeks after a court ordered her feeding tube to be disconnected.

At his May 17 meeting with the Schindlers, Cardinal Martino reiterated his condemnation of "the killing of this woman in one of the most inhumane and cruel ways, through hunger and thirst."

The Schindlers "expressed their appreciation to the cardinal for making bold efforts to save the life of their daughter" who was "practically condemned to die by the U.S. courts on the petition of the woman's husband," a Vatican statement said.

Before Terri Schiavo died, numerous church leaders, including Cardinal Martino, had made public appeals to save her life.

The council's statement said the Schindlers were scheduled to take part in Pope Benedict XVI's general audience May 18.

Sudanese stories of hope, life, faith

As Aller talked about how his faith sustained him during the war years, he said that of his eight children only six are alive; two of his sons were killed in the war. His oldest son, Mario Malou, who would now be about 37, left in the late 1970s to avoid being forced to join the army.

"He wanted to be free ... he went away. I think he is in the United States now; someone told me that is where he went," Aller said.

Touching his heart, Aller added: "If you can find my son, tell him my foundation is empty. He will understand."

Deacon Francis Lemyama, 37, said that for about 12 years the Nuba Mountains region was cut off from the rest of the country.

"There was nothing coming in, and people simply learned to go without" things like clothes, soap and salt, he said, adding that no relief agencies worked in the area.

"The only thing the people had was the diocese," he said.

Deacon Lemyama remembered what a great occasion it was when a bishop brought sweets for the children, many of whom did not know what candy was.

Captured dreams

Makuc Akec, 28, left the South in 1988 and fled to northern Sudan, hoping it would be safer there.

He was living in El Obeid and had gone to the river to get water when he was surrounded and captured by troops. He said the soldiers tied him to a tree and told him, "We can kill you."

Akec said the soldiers put him into a cattle camp, where he was forced to watch the herd. After two years of living with the militia, he escaped one night. The soldiers quickly found him and sent him to a second cattle camp in the North.

Akec managed to escape a second time, only to be captured again and taken back. This time he managed to rejoin his wife and two sets of twin girls, who lived with him in the cattle camp for a year.

Adior Thuc, his wife, looked away and answered softly when asked if she or her daughters had been abused. With her face shielded from view and her eyes averted, she said they were beaten and abused.

Bishop Macram Max Gassis of El Obeid interrupted the silence that followed and suggested Thuc probably had experienced things simply too difficult for her to share.

Later, Akec recalled how he was duped by the soldiers. They told him that if he stayed with them for one year he would get a cow to help restart his life. However, after the year they did not give him anything.

Eventually rebel troops negotiated his release from the government camp and his return to Turalei. Akec said after his release he walked away without any belongings, but at least his wife and daughters were with him.

Akec and Thuc said they hope their children will be able to attend school in Turalei. The sets of twins — 15 and 5 years old — have never attended school.

Fleeing for freedom

Father Joseph Mogga, a parish priest in Turalei, said he entered a minor seminary when his family fled to the refugee camps in neighboring Uganda; he did not see them for another 12 years.

"My younger sisters didn't even recognize me ... they didn't know who I was," he said.

Father Mogga's mother, now in her 70s, has spent more than 20 years in refugee camps.

"However," he said, "her one dream is to die in Sudan."

Father Mogga said his older brother, John, fled to Khartoum, as the war intensified. He then migrated to Egypt to avoid joining the army. He has been in Canada for 25 years and has not seen his family, although he has kept in touch through letters.

Ahmed Hran, 45, an Arab Muslim, fled his village in western Sudan's Darfur region after an attack by government and militia troops.

"Everything was destroyed," he said, adding that he and friends left all their belongings when they fled.

He said troops destroyed all the houses and cut down all the trees in his village, but "we don't know why."

"Those who couldn't run away were killed, and all the animals were killed," he said.

"We need the truth to get out ... let everyone, especially the Catholics and Christians, come to Sudan to search for and see what is wrong," he said.

Reflections stirred by serving the homebound

Church community is for giving, getting help

As I drive into the parish parking lot, I savor the absolute beauty of this spring morning. It's spring, and in one dramatic, synchronized gesture, all the birch trees have exploded with triumphant little leaves.

Heading for the meeting room, I note there's not a cloud in the sky. When I emerge from the windowless room in an hour, this perfect day will still be there for me. I have soil to overturn, I've seen plenty of Saturday garage sale signs that piqued my interest, and the dog will be eager for a walk.

But sometimes when I leave our monthly "Care and Compassion" meetings, I'm not quite the woman I was when I walked in. This day is like that.

We acknowledge that our little committee is misnamed. Our singular mission is taking the Eucharist to the homebound on Sunday. There are other committees (like "Outreach") that solve problems such as how someone without transportation gets to a doctor's appointment or how a family struck with devastating illness gets a warm evening meal.

Our job is to ensure that those who can't make it to Mass partake of the body of Christ nonetheless.

We have our little list of the homebound (a much nicer word than "shut-ins"), and we report on the month's activity.

Ruth — no real names used — lives with her daughter and relies on oxygen. A medication for arthritis took a toll on her lungs. Now well into her 80s, she is cheerful and alert, and always ready for a good long visit.

The little women at one of the nicest assisted-living homes remain about the same. One is sliding more into dementia, and there is a question about whether one of the women who wants to receive is really Catholic.

We consult with our deacon or priest over these thornier issues of eligibility, but sometimes we are forced to make our own pastoral judgments on the spot.

The care provider at one assisted-living facility has begun telling us "it's not a good time" to visit Emma. She's in the third stage of dementia, we're told, not having good nights.

We ponder whether it's legitimate, this being turned away, and someone remarks that the home — an in-home care center — seems "creepy."

Inevitably, our attention turns to

For the Journey

EFFIE
CALDAROLA
CNS COLUMNIST

how nice it would be to have more help, and from there we view the wider parish picture. We all know someone who needs support, someone who's received a devastating diagnosis, someone who's having a knee replacement, someone whose husband is moving into dementia. "This church is our community," remarks the woman next to me. "This is where people should turn for help."

We talk about whether things are coordinated enough at the parish. We have committees, but are they in touch with each other? Can we get the word out on the needs we have?

"There are so many people out there who would help, if they just knew some need they could fill," someone says.

Our dormant stewardship committee finally has been reborn, and it has a big job to do coordinating all the people who could help with all the people who need help, motivating the folks in the pews to be more than Sunday Catholics.

I look around at our committee. We're middle-aged and beyond. The day will come when some of us will need the help we now give.

The day is still lovely as I head to my car, spring still beckoning. But my mood is just a little more reflective now.

Pope Benedict says Pope John Paul 'is watching us from on high'

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Marking the birthday of his predecessor, Pope Benedict XVI told pilgrims they can be certain that Pope John Paul II "is watching us from on high and is with us."

The pope spoke at a general audience May 18, before some 25,000 visitors who braved intermittent rain showers in St. Peter's Square.

"I'd like to recall that today is the birthday of Pope John Paul II. He would have been 85 today. And we are sure that he is watching us from on high and is with us," the pope said before beginning his regular audience talk.

"On this occasion, we want to give great thanks to the Lord for the gift of this pope, and we want to say thank you to the pope himself for all that he did and all that he suffered," Pope Benedict said, as the crowd broke into sustained applause.

Hundreds of thousands of people have come to St. Peter's to visit the tomb of the late pontiff, who died April 2.

On May 13, Pope Benedict said he was allowing the immediate opening of Pope John Paul's cause for sainthood, lifting the usual five-year waiting period.

Pope Benedict continued the series of audience talks begun by Pope John Paul on the psalms. He explicated Psalm 113, which praises the Lord for his care of the world's poor and humble.

The pope noted that after extolling God's name and glory in heaven the psalmist "turns his attention to our earthly horizon": "He raises up the lowly from the dust; from the dunghill he lifts up the poor to seat them with princes ..."

The psalmist thus praises a God who is "very different from us in his greatness, but at the same time very close to his creatures who suffer," the pope said. He looks on the world not with "the cold eyes of an emperor" but with sympathy, he said.

The pope said the psalm foreshadows the Magnificat, the canticle of Mary in St. Luke's Gospel, which he said is even more radical in saying of God: "He has thrown down the rulers from their thrones but lifted up the lowly."

The pope later delivered greetings in several languages, welcoming in English a group of Japanese Buddhists.

Through an aide, he extended greetings in Russian to a group of Russian Catholic pilgrims led by Moscow Archbishop Tadeusz Kondrusiewicz.

To Polish pilgrims he again recalled Pope John Paul, calling him an "unforgettable pope who is in everyone's hearts."

On May 19, Pope Benedict was scheduled to attend a Vatican screening of a three-hour TV movie on the life of Pope John Paul.

At the end of the audience the pope gave individual greetings to a long line of people in wheelchairs, who were brought past him one by one.

Then he spent about 20 minutes greeting other pilgrims lined up along the barricades. He blessed newlywed couples, kissed babies, heard individual petitions, accepted homemade gifts and had his hand kissed hundreds of times.

Is there an angel named Uriel?

Q. As a grade-school religion teacher, I begin each year by discussing angels, especially guardian angels. Recently I have seen religious catalogues advertising statues of an Archangel Uriel. Who is this? If he is an archangel, why do we only hear of Michael, Raphael and Gabriel? (Maryland)

A. The name Uriel occurs in apocryphal Jewish scriptures, the Books of Enoch, as one of four archangels.

Enoch, our Bible says, was the father of Methuselah. Genesis (5:24) tells us Enoch "walked with God, and he was no longer here, for God took him." This implies, so it was believed, that Enoch did not die but, like the prophet Elijah (2 Kings 2), was taken alive to heaven.

The three Books of Enoch were known widely in the early years of Christianity. Written around the time of Christ, they significantly influenced early Christian writings, including the New Testament.

They are the first to designate the Messiah with names like the Son of Man, the Righteous One (e.g. Acts 3:14) and the Chosen One (e.g. Lk 9:35).

The New Testament Letter to the Hebrews names Enoch as one of the ancient heroes of faith who did not "see death" but was taken up to God (Heb 11:5). Other Christian theologians often refer to these books. The Letter of Jude quotes them at least once (v. 14).

With such a well-known work devoting considerable attention to the angel

Uriel, among other things placing him in charge of the netherworld, it is perhaps understandable that even today certain religious groups honor him.

Only the three angels named in the Bible — Raphael, Gabriel and Michael — are honored by name in Christian history and tradition.

Of war's remembrance: An archbishop's story

Memorial Day good time to remember, honor those who serve others

We are a remembering people, we Catholic Christians.

We remember the Lord "in the breaking of the bread." We remember our past in art and architecture, in the lives of our saints, in the history of missionary activity, ecumenical councils and so much more. Remembering is part of who we are.

So it is quite congenial for us to participate each year in our nation's Memorial Day celebration, the civic remembrance of those who fought and died in military service. Even those among us who are opposed to war are open to prayer and reflection prompted by this annual end-of-May day of remembrance.

This year, as the nation marked the 60th anniversary in early May of the end of our war with Nazi Germany, Baltimore Catholics were pleased to read in their daily newspaper the story of the bravery of their retired Archbishop William Donald Borders.

Many were unaware that he saw combat duty as a chaplain in World War II. The Baltimore Sun reporter coaxed out of him some of the details of the heroic action that won for him the Bronze Star for Valor.

He was a battalion chaplain, not quite 30, with the 91st Infantry Division in Italy in September 1944. During an attack on a German position, one of the American troops was hit and lay wounded on the battlefield. Chaplain Borders ran out under machine-gun fire, lifted the fallen soldier to his shoulder and moved him to safety.

"After I anointed him, they sent him to the rear, and I never saw him again," the now retired archbishop told the reporter.

As to bravery in the face of danger, "it didn't enter your mind one way or another, you're too busy. You're involved all the time. When you're involved, you're thinking about what you're doing, not: Am I brave, or am I not brave. It just doesn't enter your mind.

"Another person says you're courageous. You don't think of it. The motivation is somebody needs help, pure and simple."

Now 91, Archbishop Borders has been helping people in a variety of circumstances and in many places over the years.

"Nobody prepares you for battle," Archbishop Borders told the reporter. "You can't do it. How do you prepare for someone dying?"

What did he do on the battlefield?

"If they were conscious, I talked to them, gave them counsel, administered the sacraments of penance and the holy Eucharist, and anointed many people who were dying. I don't have any idea how many. You don't keep statistics. It wasn't constant, of course. Combat is never constant. It comes and goes."

With the help of the annual Washington, D.C., Memorial Day Concert, seen live or on public television from the West Lawn of the Capitol on the Sunday evening before the holiday, millions of Americans can understand what Archbishop Borders meant when he closed out the newspaper interview by saying softly, "It was a long time ago, but you never forget something like that."

With the 60th anniversary of V-J Day approaching in mid-August, this will be a summer of remembrance for a nation that is grateful to all its known and unknown heroes.

Catholics all across the nation, not just in Baltimore, are humbly proud and proudly humble to have been served by the likes of William Donald Borders, who has been reaching out for so many years simply because "somebody needs help."

Contemporary secularism's message for us

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE
HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

Throughout history, secularism and the profane have been adversaries of Christianity.

With the United States and other countries becoming increasingly secular and profane, the new millennium could find itself in a serious crisis. To understand why, let's define these two adversaries and their effects on the world.

The Dutch theologian C. A. Van Peursen says secularism is the deliverance of man, first from religious and then from metaphysical control over his reason and language. It is the loosening of the world from religious and quasi-religious understandings of itself, the dispelling of all closed worldviews, the breaking of all supernatural myths and sacred symbols.

Secularization occurs when we become engrossed in this world and this time, meaning we are locked into the age we live in, with no other age to look ahead or back to.

Our Christian moral standards are a way we show God at work in the world. We forever are looking beyond this world for guidance. We also look back to Catholic tradition and the values it embraces.

Secularism would have us live only for today and not toward God or past history. Once this happens, the moral constraints based on God's laws and Christian traditions tend to disappear.

Many people end up doing whatever gives them pleasure, which, more often than not, ends in self-destruction and harming others.

"Profane" means "outside the temple." It has to do with being nonreligious.

Why are secularism and the profane life on the increase?

One reason is that evangelization is not keeping up with growing populations. Churches aren't effectively educating people about religion, either due to outdated programs or they aren't getting out to the people.

They are also in competition with the media, which tends to be more secular than religious, and some religious leaders, who have badly damaged religion's image.

I believe also some people fear religion because knowing God means keeping God's commandments. This is often misinterpreted as losing one's freedom.

The dramatic increase in secularism and the profane life should not be feared, but rather seen as a crisis. The word "crisis" refers to a crossroads.

At present, we are at a crossroads that should prompt us to envision the new, exciting types of leadership and programs that are needed to get people looking heavenward — in awe, rather than in fear, of God.

The wisdom of Archbishop Oscar Romero

Priest's legacy lives on in faithful

I've been reading a book called "Cloud of Witnesses" that brings us the voices of remarkable people — some come with the Lord, some very much live on earth. What they all have had in common is that they lived, or are living, their lives according to the Beatitudes.

I give great credit to Jim Wallis and Joyce Hollyday, who selected what I would call gems of writings from such masters of the Lord as Henri Nouwen, Martin Luther King Jr., Sojourner Truth, Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Penny Lernoux, Archbishop Oscar Romero, Father Jon Sobrino and so many more.

I was especially moved by Father Sobrino's words expressing what he learned from the personal pain of so much killing in his years in Latin America, particularly in El Salvador, the country so loved by Oscar Romero, the Archbishop of San Salvador who was assassinated 25 years ago.

"I don't know how you can show love in this world of sin without being in solidarity with the victims of this world. And if you are in solidarity with the victims of this world, I don't see how you can avoid the cross. The theology of the cross is the theology of love in our real world."

Those words so truly apply to Archbishop Romero.

He called himself "the voice of the voiceless," working for his people, so poor, so oppressed by those in power in Latin America. He said the church no longer could be silent when an area of 300 million people, mostly Catholic, were poor, undernourished and always under the control of those in authority waving their guns.

For this he was assassinated while celebrating Mass.

He was hated by the country's rulers because he spoke the truth. They couldn't have a respected man of God telling his people:

"Woe to the powerful when they do not take into account the power of God, the only powerful one, when they try to subjugate people to their power by torturing, by killing, by massacring! What terrible idolatry is being offered to the god of power, the god of money! So many victims, so much blood, for which God, the true God, the author of human life, will charge a high price from these idolaters of power!"

Admittedly, to think or speak this way does not place one in a very popular earthly position. The archbishop knew that the reality that had shaped his life — his choice to remain faithful to God's justice and the Gospel of Jesus Christ — put his life in danger.

The Bottom Line

Certainly Archbishop Romero was a man of courage, deserving of our deepest respect. He must have had a premonition he would be killed.

In his own words he acknowledged this, yet said: "If I am killed, I shall arise in the Salvadoran people. I say so without boasting, with the greatest humility. ... Let my death, if it is accepted by God, be for my people's liberation and as a witness of hope in the future."

He is not forgotten by his people, for as Dr. Juan Romagoza, executive director of La Clinica del Pueblo, wrote this March, "His prophetic voice continues to echo during these times of injustice and oppression."

And he gives a promise to Archbishop Romero: "In a world where massacres, saturation bombing and wars are promoted, we will follow your example. We will become instruments of peace."

Romero lives!

St. John Neumann Church serves growing Catholic community

St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte is home to a thriving community of young Catholics.

CHARLOTTE — Three decades ago, seven Catholic churches served all the Catholics in Charlotte, the city that in 1972 had been designated the see city of a newly formed diocese.

By that time, Catholicism was becoming more firmly rooted in western North Carolina and Bishop Michael J. Begley was faced with the task of building more churches to accommodate the growing numbers of Catholics settling in the region.

It was from that need in the southeast Charlotte-Mint Hill area that Charlotte's eighth parish, St. John Neumann Church, was created in 1977.

Msgr. Lawrence Newman, then-pastor of Our Lady of the Assumption Church, assumed the first pastorate of St. John Neumann Church. About 250 families, many from Our Lady of the Assumption Church, formed the registry of the new parish.

The parish began plans to build a church while Msgr. Newman celebrated Saturday vigil Mass at a Methodist church and Sunday liturgies at the Idlewild Country Club. Weekday Masses were celebrated at the rectory, a house that already existed on the church property on Idlewild Road.

A church soon was built, and Bishop Begley dedicated the new structure on June 17, 1979.

Msgr. Newman died in January 1981 and was succeeded by Father Frank O'Rourke, currently pastor of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro and vicar forane for the Greensboro vicariate.

Rapid parish growth prompted the need for a larger church in the mid-1980s. Then-Bishop John F. Donoghue dedicated the new building June 23, 1985.

In 1987, Father O'Rourke was appointed the rector of St. Patrick Cathedral across town, and the Conventual Franciscan Friars arrived at St. John Neumann Church. Conventual Franciscan Father (now Msgr.) Richard Bellow then became the church's pastor. Msgr. Bellow is now pastor of St. Mark Church in Huntersville and vicar forane for the Charlotte vicariate.

In March 1998, at the request of then-Bishop William G. Curlin, the Augustinians came to Charlotte to staff St. John Neumann Church, the first Augustinians to minister in Charlotte.

Augustinian Father Thomas Meehan became the parish's first Augustinian pastor, a position he continues to hold today. In June 2005, he will celebrate the 25th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood.

Since its beginning phases, the church has incorporated the theme "Building Together a Community of Faith" into its daily life. Through that theme, the St. John Neumann parish community has established a variety of commissions dedicated to evangelization, liturgy, Respect Life activities, family and community life and communications.

Adult education programs and Scripture study sessions offer other opportunities for adults, while younger parishioners take part in educational, sporting and social programs. The women's club, 50+ club, Secular Franciscans, RCIA program and Knights of Columbus and its ladies auxiliary are among the parish groups active in social and spiritual activities on a regular basis. The Knights council is North Carolina's second largest.

St. John Neumann Church continues to experience growth and change. In June 1997, then-Bishop William G. Curlin celebrated a Mass at the church marking the retirement of the church's debt. A pastoral plan for the next 10 years is in the process of being written.

According to Father Meehan, St. John Neumann parish is young and thriving. More than 800 children are enrolled in faith formation, and evangelization is a major focus of the parish.

"We reach out to anyone and everyone we can," Father Meehan said.

Tessa, Tyrel, Joe and Linda Sullivan say they feel like one of God's miracles after escaping with only minor injuries when their van tumbled off a mountain pass in February. The Montrose, Colo., family went to Mass at their parish church the next day.

Surviving harrowing auto accident strengthens Catholic family's faith

MONTROSE, Colo. (CNS) — Members of a Colorado Catholic family who suffered only minor injuries after their van tumbled off a mountain pass to a depth of nearly 400 feet last February said the harrowing experience strengthened their faith.

They feel like one of God's miracles.

After Linda Sullivan, along with husband Joe, daughter Tessa, son Tyrel, and two family friends survived the accident, they attended Mass at St. Mary's Catholic Church in Montrose the next day.

"It was pretty touching," said Father Don Malin, who anointed the family with oil after the Mass.

The travelers were on their way home to Montrose from Durango where Tessa and her high school team had just played basketball.

Joe was driving, and felt unconcerned as he approached "the shed," a stretch of highway where frequent slides of snow and rocks occur. Guardrails cannot be placed along the side because they would interfere with the road being cleared.

As Joe began to round the corner, the van began to slide. Joe knew he no longer had control of the vehicle.

"All I thought was that I had killed us," Joe said in a recent interview.

As the van rolled down the rocky chute, seat belts kept everyone in place, but with the windows blown out, Tessa's face scraped the rocky ground as the vehicle rolled.

Meanwhile, Skip Garcia, a parishioner at St. Columba Church in Durango, who happened to be traveling a short distance behind the van, noticed as he rounded a corner that it had disappeared. He met an oncoming traveler, Benedictine Father Nathanael Foshage of St. Daniel the Prophet Parish in Ouray, at the spot where the van's tracks went off the side of the mountain.

They walked along the road until they spotted the van down below. It was on its side in the frozen river.

The two male passengers climbed out and began searching for a way up the mountain to get help. Then they saw Father Foshage and Garcia at the top hollering that help was on its way. Within minutes, sirens echoed through the canyon. The rescue effort took about an hour and a half.

"We just felt the need to go to church the next night," Linda said.

The family hopes the fact they were all wearing seat belts will be an example to others.

Most importantly, they said the event strengthened them individually and as a family. They said they appreciate each other more and embrace God's purpose for their lives.

Catholic-Methodist dialogue issues report on church as communion

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Despite differences, there are many parallels in the way Catholics and Methodists foster and express communion with God and one another through their respective church structures, says a report released May 13 by the U.S. Catholic-United Methodist dialogue.

The 20,000-word report, titled "Through Divine Love: The Church in Each Place and All Places," is the result of nine dialogue sessions over the past five years.

Through the biblical concept of koinonia — communion or fellowship — it clarifies the theology of the church as developed in the Catholic and Methodist traditions, with their different understandings of local and universal church.

It explores the church as a means of grace and differences and commonalities in Catholic and Methodist views of mission, baptism and Eucharist.

In its conclusion the report cites "the imperative of common mission for all." It encourages Catholics and Methodists to continue current collaboration and develop new ways of "deepening common witness."

The report says looking at the church through the lens of koinonia enabled the dialogue to discuss a "shared vision of the church as a partnership of divine love" that is articulated through "sharing of a common faith, a common sacramental life, bonds of love and communion, and a common witness, proclaiming the Gospel to the world."

Catholics regard baptism as initiation "into the universal church thought of simultaneously and barely distinguishably as both the Catholic Church and the body of Christ," it says.

Apart from certain limited pastoral exceptions, the Catholic Church admits to the Eucharist only those who are baptized and in "full communion in the bonds of the profession of faith, the sacraments and ecclesial governance," it says.

Austria honors pope's brother for contributions to science, art

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In the presence of his younger brother, the pope, Msgr. Georg Ratzinger was awarded Austria's highest honor for contributions to science and art.

Helmut Turk, Austria's ambassador to the Vatican, presented the Austrian Cross of Honor for Science and Art to the 81-year-old Msgr. Ratzinger during a brief ceremony May 19 at the Vatican.

Msgr. Ratzinger is a musician and composer who for years directed Germany's famous Regensburg boys' choir.

The Austrian honor cited Msgr. Ratzinger's "30 years of cultural ties with Austria."

Pope asks Macedonia to allow religion classes in elementary schools

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope

Benedict XVI asked the government of Macedonia to keep its promise to allow religion to be taught in public elementary schools.

"Knowledge enlightened by faith, far from dividing communities, binds peoples together in the common search for truth, which defines every human as one who lives by belief," the pope said May 19 during a ceremony welcoming Macedonia's new ambassador to the Vatican.

Slightly more than 2 million people live in the small Balkan nation; the Vatican estimates there are about 15,000 Catholics in the former Yugoslav republic, which gained independence in 1991.

Pope Benedict told the new ambassador, Bartolomej Kajtazi, that the future stability and social and economic progress of his nation will depend to a large extent on efforts to improve the country's education system.

Kajtazi told the pope his country had put much effort into building a "more humane and prosperous" nation, "and on this difficult path a great progress has been achieved."

Vatican foreign minister says pope committed to united Europe

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — German-born Pope Benedict XVI is as committed as any of his predecessors to promoting a united Europe based on shared ethical and moral values, the Vatican foreign minister said.

Archbishop Giovanni Lajolo, Vatican secretary for relations with states, represented the Holy See at the May 16-17 summit of the Council of Europe in Warsaw, Poland.

The archbishop told the heads of government that former Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, now Pope Benedict, had proposed "a number of considerations, both historical and doctrinal, on the subject of European unity and values, which remain relevant and worthy of attention."

Europe will serve as an agent of peace in the world, he said, only if it:

— Promotes human dignity and human rights, especially freedom of conscience and of religion.

— Promotes solidarity.

— Respects national and cultural identities.

Archbishop Lajolo also said European institutions — social and religious — must find ways to ensure that the growth of individual freedom does not become even more divorced from the reality of social responsibility.

While the Council of Europe is focused on the continent, the archbishop said, Europeans must recognize that co-operation with the United States and Canada is "indispensable for maintaining peace in a globalized world."

Archbishop Lajolo said the Council of Europe can count on the Vatican and on the Catholic Church to continue assisting the process of European unity and cohesion through its teaching, its charitable work and its commitment to ecumenical and interreligious dialogue.

House of Mercy purchases minivan with grant

BELMONT — House of Mercy, Inc., a nonprofit residence for persons living with advanced AIDS, received a $10,000 grant from The Hackett Foundation based in Clinton, N.J.

As reported in The Gaston Gazette, the grant money has been applied toward the purchase of a 2004 Chevrolet Venture van that will be used to take residents to medical appointments and on recreational outings.

House of Mercy staff also will use the van for errands such as grocery shopping for the residents.

"The minivan replaces a 1994 station wagon with over 86,000 miles that was badly rusted with a well-worn interior," said Stan Patterson, House of Mercy president.

"Our residents, especially those limited to wheelchairs, will have easier access into and out of the minivan," he said.

The Hackett Foundation's funding priorities are Catholic missions, religious orders, social service agencies and schools for the handicapped/disabled primarily located in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania.

House of Mercy was founded in 1991 by the Sisters of Mercy in Belmont to provide housing and 24-hour care for low-income persons living with advanced AIDS. More than 200 men and women have made their home at House of Mercy where physical, psychological and spiritual support are provided to residents.

House of Mercy is the only facility of its type in the region. This year, 50 percent of their admissions have been women. On average, 72 percent of residents at House of Mercy have been minorities and almost 30 percent have been female.

PARISH PARTY

New members welcomed at basilica

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — The Family Life Commission of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville recently held a parish picnic to welcome 150 new parishioners.

The gathering was held after the noon Mass May 15.

Although rain forced the picnic inside, the weather did not dampen the spirit of the celebration. Parishioners enjoyed a buffet lunch with entertainment provided by the Hispanic choir accompanied by guitars and keyboard.

Juan Antonio Garcia, coordinator of Hispanic ministry for the Asheville Vicariate and emcee of the gathering, led the choir and spoke of plans to implement Spanish and English prayer groups in the near future.

Games were available for the children, while adults enjoyed some spontaneous dancing around the hall.

Deacon Curtiss Todd retires, reflects as vice chancellor of diocese

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — After almost 12 years as vice chancellor, Deacon Curtiss Todd is still impressed by the growth in the Diocese of Charlotte and the Catholic Church.

"When I came here, we had 700-800 employees in the Diocese of Charlotte," he said. "Now, we have almost 2,000 employees."

Deacon Todd officially retired as vice chancellor May 20. He was honored with a retirement party at the diocesan Pastoral Center. Msgr. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor for the diocese, expressed his gratitude for Deacon Todd's years of service.

Then-Bishop John F. Donoghue appointed Deacon Todd as vice chancellor Aug. 9, 1993. Already in service to the diocese as a permanent deacon at Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte, Deacon Todd, a father of four, described the appointment as an answer to a prayer.

Employed with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission since 1971, Deacon Todd had been serving as acting director in Charlotte.

"One of my daily prayers became, 'Please let me be able to retire from my current job and get a job in the church,'" he said.

His prayer became a reality in June 1993 when the EEOC offered early retirement. Seeking full-time work with the diocese, the vice chancellor appointment was a pleasant surprise.

"I was thinking in terms of vacuuming the floors," he said with a smile, candidly admitting he would have taken any diocesan position.

Deacon Todd was never asked to clean floors, but since his appointment as vice chancellor, he has taken on a number of extra duties.

In addition to serving as director of Human Resources, writing a number of diocesan policies — including the personnel policy handbook, managers' manual and sexual misconduct policy — and overseeing the diocesan archives and The Catholic News & Herald, Deacon Todd was appointed as vicar of African American Affairs Ministry in February 1995 by then-Bishop William G. Curlin in a move to give more visibility to African-American Catholics.

"As vice chancellor, Deacon Todd touches the lives of all in the diocese and adds great importance to his new assignment as vicar for African American Affairs," said Bishop Curlin in December 1994. "I see this as a marvelous opportunity to extend the love of the church to the community at large, especially the African-American community."

The ministry's focuses included the annual Martin Luther King Jr. celebrations and tent revivals.

"The ministry has always been open to people of all colors," said Deacon Todd. "One goal was to minister to people of African-American descent, while at the same time making other cultures aware of the positive contributions, talents and abilities of African Americans to the church and the world."

In 1996, Deacon Todd was appointed to the U.S. bishops' National Advisory Council and served as a member for four years.

twice a year to pray, study, deliberate and offer recommendations to the U.S. bishops before their meetings.

Deacon Todd had said that, because the council members did not represent any constituency, they were able to bring "their own backgrounds and opinions and spirituality to the meetings."

The son of a Catholic mother and Episcopalian father, Deacon Todd's early years brought him exposure to both religions, but he was briefly drawn to the Lutheran church after high school.

In his 30s, Deacon Todd studied different denominations, but the seed of Catholicism planted by his mother remained.

"Then I started feeling 'something is missing, something is wrong and I need to do something with my life,'" he said.

He then discovered that the religions he studied had roots back to an individual church leader, not to Christ. His epiphany came when he realized the Catholic Church to be the only religion he could trace directly to Jesus Christ.

"I joined, and went through instructions," said Deacon Todd.

As a permanent deacon, Deacon Todd was recently transferred to St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte.

"Service, plain and simple, is the call of the diaconate," said Deacon Todd. "It's service to God and the church," but it's not limited to the parish. Service includes the workplace, community and home.

And a strong and true relationship with Jesus is vital to the future of the Catholic Church, he said.

"I would like the church — meaning the people, everyone in the diocese — to establish and develop a true and honest relationship with Jesus," he said, "knowing without a doubt what he would say, think and do in any situation."

"If and when that happens, it will eliminate racism, egotism, self importance and so on," he said. "We would not have any concerns about the church, for it would truly become what Jesus intended it to be."

Among Deacon Todd's fondest memories with the diocese are the friendships he has made and his work as vice chancellor, specifically "being able to do whatever I could to keep the church in compliance with both church law and civil law."

As for the future?

"I plan to take it one day at a time," he said.

SHELBY — Matt Gehring and John Reuscher, members of Boy Scout Troop 101, recently earned the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rank in Boy Scouts.

Matt and John, parishioners of St. Mary Church in Shelby and seniors at Shelby High School, received their recognition during ceremonies in April and May. Father Eric Houseknecht, pastor of St. Mary Church and Christ the King Church in Kings Mountain, gave the invocations and closing prayers at the ceremonies.

Both Matt and John earned their rank with separate service projects performed at Crowders Mountain State Park in Kings Mountain to improve park access for handicapped visitors.

Matt refurbished portions of a trail and picnic area near the park's lake, while John refurbished portions of a different trail and the fishing access areas along the lake. Both projects allowed better wheelchair access to the refurbished areas.

Monstrance blessed by late pope to lead Eucharistic Congress procession in Diocese of Charlotte

BY DAVID HAINS

SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

CHARLOTTE — A monstrance blessed by Pope John Paul II to encourage prayers for vocations to the priesthood and religious life during 2005 will be making a stop in the Diocese of Charlotte on its yearlong tour through the United States and Canada.

The papal monstrance, which is an exposition case and stand used to display the Eucharist for adoration, will be carried by Bishop Peter J. Jugis during the procession for the inaugural Eucharistic Congress through uptown Charlotte Saturday morning, Sept. 24.

After the procession, the monstrance will display the Eucharist in a chapel in the Charlotte Convention Center, site of the congress, and will be available for adoration throughout the day.

The night before the congress, Sept. 23, the Eucharist in the monstrance also will be used for nocturnal adoration at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte.

In addition to the procession, the Eucharistic Congress will feature music and well-known Catholic speakers.

"The goal is to send the monstrance to different dioceses to promote prayer services centered on adoration of the consecrated host," said Father Edward J. Burns, executive director of the Secretariat for Vocations and Priestly Formation for the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB).

Given by the Vatican to the USCCB, the monstrance will be taken to different U.S. and Canadian dioceses during 2005. Bishop Jugis requested the use of the monstrance for the Eucharistic Congress.

"It's impossible to exaggerate the close relationship between the Eucharist and vocations to priestly life," said Father John Putnam, director of vocations for the Diocese of Charlotte and pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury.

"Every vocation is a special grace from God and our greatest source of grace is the Eucharist," said Father Putnam. "The monstrance helps everyone focus on the Eucharist as the principal source of grace from God."

Along with the USCCB, the logistics of the tour schedule are being handled by the USA Council of Serra International, a Catholic organization of laity dedicated to promoting vocations to the priesthood and religious life. The monstrance is scheduled to arrive in Charlotte in a custom-made case Sept. 22.

The monstrance is one of six blessed by Pope John Paul II in November 2004 to promote Eucharistic adoration during the 2004-2005 Year of the Eucharist. Latin America, Europe, Asia, Africa and the Pacific each received a monstrance as a symbol of the connection between the sacrament of the Eucharist and priestly vocations.

The year of the Eucharist began Oct. 17, 2004, and will conclude in October with a world Synod of Bishops in Rome, focusing on the Eucharist as its theme.

'SACRAMENT OF UNITY'

Vatican ecumenist says sharing Communion means sharing faith

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

ROME — The Catholic Church believes the Eucharist is a sacrament that strengthens the unity of the church because those who share Communion profess the same faith, said the Vatican's chief ecumenist.

To say "Amen" and receive Communion means "I fully agree with what has been said and what has been done," said Cardinal Walter Kasper, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.

Acknowledging the Eucharist as a memorial of Christ's last meal with his disciples is not enough, the cardinal said, responding to questions after a May 19 talk on "The Sacrament of Unity: The Eucharist and the Church."

Cardinal Kasper's talk at the Atonement Friars' Centro Pro Unione in Rome was drawn largely from his new book of the same title.

Saying "Amen" means acknowledging Christ's real presence in the Eucharist and the sacrificial value of the Eucharist for the forgiveness of sins and the transformation of the world, the cardinal said, but it also means accepting that the Eucharist is celebrated in communion with the pope and united with the prayers of the Blessed Virgin Mary and all the saints.

Because complete agreement between Catholics and other Christians is lacking on one or more of the points of faith, eucharistic sharing is permitted only in limited circumstances and usually requires the approval of the local bishop, Cardinal Kasper said.

The restrictions the Catholic Church places on Christians receiving the Eucharist at each other's services, he said, "are not external disciplinary decisions of the church," but the logical consequences of saying "Amen."

"We do not invite all Catholics (to Communion) either," he said.

Those who are in a state of sin or who cannot answer yes to the question "Does your life correspond to what is celebrated here?" are asked not to receive, he said.

"Ecumenism is not a political, diplomatic or purely pragmatic undertaking," he said. "It is primarily a spiritual concern," a matter of all Christians converting to deeper faith in Jesus, being open to the call of the Holy Spirit and, finally, being able to express full unity in faith by sharing the Eucharist.

"The point of ecumenical dialogue is not that we should abandon our own identity but that we should let it be purified, grow and mature," he said.

Church unity, the cardinal said, does not mean church uniformity, but neither does it mean accepting contradictory positions.

"The goal of this development is a unity that unambiguously excludes contradictions, but regards a plurality of cultures, languages, rites, customs and theologies in the church not as a defect, but as a valued treasure," he said.

Cardinal Kasper said Protestants are not the only Christians who must delve deeper into the meaning and importance of the Eucharist in order to make eucharistic sharing possible. Many Catholics, too, need to recover their awareness of the sacrificial meaning of the Eucharist, he said.

"The world in which we live is not whole and happy: Our reality is marked by conflicts, where unity has been impaired and ruptured and people cry out for healing and reconciliation," he said.

Jesus shared his last meal with his disciples on the eve of his suffering and death not as a fraternal farewell, but to underline the connection between the meal and the sacrifice of his life for the reconciliation of humanity with God, the cardinal said.

"It is only the sacrificial character" of the Last Supper that "explains how the Mass is a fellowship meal," he said.

It is through sharing the blood of Christ that men and women become brothers and sisters; "hence, sacrifice and unity belong together," he said.

"The sacrificial character preserves the Eucharist from banal trivialization, and only this dimension gives the Eucharist its true depth: For in this world — deformed as it is by sin — unity and peace cannot be achieved along any other path than that of forgiveness," Cardinal Kasper said.

The cardinal also said that Catholics must recognize that "the Eucharist as sacrament of unity is not possible without the sacrament of forgiveness, the sacrament of penance."

The Gospel calls believers to seek reconciliation with one another before approaching God, acknowledging that sin not only offends God, but sets one outside the community of believers and weakens the community, he said.

Rince na h'Eireann's Junior Mixed (boys and girls) Ceili team achieved fourth place at the World Championships dance competition in Ireland March 20-27.

Charlotte dancers earn world championship titles

CHARLOTTE — Among its many accolades, Charlotte can now declare itself the home of several of the newest world champions of traditional Irish dance.

Charlotte's School of Traditional Irish Dance, Rince na h'Eireann, sent 29 dancers to Ennis, County Clare, Ireland to compete in the World Championships March 20-27. The dancers represented both Charlotte and the United States while competing against more than 4,000 other world qualifiers representing more than 20 countries.

Patrick Quinlivan earned the United States' highest placing medal in his competition, finishing fourth among 47 world qualifiers in the Boys (15-16) category.

Pierce Beach received top honors with a 16th place finish in the Men's (16-17) event.

Because of their performances, both young men will compete at the 2006 World Championships in Belfast, Ireland, next spring. Both also will represent their school and city at the North American Nationals in Nashville, Tenn., in July.

In the team categories, also earning one of the highest ranking U.S. finishes, Rince na h'Eireann's Junior Mixed (boys & girls) Ceili achieved fourth place. The school qualified four teams to compete at this World Championship, an unprecedented number for the competition usually dominated by wins from overseas competitors.

Rince na h'Eireann, which translates to "Dance of Ireland," was founded by Sandra Connick, a native of County Cork, Ireland. Connick, who has worked with the Diocese of Charlotte's Catholic school system, has worked with cultural enrichment programs in Mecklenburg County schools and currently lectures on Irish dance at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

PEACE, JUSTICE AND LUNCH

Just Second Fridays brings speakers on social justice to downtown Charlotte

BY JOSEPH PURELLO

SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

CHARLOTTE — Even in the midst of a busy workday, it is still possible to add a side of justice to your lunch.

Just Second Fridays, a lunchtime speaker series held the second Friday of each month in the Annex Building of St. Peter Church in Charlotte, covers a variety of topics on justice, peace and business ethics. The program is a partnership of the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace, Catholic Social Services and St. Peter Church.

The program aims to develop, in the hearts and minds of attendees, a rhythm of being engaged in theological and ethical exploration, reflection and discussion of a variety of social justice concerns.

Participation will hopefully lead to greater advocacy on behalf of justice and new or renewed direct action in the lives of those who are marginalized and threatened in society.

Msgr. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor for the Diocese of Charlotte, hoped "the education received from those who attend will lead and inspire the faithful to act more deeply and more often for justice in their community."

"Therefore, the ultimate benefits of this program are fruits that will be given and received long past the actual date and time of participation," he said.

The program's concept was inspired by Jesuit Father Fred Kammer's "Doing Faithjustice," a book that discusses the intimate connection between justice and faith as developed in the Judeo-Christian tradition.

Father Kammer states "the single word forged of the two concepts undercuts those who would elevate one concept over the other, render one instrumental to the other, separate the two, or otherwise downplay the importance of one."

Just Second Fridays events are scheduled to encourage the attendance of people of all ages, many of whom would not be able to attend such an event at night or on a weekend.

Upcoming topics at summer lectures include "Debt as a Moral Issue — International and U.S. Perspectives," "Overcoming Workplace Barriers" and "The Catholic Church's Teaching on End of Life Issues."

Joseph Purello is director of the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace.

Centered on God

Ancient prayer practice taught at workshop

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — In the early days of the Christian church, contemplative prayer was commonly practiced. Following the Protestant Reformation, this spiritual tradition, an ancient way of knowing God through love in silence, was virtually abandoned.

In the past 30 years, contemplative, or centering, prayer has been revived. Three Trappist monks — Abbot Thomas Keating, Father William Meninger and Father Basil Pennington — distilled ancient centering prayer practices into a simple method of prayer.

St. Ann Church recently hosted a one-day workshop on centering prayer. Paul Supina and John Kelsey, members of Contemplative Outreach Network, presented instruction in the tradition and method of centering prayer at the workshop May 14.

"Centering prayer is a method of prayer that prepares us to receive God's presence in stillness," said Bill Cahill, a parishioner of St. Ann Church who has been practicing centering prayer for more than 35 years.

Cahill attended the workshop along with more than a dozen people from a variety of faith traditions, including Catholic, Lutheran and Episcopalian.

"Those attending the workshop enjoyed the simplicity and silence of the prayer," said Cahill.

Another participant said the workshop was ecumenical in nature and most fulfilling, because "normally one says prayers. In this practice, prayer finds you."

"Centering prayer is based in Catholic monastic prayer," said Father Conrad Hoover, pastor of St. Ann Church.

It is drawn from ancient prayer practices of the Christian contemplative heritage, notably those of St. John of the Cross, St. Teresa of Avila and others.

Centering prayer consists of four steps: choose a sacred word as the symbol of the intention to consent to God's presence and action within; sit comfortably with eyes closed and silently introduce the sacred word as the symbol of your consent to God's presence and action within; when engaged with thoughts, return gently to the sacred word; at the end of the prayer period, remain in silence with eyes closed for a couple of minutes.

"Though we think of prayer as thoughts or feeling expressed in words, this is only one expression," as stated on the Contemplative Outreach Network Web site. "Contemplative prayer is a prayer of silence, an experience of God's presence as the ground in which our being is rooted, the source from whom our life emerges at every moment."

According to the Web site, "Christian contemplative prayer is the opening of mind and heart — our whole being — to God, the 'Ultimate Mystery,' beyond thoughts, words and emotions, whom we know by faith is within us, closer than breathing, closer than thinking, closer than choosing — closer than consciousness itself."

"Each person's spiritual practice is a unique journey with God, and it changes from year to year," said Cahill. "Centering prayer allows a special sense of God's grace to be in one's life."

Charlotte Catholic chapel dedicated by bishop closed-circuit television.

The 300-seat chapel was completed in 2004 after nearly two years of construction and will be used for Mass, daily prayer services, worship and reconciliation.

The school's previous chapel had proven too small to meet the school's needs. When Augustinian Father Jim Cassidy, now pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe, was principal of Charlotte Catholic, he envisioned a larger chapel that would accommodate a few hundred students.

During the Mass, students, alumnae, former principals and diocesan leadership watched as Bishop Jugis blessed the chapel with holy water, holy chrism oil and incense, "to signify the superabundant grace and holiness of the sacrifice of Christ."

Bishop Jugis said Jesus Christ is perpetually at the center of life in the chapel.

"Everything flows from the altar, and flows back to the altar," said Bishop Jugis. "Here is the heart ... the spiritual center of this community."

Bishop Jugis noted the chapel's prominent position at the front entrance of the school, thereby signifying the prominence of Christ in the students' lives.

Bishop Jugis said he depends on young people to push forward with enthusiasm for Christ and the Catholic Church.

"You are to be spiritual altars, offering the sacrifice of a holy life in your language, behavior and attitude," the bishop told the students. "United to Christ, you can all become spiritual altars."

Following the dedication Mass, Jim Kelley, diocesan director of development, unveiled a plaque outside the chapel dedicating the chapel in honor of Constance Keffer. Keffer and her husband, Dick, are the parents of four Charlotte Catholic graduates.

Principal Jerry Healy said he hopes the chapel will make Charlotte Catholic High School a better place for all its students.

IHM School unveils new Web site

HIGH POINT — After many months of hard work, the Community Relations Committee at Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point has unveiled a redesigned school Web site.

The committee was formed last summer by Principal Wanda Garrett with the goal of creating and maintaining a multiphase public relations program.

During this academic year, the committee created the Web site and began work on a long-term marketing plan.

It also publishes the monthly school newsletter, "The Eagle Eye"; conducts a media relations program; creates magazine advertisements promoting the school; sponsored a school-wide tagline contest; created a Parent Resource Guide; organized an open house and instituted a "get-to-know-us" project among area realtors, chambers of commerce and visitors' centers.

The committee has received assistance in their projects from non-members, as well.

"It never ceases to amaze me how talented the parents of this school community are and how generous they are with their gifts," said Debby Davis, chairperson. "This year's accomplishments have truly been a group effort."

they got musical instruments: kazoos and recorders. They also received craft items so they can make beaded bracelets and bookmarks to sell.

"We ask (via e-mail) before we go what she needs and each packs an extra suitcase with supplies," Priest said.

At the new hospital they dropped off over-the-counter medications such as prenatal vitamins, child and adult multivitamins, Tylenol and diabetes test kits.

Indeed, there is much the hospital doesn't have: no intensive care unit, no equipment in the operating room, no monitors at the nurses' stations.

It was Somotillo's needs that Maryknoll Sister Joan Uhlen spoke about at St. William and Immaculate Heart of Mary churches during a visit in 2003. Father George Kloster, pastor of both churches, had met her some years earlier. While pastor of St. Michael Church in Gastonia, that parish had become a sister community to Leon, Nicaragua, near Somotillo.

After Sister Uhlen's visit, the two parishes formed the Somotillo Committee: Susan Haley, chair; Priest, Otte, Sister Martin, Mary Colabella and Mike Regner. Committee members visit Somotillo every spring and fall to take supplies to the community and assess its needs.

St. William and Immaculate Heart of Mary churches' fundraising events provide the money.

Life in Somotillo

Somotillo, a city of 30,000 near the Nicaraguan-Honduran border, has public schools that require the students to wear uniforms — white shirts and dark blue slacks or skirts — and arrive at 7:30 a.m.

For the poorest children, however, uniforms are out of reach. Many children are their families' sole support and cannot get to school that early.

They shine shoes or wash truck tires muddied by the region's mostly unpaved roads.

San Ignacio Primary School, grades one through eight, was created for them.

"In the third grade, more than half the children work before and after school," Priest said. "Some go to the Honduran border to sell oranges, shine shoes and, sadly for some, prostitution."

Teachers at the agricultural school in Somotillo, Nicaragua, celebrate the birthday of Sister Rachel Penal (back row, center). Joining in are Joan Otte (back row, left) and Sister Terry Martin (back row, right) of the Somotillo Committee of St. William and Immaculate Heart of Mary churches.

"One of the first-grade girls we met gets up at 4:30 a.m. to make and sell 80-plus tortillas before school," she said. "The teachers say she often sleeps through some of the day."

Unlike the public school, San Ignacio doesn't require uniforms and has morning and afternoon sessions to accommodate its working students. It's considered a private school because it gets much of its support from sources such as the Somotillo Committee, although teachers' salaries are paid by the Nicaraguan government: $90 and a bag of food monthly for each teacher.

In addition to the academic curriculum, students learn life skills: baking and gardening in the school's kitchen and garden. The principal, Marling Lainz, told the Somotillo Committee that other schools are beginning to imitate San Ignacio.

However, there are still many needs. The 187 students have no textbooks, no playground equipment in the barely grassed schoolyard, where the children eat their lunches.

Over at the day-care center, where children ages 1 to 6 are cared for from 6:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., there is now safety fencing of a sort.

"Sister Terry, Joan and I left $80 for gates to be installed at all the doorways to prevent the children from wandering into the street or out in the yard near an open well," Priest said. "We left several puppets, but still there are not enough toys for infants and preschoolers."

Growing changes

When Sister Uhlen spoke to parishioners in western North Carolina, she was dreaming of an agricultural school. She died in February 2004, shortly after Jesus Rios Andrade was hired as principal of the new agricultural school.

Sister Penal, who had worked with her for several years, has stayed on.

Independent of government assistance, the school operates on donations and fund-raising projects.

"The tuition is 8 córdobas a month (about 50 cents)," Priest said. "Those parents who cannot afford the tuition will come and do work at the school. All parents are required to do two days of work a year at the school. Some donate rice and beans."

The Somotillo Committee helps the agricultural school financially.

"Our scholarship donations help pay for tuition, registration, uniforms, teachers' salaries, supplies, maintenance, lunch, photocopies (there are no textbooks)," Priest said.

"Some students live as far as 17 miles from school. Teachers and students walk, ride bicycles or horses to school; 80 percent of the students walk to school," she said. "Currently a few teachers and eight long-distance students are boarding at the school. There are three small rooms with metal bunk bed cots."

Priest said the goal of the agricultural school is to teach students how to raise and produce food for themselves and their families and for the lunch program.

"Anything left over they will sell," she said. "Jesus, the teachers and students have proven that they can produce a diversity of crops."

Parents are learning, too.

"The parents are encouraged to come watch, learn and try these same methods at home," Priest said. "The school provides the seed and follows up on progress at the students' homes."

"They are trying to grow mostly organic foods," she said. "They are trying to change the mindset of local farmers who believe that only by using chemicals will they be able to grow good crops."

Priest, who teaches language arts to fifth graders at Hayesville Middle School, is most impressed with "the passion and dedication of the teachers."

"This is where you can see it's for the love of what they do, there're no other rewards, and then to see what the kids have to do to get to school," she said.

Schiavo's parents meet pope at end of his general audience sented him with a framed gift featuring two pictures of Schiavo and the Prayer of St. Francis.

The pope exchanged a few words with the couple, and an aide took the gift.

Meeting the pope and shaking his hand "was totally overwhelming," said Bob Schindler.

"There's an electricity that goes right through you," he told Catholic News Service May 19.

At the end of his weekly general audiences, Pope Benedict greets audience members who are seated in two special sections near his chair. The Schindlers were seated along the barricade in the front row of one of the sections.

Schindler said the framed gift they gave the pope contained "memorial photos of Terri and the Prayer of St. Francis, which was one of Terri's favorite prayers." The prayer begins, "Lord, make me an instrument of your peace."

He said the pope "recognized Terri and said her name. He was very gracious."

The Schindlers traveled to Rome "to express our gratitude to the Vatican for all it had done" in helping speak out in defense of their daughter's right to life.

Schiavo died March 31, nearly two weeks after a court ordered her feeding tube to be disconnected. She had been in what doctors defined as a persistent vegetative state since 1990.

On May 17, the Schindlers met with Cardinal Renato Martino, head of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, who had spoken out against the U.S.

courts' decisions not to allow the reinsertion of Schiavo's feeding tube. He had called it "an unjust death sentence of an innocent person."

In his meeting with the couple, Cardinal Martino reiterated his condemnation of "the killing of this woman in one of the most inhumane and cruel ways, through hunger and thirst," according to a written statement released May 17 by the council.

The statement said the Schindlers "expressed their appreciation to the cardinal for making bold efforts to save the life of their daughter" who was "practically condemned to die by the U.S. courts on the petition of the woman's husband."

Terri Schiavo's husband, Michael Schiavo, wanted the feeding tube removed, saying it was what his wife would have wanted. However, the Schindlers fought a seven-year legal battle with Michael Schiavo over the right to make medical decisions for her.

Schindler told CNS that they asked the Vatican to help them in their continuing crusade against euthanasia.

"We set up a foundation for Terri five years ago to help her, but now we want it to continue so that we can help others and make sure this never happens again," he said.

Through their Web site, www.terrisfight.org, the Schindler family said it hopes to create a sort of clearinghouse or "consumer advocacy" site that people can use to receive help with cases similar to Schiavo's.

Schindler said the massive media attention paid to his daughter's plight put a previously unknown dilemma in the public eye.

"People had been unaware dehydration and starvation is commonly happening" throughout the United States as a way to bring about the death of some patients determined to be in persistent vegetative states, he said.

Schindler said the Vatican officials they spoke to offered their assistance in "helping to theologically interpret a case."

"We need the support of the church and all religious denominations in re-educating people" about the sanctity of all human life, Schindler said.

The Schindlers were accompanied on their trip to Rome and the Vatican by Anthony DeStefano, executive director of Priests for Life, which Schindler said "partially sponsored" the family's trip.

In their meeting with Cardinal Martino, the Schindlers were accompanied by members of the Missionaries of the Gospel of Life, a new society of apostolic life based in Amarillo, Texas.

The justice and peace council statement said that representatives of the group were to present the Holy See with the statutes of the new society of priests, deacons, brothers and seminarians that promotes pro-life ministry.

The statement said Cardinal Martino "encouraged the initiatives of the new association for the defense of human life from conception to its natural end."

It said he noted that the threat to human life is found not only in abortion and euthanasia, "but also in the death penalty, war, terrorism, the destruction or manipulation of human embryos, decimation caused by famines or devastation of the environment."

Pope says brutality must be remembered to keep current, future peace

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — History's most brutal and oppressive events, including Nazi Germany's aggression, must be remembered so as to help guide future generations along the path toward peace and reconciliation, said Pope Benedict XVI.

"We have a duty to remind ourselves, especially young people, of what forms of unheard-of violence can be reached," the pope said after a public screening of a film based on Karol Wojtyla's life in Nazi-occupied, then communist-ruled Poland.

Together with some 6,000 guests, Pope Benedict watched the made-for-TV movie, "Karol: The Man Who Became Pope," in the Vatican's Paul VI hall May 19, the day after Pope John Paul II would have celebrated his 85th birthday.

The special, invitation-only screening was held less than two weeks after the 60th anniversary of the end of World War II in Europe, which put an end to "that huge tragedy that sowed destruction and death in Europe and the world," said Pope Benedict.

The Italian-made film portrays the late pontiff's early life, starting with Nazi Germany's 1939 invasion of Poland, followed by the communist repression of his homeland and ending with his election as pope at the Vatican in 1978.

The movie was based on the Vatican-approved book, "Stories of Karol: The Unknown Life of John Paul II," written by Gian Franco Svidercoschi.

In his May 19 address to audience members at the film's conclusion, the German-born pope noted the "atrocious crimes" that revealed "all the evil wrapped up inside the Nazi ideology."

He said the film created emotionally charged scenes that recalled "the repression of the Polish people and the genocide of the Jews."

Born in Bavaria in 1927, Pope Benedict grew up in Germany during the time of the Nazis' rise to power and witnessed their expanding grip over other nations and peoples.

While he was a seminarian, school officials enrolled him in the Hitler Youth program; he soon stopped going to meetings.

He was drafted in 1943 and served for a year in an anti-aircraft unit that tracked Allied bombardments. At the end of the war he spent time in a U.S. prisoner-of-war camp.

In his speech, Pope Benedict asked what other than a "providential divine plan" would bring to the papacy a Pole followed by a German whose country attacked its neighbors — including Poland — with the "great virulence" of the Nazi regime.

Pope Benedict said that in their youth he and Pope John Paul "had to know the savagery of the Second World War and the insane violence of men against men, of peoples against peoples."

"Over the passage of time, memories must not fade; rather they must serve as serious lessons" for people now and for future generations, said Pope Benedict.

Watching the cruel and violent scenes in the movie "Karol" makes one "reflect on the abysses of wickedness that can hide in the human soul," he said.

But at the same time, it should also trigger the desire in every "righteous person" to feel the urge to do everything possible to keep such "inhumane savagery" from ever happening again, he said.

Let such reflections prompt people into dedicating themselves to help bring "peace in Europe and the whole world," he added.

Vatican press spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said Pope John Paul had seen the two-and-a-half-hour film in its entirety in a private viewing before his death April 2.

Navarro-Valls said the late pope "was very impressed" with the film's portrayal and "appreciated (the inclusion of) many scenes" from that period in his life.

The made-for-TV movie had been shown in a two-part series on Italian television April 18-19, the same two days the College of Cardinals were in a conclave and elected Pope Benedict.

We possess the hands of compassion

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

The gift bag is perched on the table next to the paper plate of cake and ice cream, and a sweating plastic cup of red punch. From a thicket of tissue paper a bottle of bath oil gleams, next to it a tube of skin cream.

A stuffed animal of indeterminate species peeks coyly over the top.

The wheelchair-bound woman at the table grins girlishly when the nurse's aide pushes the gift bag close enough to explore the contents. Nearby, other residents of the center wait, with varying levels of anticipation, as the volunteer birthday crew distributes cake and ice cream and punch.

Everyone sings "Happy Birthday" to the honoree. The leader of the volunteers stands next to her, one arm on her shoulder, the other guiding her hands to pull the gifts from the bag.

With intense concentration she bends down to enthuse over each of the small treasures and listens carefully to the woman's response.

A less-seasoned volunteer watches in wonder as his mentor tends to the frail, elderly woman in the wheelchair. He marvels at the quality of the care he witnesses, the attentiveness of the listening, the gentleness of the hand-holding.

When, after 20 minutes or so, the old woman is wheeled back to bed, spent from the exertion of the party, he notices her beatifically happy smile and knows that he has just witnessed the mercy of God.

Sunday's Gospel, with its story of Jesus seeking out sinners and outcasts, calls his followers to do the same. As he reminds his pious and judgmental critics of the prophetic insight about God's preference for mercy and compassion rather than letter-perfect religious practice, we are reminded to be aware of those who are abandoned, forgotten, scorned.

We are called to reach out the hand of companionship and friendship.

Questions:

What opportunities is your life giving you to exercise mercy to those in need? Who are the outsiders in your parish, and what is one way you might reach out to include them?

'Cinderella Man' is a knockout

Russell Crowe and Paul Giamatti star in "Cinderella Man," a moving true-life story of James Braddock, a Depression-era boxer (Crowe in top form) who — after several years out of the ring — took up fighting again to support his wife and children, and against all odds made a tremendous comeback. Director Ron Howard has made an absorbing film with first-rate performances and authentic period flavor; the boxing sequences are far less graphic than similarly themed films, and the human story of Jimmy's devotion to his family is paramount. Much period profanity, some crude language, ring violence with blood. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

'Ninth Day' director says chance to helm film 'like a call' from God

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Volker Schlöndorff, who directed the World War II drama "The Ninth Day," said that being offered the opportunity to direct the film was "like a call" from God similar to his understanding in high school he was meant to make movies.

"The Ninth Day" is the fictional tale of a Luxembourg priest who is released from the Nazis' Dachau concentration camp in Germany in 1942; thousands of clergymen were imprisoned in barracks there.

But the priest learns his release is just a nine-day furlough to return home so he can try to convince his bishop to drop his resistance to the Nazi occupation.

While fictional in content, the story is based on a real-life priest, Father Jean Bernard, who kept a journal of his time in Dachau. Father Bernard himself was released for nine days to return to Luxembourg, but he never wrote anything about this period of freedom.

Father Bernard was returned to Dachau and was released from the camp upon its liberation by the Allies. Free once more, he resumed his leadership role in the International Catholic Organization for Cinema and Audiovisuals — now part of what is known today as Signis — and served the group until 1972.

He was made a bishop in 1955 and died in Luxembourg in 1994.

The prisoner number assigned to Father Bernard in Dachau became part of the title of his book of life under Nazism, "Priest Block 25487." It is also the number given to the movie's fictional priest, Father Henri Kremer.

While the nine days of leave the priest was given is accurate, Schlöndorff said he would have used that figure in the title anyway because it ties in to the novena, a nine-day series of prayers.

He said his priest-protagonist was tempted to let down his own resistance to the Nazis.

"Who could have known that the will to obey was greater than the will to live?" Schlöndorff said.

"The Ninth Day" is a "quietly compelling" movie and "a powerful film that deserves recognition at Oscar time," said David DiCerto of the U.S. bishops' Office for Film & Broadcasting in his review.

"The picture is an intelligent and emotionally forceful meditation on faith, redemption and the cost of true discipleship," DiCerto added. It is classified A-III — adults by the bishops' film office. It is not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

Schlöndorff credits the Jesuits who taught him in France during his high school years with helping him discover his vocation as a filmmaker.

Schlöndorff was born a Protestant, "but they didn't try to convert me," he said of the Jesuits. Still, "I had my daughter baptized (a Catholic) and (had her) make her first Communion. And I go with her to church" in Berlin, where they live, he said. "I have never converted, but still, somehow, I consider myself a Catholic."

Asked about the German-born Pope Benedict XVI, Schlöndorff told CNS, "He is a very intelligent man. I have enjoyed reading his interviews for years and years, though I really don't agree with his conservative views. But if the church isn't conservative, it isn't really a church anymore."

He added, "I know that I would not want to be in his shoes."

Pope John Paul II's team of Vatican officials. But in his first major appointment, he picked an American, Archbishop William J. Levada of San Francisco, as his successor at the doctrinal congregation — a bold move that gratified many U.S. Catholics and lessened European influence in the Roman Curia.

In waiving the five-year waiting period for the start of Pope John Paul's sainthood cause, the pope showed he was listening to the popular voice of the church and recognized that rules are sometimes made to be set aside.

Two other decisions hinted at Pope Benedict's governing style:

— He opted not to preside at beatification liturgies, ending a 34-year practice. Although papal beatifications had become routine, the pope and others thought they created misunderstandings about the sainthood process.

— He shortened the October Synod of Bishops. In the past, the pope had said synods tend to exalt the role of bishops as delegates of local churches rather than as shepherds of their own flocks.

Back to basics

The pope's decisions and talks since his election April 19 seemed to show a desire to pare back to the essentials — at least as much as possible for a 21st-century pope.

At the same time, Pope Benedict understands that in many ways he is expected to be a "pope for all people."

In his first month, he spoke with various heads of state, international diplomats, Christian and non-Christian representatives, journalists, bishops from Africa and Asia, members of Rome's Catholic community, clergy, curial officials, pilgrim groups from around the world and, of course, the College of Cardinals.

At his weekly general audiences, the pope has grown increasingly relaxed with big crowds. He seems to genuinely enjoy riding his open jeep around the square, standing and waving as he holds onto a bar with one hand.

After his first general audience, the pope shook the hands of nearby bishops and left the scene.

Now he makes it a point to seek out the sick and lay people who have come for a personal blessing or to bring him gifts. He doesn't rush and usually has a few words for each.

The new pope's reception has been overwhelmingly positive. Many visitors are impressed by his easy and direct style, others by the simple fact that the church once again has a pope who can move through a crowd or improvise a talk.

Pope Benedict's talks and sermons have not been the high theology of books and conferences. Instead, he has focused on the basics during his first month: the church's evangelizing mission, the danger of losing sight of God and the priority of human life issues in modern society.

On several occasions, particularly around the feast of Pentecost, he has explained the church's purpose by recalling the words and witness of apostolic times. Even his nonliturgical talks, like his address to Sri Lankan bishops, have been built around passages from the New Testament.

Simple but effective

The pope has not dumbed down his message.

His sermon on Pentecost, for example, examined the relationship of human freedom, the gift of the law on Mount Sinai, the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, the church's mission and the Eucharist. But woven through the homily were straightforward statements about people's real limitations and the recognition that faith is often a struggle.

"We continually close our doors; we continually want to feel secure and do not want to be disturbed by others and by God," the pope said.

But Christ will come for us, he said, just as he passed through the closed doors to reach his disciples at Pentecost.

Likewise, on the feast of the Ascension, he offered a simple reflection on Christ's continued presence in the world, saying: "The Lord is always within hearing. We can inwardly draw away from him. We can live turning our backs on him. But he always waits for us and is always close to us."

Christ's tools

So far, Pope Benedict has spoken mostly about the essentials of church life and relatively little about contemporary social issues. Appeals for victims of disasters or violence, which made for easy headlines under Pope John Paul, seem to have disappeared.

The new pope is also meeting with fewer groups, especially from Italy such meetings used to fill the calendar of his predecessors. And so far he does not seem to feel the need to send messages or give speeches to participants of every meeting at the Vatican.

Perspectives

A collection of columns, editorials and viewpoints

The hot media topic today: religion

More to report than what media sees

I was happy in mid-April to pick up a new book by Joan Wester Anderson, a good friend I long have called "the angel lady." She titled this one "In the Arms of Angels, True Stories of Heavenly Guardians."

It was comforting to read more stories of amazing events that certainly appear to have unearthly origins.

For me, reading stories of how God never abandons us was timely. It seemed that media — from daily newspapers to TV stories to magazines that rarely have run religion reports — constantly were covering some aspect of religious news. Even Broadway shows and art museums were zeroing in on religious themes.

Some of the programs were done well, like one on NBC delving into "The DaVinci Code." That book has opened incredible speculation about what really happened during the life of Jesus Christ. The sales of this book, which claims that Mary Magdalene and Jesus were married and had a child, are off the chart.

The NBC program pointed out the fraud of this claim about Jesus and showed who dreamt it up. But the lie is rampant, and while I believe truth eventually will win, I don't think it will be soon.

The program that followed on NBC was "Revelations," called "a creepy thriller" about the war between good and evil. Advance publicity indicated that the show would be in the realm of the "Left Behind" novels dealing with the "end times," as supposedly written about in the Book of Revelation.

Not long ago I was on a radio program discussing my book about how Jesus has shaped my life. A man called in and challenged me, saying I should be talking about how the "warrior Jesus" was coming back to earth to destroy those who do not follow him.

I said I believed in the "loving Jesus."

The Bottom Line

ANTOINETTE BOSCO
CNS COLUMNIST

He countered, "Don't you believe in Revelation and the second coming of Christ?"

Yet another religious development — "roadside religious attractions" — was reported by Professor Timothy K. Beal in the April 15 issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education. This is a relatively new sign of "revelation" fervor.

He cited the "Cross Garden" in Alabama, "11 acres of fire-and-brimstone preaching crosses and apocalyptic appliances" as one example of encountering "faith in all its awesome absurdity."

No wonder I needed to read about comforting angels!

In her new book, Anderson tells a story of a teen-ager who read that Pope John Paul II would ask angels to surround a person in distress with aid or love in order to help calm the person. Then later, the teen, watching a news story about a woman threatening to jump off a bridge, said he followed the pope's example: "I sent angels to that woman."

Within 10 minutes, the distraught woman relaxed and walked into the welcoming arms of her family.

Our pope had just gone to his beloved Lord Jesus when I read this. Again, the media were focused on religion, but this time with respect.

Looking at the faith, the love, the teaching he lived, how could they do otherwise?

What does it take to understand the Bible?

Q. You often answer questions about the Bible, and I find them interesting. I'd like to learn a lot more, but sometimes I feel reading the Bible isn't that good for me since I'm certainly not an expert. There must be many more like me.

I like to read part of the New Testament every day. But how does an ordinary person, without a lot of education about the Bible, know he's getting out of it what he should? (Ohio)

A. First, I'm pleased you have the Bible as part of your everyday prayer life. St. Jerome, possibly the most noted Scripture scholar and translator in the history of the church, wrote once, "To live in the atmosphere of these holy books, to think about them constantly ..., is this not to live in the kingdom of heaven already, here on earth?"

That's what you're trying to do. Don't stop.

Jerome, who lived in the fourth century, gave a good answer to your question in a letter to one of his friends. Don't be put off reading the Scriptures by the language or other difficulties, he said.

Whatever those problems may be, "whoever comes along can find instruction so that, in one and the same sentence, both the learned and the ignorant can find plain meaning" (Letter to Paulinus).

What Jerome means is that reading Scripture in a spirit of faith and openness to God's word is always spiritually profitable. In fact, anyone who approaches the Bible with this attitude reaps far more benefits than one who has a lot of expert knowledge, but little faith.

In the Scriptures, God always speaks to us with intimate personal tenderness, love and power.

This does not deny that at least a little information about the background of the Bible and its individual books can make their reading more beneficial, and prevent much misunderstanding and confusion.

Very little of the Bible, for example, is straightforward history as we think of it. Every book is colored by the people who wrote it, when they wrote, the conditions of their culture and so on.

Most of it is a combination of a multitude of literary forms — poetry, parables, personal or community reflections on memorable events, legal documents, visions and other manifestations of God's influence over human events, prophecies — and, finally, the divinely inspired insights of the biblical writers who put together these revelations and experiences in the form we have them today.

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

In addition, all of what is now in the Bible was handed down by writing or word of mouth during a period of thousands of years. It is therefore an advantage to know some of the circumstances of the time, what their customs were, what words meant.

A parallel might be a 1971 magazine being read today by a high school freshman. Without some knowledge of those times, the meaning and implications of terms like Watergate, gay and big bands would be different for him than for the people who read them when they were printed 34 years ago.

You don't need a Ph.D. in Scripture studies. If you don't already have one, begin with a copy of the New American Bible, St. Joseph Edition. I'm sure you will find the introductory materials about the church's teachings on the Bible and how to read it, along with excellent notes on books and verses, a big help in your daily readings.

A tricky disease

Depression's invisible symptoms

What could Brooke Shields possibly be depressed about? Yet, there she is on Oprah explaining what postpartum depression is and that it affects no fewer than 10-15 percent of new moms.

Clinical depression is a curious disease. Unlike other maladies that produce concrete symptoms, depression tries to convince you that you're just fine: "This is normal!"; "So I've had a bad day."

It is almost impossible to identify the condition when you're in the thick of it. Only when it starts making a fool of you (because you become careless) can you appreciate its danger.

As a member of many support groups, I have organized interventions — where family members and friends come together to confront a person about a problem.

But this weekend I was on the other side, trying to defend the reason I was oblivious that I let my son climb atop the car with wash rags and slippery soap, simply because I didn't have the energy to endure one of his tantrums.

"You're not in control," one neighbor said to me during the intervention that I thought was a going-away party for her.

"It's gone on too long," another chimed in.

On some level I knew this to be true, but I failed to quiet the other voice in my head reassuring me that I was behind the wheel of my brain, and we weren't going to crash anytime soon.

Yet the next night I went to the ER, where I discovered that dehydration, stress and exhaustion had planted an infection in my body that required antibiotics, rest and TLC.

Our Turn

THERESE J. BORCHARD
CNS COLUMNIST

Only after visible proof was I able to accept my reality as a person struggling with a chemical imbalance of the brain.

I need lots of sleep (which I don't get), healthy foods (which I don't eat), peace and quiet (yeah right), and supportive friends and family (amen!) with enough courage to confront me when I'm getting none of the above.

And I pray that the other 15 percent dealing with postpartum depression also find such courage and support in their families and friends.

Another tragic effect of Roe v. Wade

One baby's abortion may kill his or her sibling

Abortion advocates recoil at the claim that abortion in the United States is used as a method of birth control. But how else can they account for the fact that nearly half of all abortions each year are performed on women who have already had at least one?

Today, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute, 48 percent of women having an abortion in the United States have had at least one previous abortion. In some states the rate of repeat abortions is much higher. In Maryland, for example, 71.4 percent of those having an abortion have already had at least one, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

The CDC also tracks multiple repeat abortions from states which submit data. Maryland ranks highest: 16.4 percent of those having an abortion have had at least three prior abortions.

Most Americans, pro-life and pro-choice alike, are shocked to learn these figures.

How did this happen?

The blame starts 32 years ago with Roe v. Wade, which rendered all state laws against abortion null and void — even the most permissive — and replaced them with the radical and utterly reckless rule of legalized abortion throughout pregnancy, for virtually any reason.

And society reacted accordingly. If legal abortion is unlimited, why not use it to "solve" social problems? Many people didn't realize — and the Supreme Court has obstinately refused to see — that abortion doesn't solve problems, it only creates new ones.

New research from France confirms yet another of these problems: Having an abortion almost doubles a woman's risk of giving birth dangerously early in a later pregnancy.

Researchers at the Hopital de Bicetre in Paris say they have found conclusive evidence of a link between induced abortion and subsequent extreme pre-term births — so extreme that many babies die soon after birth or suffer serious disability. Their study of more than 2,000 women with pre-term delivery is reported in the British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology.

The researchers found that abortion appears to increase the risk of most major causes of premature birth, such as premature rupture of membranes, incorrect position of the fetus on the placenta, and spontaneous early labor. Overall, a previous abortion made women 40 percent more likely to have a very pre-term delivery, and 70 percent more likely to have an extremely premature baby.

So abortion not only robs a child of his right to be born — it may also kill or disable his sister or brother. After three decades of legal abortion, how many subsequent children have been affected by abortion?

Unlimited legal abortion has been a dangerous social experiment on the lives of women and children. The only way to stop the experiment is to overturn Roe v. Wade.

Pope says Christian belief in Trinity affirms that God is love

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Editor's note: Due to an early publishing schedule, we are unable to bring you the pope's weekly general audience.

VATICAN CITY — The Christian belief in the Trinity is an affirmation that God is love, said Pope Benedict XVI.

"The phrase that summarizes all of revelation is this: 'God is love,'" the pope told thousands of people gathered in St. Peter's Square May 22 for the recitation of the Angelus prayer.

Like the Trinity, he said, "love is always a mystery, a reality that surpasses reason without contradicting it. Rather, it exalts its potential."

The doctrine of the Trinity, which says the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are three persons in one God, reflects the truth that "God is not solitude, but perfect communion," the pope said.

"For this reason, the human person — the image of God — realizes himself in love, which is the sincere gift of self," he said.

The pope also used his Angelus address to encourage special activities and devotions on the feast of the Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ, which is celebrated May 26 at the Vatican and May 29 in Italy.

Pope Benedict confirmed he would preside over the May 29 Mass in Bari, Italy, to conclude the weeklong Italian eucharistic congress.

"In the heart of this year dedicated to the Eucharist, the Christian people gather around Christ present in the most holy sacrament, the source and summit of their life and mission," he said.

"Every parish is called to rediscover the beauty of Sunday, the Lord's day, on which the disciples of Christ renew in the Eucharist their communion with the one who gives meaning to the joys and trials of each day," he said.

Pope Benedict took the opportunity to offer special prayers for children and young people around the world who were receiving Communion for the first time and for those who were being confirmed.

Watch your step

Our walk may define who we are, what others see

Have you ever noticed the way people walk and how it defines them?

Every day I take the Metro to work. Recently I have made it a practice to "walk-watch" people.

One woman I have observed for years always seems to be running. Ironically, she does this while smoking a cigarette. She and a number of people like her are what I call "the out-of-breath breed." They are always in a hurry, no matter what the circumstances.

On Capitol Hill where I live we often see the "senatorial step."

The senators' shoes are usually youthful looking, their suits impeccably pressed. They stride with a confidence that sets them apart from others.

Even though some of them don't quite match up to this description, enough of them do to say that one's position in life affects how one walks.

The "saunters" have a walk all their own. You have the feeling you are watching people who have the world by the tail. Their step is firm, confident and controlled, yet flowing.

There is also the "elderly walk." With age comes a tendency to droop one's shoulders. In this position, one leads with the drooping shoulders and drags the feet.

Unlike youthful Marines who throw out their chests, who are as straight as boards and whose feet take the lead, the feet of age-worn people reflect a loss of youthfulness.

The "infirm walk" is different from the "elderly walk" in that you sense pain with their every stride. I marvel at how some people, barely able to put one foot in front of the other, are able to get out of bed, let alone walk for blocks.

I also wonder if they realize what an inspiration they are and how they remind us that our minor aches and pains are insignificant.

More than the elderly or infirm walker, the "listless walkers" get most of my sympathy. When you look into their faces, the eyes are often empty.

It is as if these people have the weight of the world on their shoulders. There is no spring in their step, and they seem not to want to get where they are going.

Sometime back I spotted a father taking his little daughter — she looked to be around 3 — to school. It was so beautiful to behold because of the way the little girl clung to her father and tried to match him step for step.

During the season of spring, they exuded the new life that spring is.

A "baby's walk" is the best of all to watch. When toddlers first get upright, they literally bounce-run wherever and whenever they decide to go.

Interestingly, these little ones keep their balance much better that we might expect once they are airborne. It only looks like they're going to fall over with each step.

Many other ways of walking define us. Next time you go for a walk, watch your step — and reflect on what it might be saying about you.

New priest answers God's call

FATHER EBRIGHT ORDAINED BY BISHOP JUGIS

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — Father James Ebright recently celebrated his first Mass as a priest in the church where he was baptized 30 years ago.

"It was glorious," he said of the May 29 Mass at St. Francis of Assisi Church in Mocksville. "I was baptized there on Easter Sunday in 1975. It was one of many things that made it (celebrating Mass) wonderful."

Not only did he celebrate his new ministry as a priest in the church where he began his life as a Catholic, he gave Communion to the faithful where he received his first Communion. Life, it seems, has come full circle for the North Carolina native, and it continues on.

Catholic schools let out for summer

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — School has officially let out for the summer for the 7,240 students in diocesan Catholic schools.

After 180 days of classes, recesses, Masses and exams, students across the diocese celebrated the transition to the next grade, school or stage in life. Yearbooks were inscribed, diplomas handed out and tears flowed as students and teachers said goodbye.

For 368 graduating seniors, the coming months hold the promise of new challenges as they head off to college. For the rest, there will be new classmates, teachers and subjects.

But for the moment, there is just the celebration of another school year finished, marked with hugs and handshakes, laughter and tears, fond farewells and fonder memories.

RELIGION BEHIND BARS

Milwaukee Archbishop Timothy M. Dolan joins inmates in a closing song during a Palm Sunday Mass celebrated at the Dodge Correctional Institute March 20. The Supreme Court May 31 upheld a federal law that requires prisons to accommodate the religious practices of prisoners.

Supreme Court upholds religious rights of prisoners

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Supreme Court May 31 upheld a federal law that requires prisons to accommodate the religious practices of prisoners.

In a unanimous vote, the court said the 2000 Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA), does not violate the Constitution by giving what might be perceived as an advantage to members of religious groups.

The court was not asked to address and did not rule on the law's provisions protecting the rights of religious groups to use their land without undue government interference.

Several Ohio prisoners who follow nontraditional religions sued the state when the prison refused to let them meet in a group for worship and rejected their requests for certain ceremonial items and religious publications. The state had argued, among other things, that being required to accommodate prisoners' religious beliefs would amount to state support of religion and that other prisoners would abuse the law because it might entitle them to certain foods and privileges they could not otherwise have.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals found that RLUIPA violates the Establishment Clause by "impermissibly advancing religion by giving greater protection to religious rights than to other constitutionally protected rights."

The ruling said it was inconsequential that the prisoners who sued were members of nontraditional faiths. The petitioners followed the Church of Jesus Christ Christian, a white racist church; Asatru, a Norse neopaganist faith; Wicca; and Satanism.

Ginsburg wrote that RLUIPA "confers no privileged status on any particular religious sect, and singles out no bona fide faith for disadvantageous treatment."

But the protection conferred by the law does not "elevate accommodation of religious observances over an institution's need to maintain order and safety," she wrote. "Our decisions indicate that an accommodation must be measured so that it does not override other significant interests."

The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops was among religious organizations filing a brief urging the court to uphold RLUIPA.

The Becket Fund for Religious Liberty, which wrote that brief, said in a statement that the ruling was "a thumping victory for religious accommodation statutes throughout the country."

"Religion is often the root of rehabilitation," said the statement, "and so inmates must be free to practice as their faith requires. This the Supreme Court has embraced by today's decision."

Catholic, Muslim scholars continue work on joint marriage document

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Muslim and Catholic scholars continued work on a joint document on marriage and family life during a meeting of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Muslim-Catholic Dialogue May 4-5 in Douglaston, N.Y.

Citing a "strong consensus" among adherents of both faiths about the topic, a May 24 news release from the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops about the meeting said, "Catholics and Muslims together affirm that marriage is a blessing from God, situated in the order of creation as a natural relationship between a man and woman."

"They also believe relationships woven together in matrimony provide an environment in which faith and the moral life of the virtues may flourish," the release added. "Holding similar views on marriage and family life, Muslims and Catholics can enrich, strengthen and encourage one another in working together to testify to shared values before the wider society."

Catholic and Muslim leaders have united against proposals in several states to legalize same-sex marriages.

The dialogue group began its discussions of marriage and family life in 1998, but those talks were interrupted after Sept. 11, 2001, when participants decided to explore the relationship between religion and violence.

Already drafted and/or edited for the marriage document are chapters on the context, history and purpose of the document; the religious basis of marriage and its laws and rituals; concerns related to family life; the impact of society and social change on the family; Catholic and Muslim views on interreligious marriages; an appendix on the process and principles of interreligious dialogue; and a bibliography.

Dialogue participants hope to finalize the chapters this summer and to complete work on the document by the end of this year.

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope says world must mobilize to assure human right to education

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The international community must mobilize to assure respect for the human right to education, Pope Benedict XVI said.

In a world increasingly marked by the globalization of the economy and information, "it is important at this moment to mobilize the powers of intelligence to ensure everyone's human right to education and culture is recognized, especially in the poorest countries," he said.

Pope Benedict's remarks were made in a letter read at a special June 2 seminar at UNESCO headquarters in Paris to mark the 25th anniversary of Pope John Paul II's visit to the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Pope Benedict reminded seminar participants of Pope John Paul's insistence that in all educational and development programs the good of the person and human dignity must be the central concerns.

The pope said his predecessor had called on UNESCO "to build peace starting from the foundation: respect for all human rights, those tied to the person's material and economic dimension as well as those tied to the spiritual and interior dimension of his existence in the world."

Pope Benedict said Pope John Paul's words are just as important today as they were 25 years ago.

In the modern world, he said, "men and women must learn more and more to recognize each other as brothers and sisters," an educational task the church can promote by underlining "the relationship that binds each person to the Creator of all life and who is the source of the inalienable dignity of each human being from conception to natural death."

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Diocese of Rome formally opened the sainthood cause of Pope John Paul II, asking Catholics around the world to present evidence "for or against" his reputation for holiness.

The edict signed by Cardinal Camillo Ruini, papal vicar of Rome, launched the information-gathering stage of the late pope's cause. In mid-May, Pope Benedict XVI waived the normal five-year waiting period and said work on the sainthood cause of his predecessor could begin immediately.

Cardinal Ruini's announcement was published May 31 on the front page of the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, and was ordered posted on the doors of church offices in Rome and in Pope John Paul's native Poland.

The request for information was expected to prompt an avalanche of testimonials from Catholics and could also bring to light unpublished letters and other writings of the late pope.

The edict noted that Pope John Paul's reputation for holiness "exploded in a remarkable way at the moment of his death." Now the faithful should communicate directly with the Rome diocesan offices to help document the sainthood cause, it said.

It invited all Catholics to come forward with "any information that can in some way support arguments for or against the reputation for holiness" of Pope John Paul.

The diocese was also to gather all the writings attributed to Pope John Paul throughout his life. The edict directed "whoever is in possession of such writings to forward them with due care" to officials working on the cause.

Of primary interest, it said, were unpublished manuscripts, diaries, letters and other private writings of the late pope.

Even without the normal five-year waiting period, the work on Pope John Paul's cause is expected to take several years. In addition to studying his writings and interviewing witnesses, the church officials must confirm that two miracles occurred after his death, as the result of prayers asking for his intercession with God.

Federal court strikes down Virginia's partial-birth abortion ban

RICHMOND, Va. (CNS) — A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond ruled June 3 that a Virginia ban on the partial-birth abortion procedure is unconstitutional because it does not include an exception to protect a woman's health.

The 2-1 decision by the appeals panel upheld a ruling by a federal judge last year on the 2003 Virginia law, which made it a felony to perform a partial-birth abortion. The date the law was to take effect was blocked by the lawsuit challenging it.

The appeals court judges who struck down the Virginia law said they based their decision on a 2000 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that struck down a similar Nebraska law banning partial-birth abortions because it did not contain a health exception.

Gail Quinn, executive director of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities, said the court's action "in overturning this law makes it painfully clear that even infanticide cannot be banned in the United States."

Making a difference

Catholic Daughters award contest winners

ASHEVILLE — The Catholic Daughters of the Americas Court St. Joan of Arc No. 2471 recently awarded prizes to the winners of their local education contest.

The themes of the national contest, sponsored locally by Court St. Joan of Arc, were "Our Mother's Loving Touch" and "I Can Make a Difference."

Six entries were awarded cash prizes on the local level. Four of the entries were then judged on the state level and won first place in their respective age divisions and categories.

G.G. Hampton, vice regent and education contest coordinator, presented the following awards during a presentation at St. Joan of Arc Church in Asheville May 1.

Magic marker art, third-grade division to Julian Pinelli of the St. Andrew Church in Mars Hill; pencil art, seventh-grade division to Daniel Pinelli of St. Andrew Church; art, seventh-grade division to Raminta Holden of St. Joan of Arc Church; poster art, fifth-grade division to Hayley Lusk of St. Joan of Arc Church; and art, 10th-grade division to Jaclyn Burchell of St. Joan of Arc Church.

A poem by Kelli Tinsley, a parishioner of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, won recognition on the local and state levels in the adult poetry division.

The Christian Mothers of St. Aloysius Church in Hickory sponsored a living rosary celebration at the church May 21. The multicultural event featured reciting the rosary in English, Spanish, Filipino, Hmong and Portuguese. Participants lit candles and prayed their part of the "luminous mysteries" of the rosary, proclaimed by Pope John Paul II in 2002 that added to the traditional trio of joyful, sorrowful and glorious mysteries. Prayers and intentions were for an increase in vocations to the religious life, pro-life issues and Pope Benedict XVI.

Hickory teen to attend gifted-students program

HICKORY — Peter McNulty, 16, a parishioner of St. Aloysius Church in Hickory, was selected to participate in the 2005 Summer Ventures in Science and Mathematics, a summer residential program for academically gifted high school students.

The state-funded program is administered by the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics.

As one of 550 high school students in North Carolina invited to participate, Peter will focus his studies on physics and topology during the four-week program at Appalachian State University in Boone. The program involves coursework, research projects and extracurricular activities in the fields of study.

Peter is a member of Life Teen and an altar server at St. Aloysius Church. At school, he is a member of the National Honor Society, Beta Club, cross country and track teams, and is historian for the Interact Club and co-treasurer for the National Latin Honor Society.

Peter also is a Life Scout and has earned the Vigil Honor in the Order of the Arrow.

Sister celebrates 100 years

Sister Higgins, whose 45 years in health care were served mostly in maternity and delivery wards, was honored at a unique tea party at Sacred Heart Convent in Belmont May 26, three days before her 100th birthday.

Wearing a special birthday hat over her veil, she was joined by more than 60 of her closest sisters and friends who donned special party hats and multicolored feather boas.

Those assembled were treated to an unusual fashion show, at which the train of a wedding dress sported a toy train, bell-bottom pants had bells on the bottom and necklines dubbed scoop and plunging were decorated with ice cream scoops and plungers.

Sister Higgins, who served as both a pediatric and obstetric supervisor at Mercy Hospital in Charlotte and St. Joseph's Hospital in Asheville, was then-known as Sister Mary Lawrence, a name that became synonymous with loving medical care.

Born May 29, 1905, in Westport in County Mayo, Ireland, Sister Higgins determined her future would be in what was then considered the "mission" fields of North Carolina.

She traveled alone by ship and then by train, eventually arriving in Belmont where she entered the Sisters of Mercy on June 11, 1925. She took the name Sister Mary Lawrence, but in August 1967, returned to her baptismal name.

She soon graduated as a registered nurse from Mercy Hospital School of Nursing and began caring for patients, initially serving as a floor and night supervisor before moving into the pediatric and obstetric areas of the hospital.

"When I first took over the archives (of the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina), I found a small red stocking," said Mercy Sister Mary Andrew Ray, "and was told it was an example of many like it that Sister Margaret Mary would place a newborn infant into before she delivered them to their mothers during the Christmas season."

Until October of 2000, Sister Higgins remained an active presence at St. Joseph's Hospital. Her familiar figure could be seen scurrying down the halls, sorting the mail or praying in the chapel.

When not at the hospital, she could often be found in the convent's kitchen, usually baking any number of her specialty breads. She became famous for the Christmas stollen and friendship breads that were sold at the annual Sisters of Mercy Bazaar.

Even though retired from active nursing, she has reinvented herself as an indispensable asset to her local community through her current ministry of prayer. She remains an avid reader, a loyal citizen of Ireland and is devoted to God and her community of sisters.

Kristine Reich is director of communications for the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis anoints the hands of Father James Ebright with sacred chrism during his ordination Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte May 28.

Priest answers God's call

his new life as a priest during his ordination celebrated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte May 28.

"This is a day of great joy for the Diocese of Charlotte," said Bishop Jugis during his homily.

Bishop Jugis said Father Ebright was being ordained during the Year of the Eucharist, "a time of special grace for the Church when we renew our amazement at the sacrifice of our Lord's body and blood, which the Savior gave to his Church.

"This is the sacrifice which will be offered through your hands," the bishop told Father Ebright.

Father Ebright's family watched joyfully as his ordination unfolded.

"I am so full of joy, so happy and thankful," said his mother, watching her son standing on the altar with the bishop after Mass.

"It's beautiful to see a young man give himself to God," said Linda Payne, Father Ebright's aunt. "There's hope for the world."

For Father Ebright, becoming a priest was an answer to a call heard long ago. He began serious consideration about being a priest shortly after high school, and his parents were encouraging.

"I felt that something was missing in my life, and I knew that God was calling me to do something more," said Father Ebright. "I went through many years of discernment to confirm that it was the priesthood that was missing."

So Father Ebright left his engineering job in Winston-Salem and followed his heart to Theological College at Catholic University of America in Washington.

Becoming a priest, he said, has put him on "cloud nine," and he's ready for the challenges ahead.

Father Ebright said he believes a good priest is one "whose heart is in union with Christ and who has a zeal to save souls."

"I hope to bring the people to God and God to the people," he said. "Everything we do (as priests) is aimed toward that."

"He brings a pastoral heart. He genuinely cares about people," said Father John Putnam, acting vocations director and pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury.

Father Putnam said Father Ebright's qualities and background will make him a good priest.

"He's a very bright man, and has a wonderful ability to work with a wide range of people," said Father Putnam.

In addition to Jesus Christ, Father Ebright said he has many inspirations.

"There are many people over the last 2,000 years whom I'd like to emulate," he said. "Many stories of the faith and of modern-day saints are inspiring."

Specifically, he said, Mother Teresa and Pope John Paul II.

"His mind remained strong as his body failed," said Father Ebright of the late pope. "There are so many aspects of people's lives that I'd like to emulate."

Concelebrants of the ordination Mass included Msgr. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and diocesan chancellor; Father Paul Gary, rector of St. Patrick Cathedral; Father Putnam; and other priests serving in the Diocese of Charlotte. In attendance was Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin.

During the rite of ordination, Father Ebright confirmed his promise to fulfill the office of the priesthood. Kneeling, he placed his hands between Bishop Jugis' hands in a promise of obedience to the diocese.

The congregation was invited to join in prayer for the priestly candidate, the church and its people as he lay prostrate before the altar.

During the rite's most solemn moment, Father Ebright knelt in silence before Bishop Jugis, who laid his hands on Father Ebright's head. The celebration of the sacrament of holy orders was completed as the bishop extended his hands over the kneeling candidate and prayed the prayer of consecration.

Father Ebright was vested with a stole and a chasuble — outer garments of the priestly office. The bishop anointed his hands with sacred chrism and he was then presented with a chalice and paten signifying his role as celebrant of the Eucharist.

The newly ordained Father Ebright then joined his brother priests to concelebrate the Mass, thus opening the new chapter in his life.

"My brother, James, go now with Jesus into the depths of his heart," said Bishop Jugis. "You are his priest. The paschal mystery is yours to live ... yours to celebrate for the people of God."

It was a command Father Ebright had waited to hear.

"My greatest joy? Turning myself over to God," said Father Ebright.

My sacrifice and yours

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 18

For the past several weeks, our catechesis on the Mass has focused on the first movement of the liturgy of the Eucharist: the offertory. And last time we discussed the preparation of the altar, the offertory procession of the gifts and the offering prayers for the bread and the wine.

After the offering prayers for the bread and the wine are recited and the sacred vessels are placed on the square linen cloth (called the corporal), the celebrant bows to the altar and prays silently: "Lord God, we ask you to receive us and be pleased with the sacrifice we offer you with humble and contrite hearts."

The priest speaks in his own name, as well as on behalf of the faithful, asking God to receive the gifts that he has just offered — namely, the gifts of bread and wine, as well as the sacrifice of ourselves. At this moment, the celebrant may place incense in the thurible, bless the incense and incense the gifts, the altar and the crucifix.

This is now the third time that the incense may be used to signify the church's offerings and prayers rising like incense in the sight of God.

The incense unites the symbols of Christ: the altar, which is the central symbol in the sanctuary for Christ; the crucifix, which recalls the redemption that is re-presented in the sacrifice of the Mass; and the bread and wine, which will actually become the body and blood of Christ in the consecration of the Mass.

The incense may then be used to incense persons: first the celebrant and then the concelebrants, by virtue of their sacred ministry; then the faithful, by reason of their baptismal dignity.

After this third incensation, the celebrant washes his hands. What is the purpose of this gesture? Ritual purification is not a novel practice in the Mass.

Many ancient religions, in particular the Jews, maintained numerous traditional rites for the purification of vessels, as well as for the hands of those who are partaking in the ritual itself.

Further, in the early church, it became practical necessity for the priest to wash his hands after the offertory. The faithful would present a vast array of offerings for the benefit of charity to the poor, including food, bread, vegetables, fruits, flasks of wine and clothing. Following this extended offertory, it became necessary for the priest to purify his hands before touching the sacred vessels to offer the sacrifice.

MATTHEW

The ritual maintains its place in the Mass. Known as the lavabo rite, the washing of hands now refers more to an internal, spiritual purification rather than an external one. As the celebrant is washing his hands, he recites a private prayer in silence to this effect: "Lord, wash away my iniquity; cleanse me from my sins."

Notice that there is a distinction made between the iniquity that underlies the desire to sin, and the actual sins themselves. St. Cyril of Jerusalem comments on the mystical meaning of this ritual in the fourth century: "[The lavabo] shows that we must be free from all sin. We perform actions with our hands; to wash our hands is the nearest thing to purifying our deeds."

The celebrant returns to the center of the altar and implores the faithful to unite themselves with him in the sacrifice that is drawing near. In the original Latin text, the priest says, "Orate, fratres: ut meum ac vestrum sacrificium..." [Pray, brethren: that my sacrifice and yours...].

The prayer indicates the two distinct sacrifices of the Mass: Christ and his body, the church. Our current English translation simplifies this expression: "Pray, brethren, that our sacrifice"

The prayer is a sort of extended form of the more common "Let us pray." The people stand and respond, "May the Lord accept the sacrifice at your hands"

Finally, the "Prayer Over the Gifts" is the second proper collect or prayer of the Mass and signals the end of the offertory. This prayer usually acknowledges our inability to offer to God gifts adequate to his goodness and power. The church prays that God will accept what we offer with sincerity and respond with generous graces as we prepare to enter the most solemn movement in the Mass: the consecration.

Next week, we will begin to examine the consecration as we move to the Eucharistic Prayer.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

A command to action

Father Jim Collins, pastor of St. Joseph Church in Newton, leads a eucharistic procession as part of a parish celebration for the feast of Corpus Christi May 29.

CELEBRATING THE FEAST OF CORPUS CHRISTI IN NEWTON

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

NEWTON — Speaking about the Eucharist, Deacon Scott Gilfillan related a unique story about his puppy.

"For more of us, the word 'rabbit' is a noun. For her, the word is a call to action," he said. "Her body goes tense, her ears perk up and she is ready to go."

"Sometimes we treat the Eucharist as an object of adoration, but it is also a command for us to participate in the life of Christ," said the deacon. "It shows that God loves us and that we must love one another."

Deacon Gilfillan, permanent deacon at St. Joseph Church in Newton, spoke in both English and Spanish during a special Mass to celebrate the feast of Corpus Christi at the church May 29.

The Mass, in which prayers, readings and hymns were in both languages, was the only Mass held that day at the church to show unity in the body and blood of Christ.

A highlight of the celebration was a eucharistic procession, during which parishioners followed Father Jim Collins, pastor, outside as he carried a monstrance containing the Eucharist.

A group of boys at the parish know all about bringing the Eucharist to others.

The Holy Crusaders is made up of boys eight years and older who have received their first Communion. Each commits to one or more hours each month of giving presentations on the Eucharist to first communicants and confirmands, or praying for specific intentions.

The club's purpose is "to help bring other people to Jesus and the sacrament," said Brendan Vickers, club president, who serves in the club with his brother, Andrew.

The best part of being a member, said Andrew, is "that we are learning our faith."

The parish celebration was held in commemoration of the Year of the Eucharist, proclaimed by Pope John Paul II to be celebrated from October 2004 to October 2005. Many parishioners from St. Joseph Church also are planning to charter a bus to attend the Diocese of Charlotte's Eucharistic Congress, which takes place in Charlotte Sept. 23-24.

DID YOU KNOW?

A monstrance is an exposition case and stand, generally large and ornate, used to display the Eucharist for certain processions and devotions. A eucharistic procession is a way of bringing the Eucharist out into the community.

Madeline Rose Lewis accepts the Staddon-Cain scholarship award from Chip Evans, grand knight of Knights of Columbus Council 8509 at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville.

Teen wins Knights' Staddon-Cain award

KERNERSVILLE — Knights of Columbus Council 8509 at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville recently announced the winner of the John R. Staddon and Frank L. Cain Memorial Scholarship Fund.

Grand Knight Chip Evans presented the award to Madeline Rose Lewis, 14. Madeline received a $500 check in February toward the continuation of her education.

Council 8509 presents the annual award to a young student parishioner of Holy Cross Church based on the individual's scholastic achievement and for community- and church-related accomplishments.

Madeline has been home schooled and plans to enter Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School in Kernersville next fall. She is an active volunteer with Peace Goods Mission, therapeutic riding stables and a homeless women's shelter, and she teaches other students about Catholicism.

Madeline is the daughter of Ken and Melanie Feeney Lewis.

The scholarship fund, founded to perpetuate Catholic education, was named after two non-Catholic men who married Catholic women. During their lives, Staddon, who later converted, and Cain both supported the Catholic Church and their children's faith formation.

WAITING FOR MARRIAGE

Hispanic youths, young adults promise chastity

BY DEACON GERALD POTKAY
CORRESPONDENT

CLEMMONS — Hispanic youths and young adults from the dioceses of Charlotte and Raleigh recently renewed their vows of chastity until marriage.

The promises were made during a weekend retreat, "True Love Waits," held at Holy Family Church in Clemmons May 27-29. More than 70 youths and young adults participated.

"It is very important for the Hispanic Ministry that the people of Hispanic traditions and customs are engaged in overall growth, especially in the areas of human sexuality," said Ricardo Veloz, director of diocesan Hispanic Youth and Young Adult Ministry.

"In the Spanish community, we don't speak about sexuality," said Erica Guerra, a parishioner of St. Eugene Church in Wendell, N.C. "We only learn these things in school."

"One of our goals is to create awareness of the Catholic perspective on purity and chastity, as well as the importance and worth of their own sexuality as it relates not only to themselves, but more importantly, to God and then society in general," said Veloz.

Much of the information delivered at the retreat came from the "Catechism of the Catholic Church," according to Laura Flores, a volunteer at the retreat.

"Along with the lectures, there are a lot of plays or skits, singing, praying and small and large group activities, all of which involve much interaction between presenters and participants," she said.

"The premise is for the participants to remain chaste until marriage," said Flores. "There are different reasons being presented for taking this stance, and they all center on God, self-worth, social life and the advent of sexually transmitted diseases."

"The process leading to chaste sexuality begins with self-awareness and advances through the stages of friendship, courtship and finally marriage," she said.

The retreat, which featured Masses and confession, included sessions on abortion and the sexual revolution of the 1960s.

"We had sessions on a holistic view of self and how to apply all of this (Catholic faith) to self and others through a true Christian ethic, what we are supposed to do and what we are not supposed to do," said Flores.

One skit related sexual activity to roses.

"The petals relate to each sex act," said Flores. "The chaste virgin is a rose, untouched by sexual activity. Each time you have sex you would peel off a petal. If you continually have sex and peel off the petals, you end up with nothing left to offer for marriage."

"But if you refrain from having sex ... you can still have a lot to offer your future spouse," she said.

After the skit and discussion, the participants were asked to renew their vows of chastity, even if they had previously been sexually active.

"It's hard sometimes to do the right thing," said Flores.

"... We must have a commitment to ourselves, to our future spouses and our future children," said Medina.

CHARLOTTE — A close-knit group of students is taking its first steps into the world beyond high school. The Charlotte Catholic High School class of 2005 received their diplomas at Ovens Auditorium June 2.

"The bonds that we have forged, especially this year, as well as the sense of family that we have established, cannot be ignored," said Andrew Petrilli, in his salutatorian address. "It is such a blessing to be able to call each one of you my classmate and my friend."

The diplomas were conferred by Msgr. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor for the Diocese of Charlotte; Linda Cherry, superintendent of diocesan Catholic schools; and Gerald Healy, principal of Charlotte Catholic High School.

The commencement exercises for Charlotte Catholic reflected the Catholic faith that is taught alongside French, American history and algebra.

"We have been taught for years to find Jesus in everyone that we meet," said Samson Mesele, valedictorian. "In the bonds that we have formed, I swear, for a brief moment we stroked the face of God."

Following the closing prayer, the euphoric graduates marched out into the open green space outside the auditorium. After tossing their caps into the air against a soft evening sky, young men and women embraced each other as if for the first time and the last.

FAST FACTS

Charlotte Catholic's class of 2005 consisted of 256 students who received more than $5 million in combined scholarships.

Charlotte Catholic sports teams won 15 conference championships and seven state championships in 2004-05.

SAT scores for CCHS seniors (1105) exceeded the average scores for Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools, North Carolina (1006) and the United States (1026).

WHAT WAS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING YOU LEARNED AT CHARLOTTE CATHOLIC?

"I learned that life goes on whether you have a good day or a bad day."

— Thomas Pacicco

"How to practice my faith without being ashamed."

— Kaitlin Gilbride

"Work hard, pray always and have fun."

— Christine Mancusi

WHO HAS BEEN THE BIGGEST INFLUENCE ON YOU?

"Mr. (Norman) Rioux ... because he inspired me to succeed in whatever I do and taught me many things, not only in Spanish but life."

— Amanda Sain

"Andrew Petrelli, because he is one of the nicest, classiest guys you will ever meet and is always there for you."

— Anne Menze

Bishop McGuinness graduates 119

KERNERSVILLE — As their high school careers came to a close, graduating students were encouraged to discover their purposes in life.

Father John Olenick, a 1988 graduate of Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School, gave that message to 119 graduates during the school's commencement ceremony at the Stevens Center in Winston-Salem May 28.

Father Olenick, who now serves in New York, told the students to discover their purposes in life in light of the opportunities that they have enjoyed at Bishop McGuinness.

Diplomas were distributed by Principal George Repass; Msgr. Mauricio W. West, chancellor and vicar general for the Diocese of Charlotte; and Linda Cherry, superintendent of diocesan Catholic schools.

Richard Valittuto, student council president, was class valedictorian and Jennifer Williams was salutatorian.

Two days before commencement, the graduates participated in a baccalaureate Mass at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro May 26. Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated the Mass, with priests from the Greensboro and Winston-Salem vicariates concelebrating.

FAST FACTS

Bishop McGuinness' class of 2005 consisted of 119 students who received more than $1.7 million in combined scholarships.

52 graduates were inducted into the National Honor Society.

100 percent of the 2005 graduating class will attend more than 60 colleges/universities this year.

A fond farewell

Two admired, loved principals retire

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — After more than 5,700 school days spent educating thousands of students, Pat Murphy and Bill Meehan said tearful goodbyes to current and former students, parents and faculty and staff as they left their positions as principals of diocesan Catholic schools. Murphy retired at the end of the 2004-05 school year, having spent 26 years working in the Diocese of Charlotte, as math and science teacher and principal at Our Lady of the Assumption School in Charlotte and as principal of St. Michael School in Gastonia.

Meehan retired after serving six years as principal of Immaculata School in Hendersonville. After relocating to Illinois, where his grandchildren live, he plans to continue to work, but on a more limited basis and reduced responsibilities. Both Murphy and Meehan were asked to reflect on their experiences and what the future holds for each of them.

What do you consider your greatest accomplishment?

Murphy: The day the student council was making a banner for Catholic Schools Week that said, "We are not just a school, we are a family." We had a large banner made and it has been hanging on the front of the building for the past 10 years.

Meehan: Providing a climate for others to realize their own potential. Here at Immaculata, that climate has allowed others to create and develop a viable sports program, an award winning chess program, a school choir and more.

How did you convey Christ's message to your staff and students?

Murphy: I convey Christ's message to the staff and children each and every time I see them. I greet them each morning, I call them by name, I honor and respect them, I believe in their goodness, I am willing to help them as best as I can, and I am there to see them off at the end of the day and tell them that I will see them tomorrow.

Meehan: I tried to convey Christ's message to the staff and students through prayer and personal example. I encouraged the creation of a school choir to lead us in singing at our weekly school Masses, as I believe that the voices of children sung in praise to the Lord is one of the highest forms of worship and most pleasing to him.

What are you looking forward to in your retirement?

Murphy: I am looking forward to spending time with my family. My husband, John, and I can visit the children and grandchildren. I love to sew, cook and garden. I will have more time to do this.

Meehan: I will have more time to "stop to smell the roses" and spend more time with my grandchildren. Also, I want to concentrate more on my ballroom dancing lessons and explore other possible interests such as music and the arts. I will probably want to take a trip to Ireland and northern France, especially the area around Normandy for its historical significance.

What is your favorite quote or personal motto?

Murphy: I believe that everyone has special gifts that are freely given to us. It is an opportunity for educators to help the children reach their full potential. I also believe that it takes the whole village to raise the children.

Meehan: Being a Vermonter, I like Calvin Coolidge's statement to the effect that perseverance is the greatest of all personal attributes.

EARLY CATHOLICISM

In U.S. history, Florida beats New England, says retired professor

BY ANA RODRIGUEZ-SOTO
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

ORLANDO, Fla. — When speaking of firsts in U.S. history, the place should be Florida's St. Augustine, not Plymouth, Mass; the first settlers should be Spanish, not British; and the religion should be Catholicism, not Puritanism.

"It's about time that we corrected our brethren in the northern climes," Michael Gannon told an audience of Catholic journalists during a May 27 workshop at the Catholic Press Association's annual convention in Orlando.

"By the time the pilgrims came to Plymouth, St. Augustine was up for urban renewal," he said.

A professor emeritus at the University of Florida, Gannon has done extensive research on the history of the state and written the landmark book on the subject, "The Cross in the Sand," published in 1965.

He also wrote the first chapter of "Florida's Catholic Heritage Trail," a book to be published this year that encompasses the history of all seven of Florida's Catholic dioceses, beginning with the events in 1565 in St. Augustine.

Known as "the Grinch who stole Thanksgiving" by some New Englanders, Gannon said, "we have to tell the story" of Florida's early history and, by extension, the Catholic contribution to the history of the United States.

It was Juan Ponce de Leon in 1521 who first explored the territory he christened Florida, after the Spanish name for Easter, Pascua Florida. That was 86 years before the British arrived in Jamestown, Va., in 1607 and nearly a century before the pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620.

"There is a place called St. Augustine. It's critically important to Florida history. It's critically important to Catholic history. It's critically important to our country's history," said Eric Johnson, director of the Mission Nombre de Dios (Name of God) in St. Augustine, the first Catholic parish in the United States.

Johnson and Susan Parker, of the Division of Historical Resources for Florida's Department of State, joined Gannon as co-presenters of the workshop.

According to Gannon and evidence uncovered by state archeologists, Ponce de Leon and subsequent Spanish explorers had landed in what are now Tampa Bay and Pensacola Bay, and explored as far north as the Chesapeake Bay, by 1526.

They brought with them not just soldiers but farmers, families and Spanish priests — Dominicans, Franciscans, Jesuits — who set up 38 mission outposts in Florida by 1655. In fact, the name San Francisco was given to a mission in Potano, near present-day Gainesville, about 170 years prior to the use of the name in California.

"These were selfless men of God who wrote one of the great stories in the history of the faith in North America," Gannon said. "Here were the first people who carried the lamp of Christianity into the darkened interior of North America."

Contrary to popular belief and what is taught in some history books, "the natives were not in any way used or abused by the friars, nor would they let them be abused by others," Gannon said.

He described the priests as living among the Indians as Peace Corps volunteers do today, teaching them European ways without imposing their beliefs. By 1655, the Franciscans counted 26,000 native converts in Florida.

Gannon called the Spanish priests "the first great defenders of human, civil and religious rights in what is now the United States." He stressed that "no Indian was ever converted by force."

Johnson noted that when Pedro Menendez de Aviles landed in 1565 in present-day St. Augustine, just south of Jacksonville, he claimed the land for Spain with both a flag and a cross. Seeing him and the rest of the Spaniards reverence the cross, the Timucuan Indians who had gathered at the site followed suit.

"The very beginning of the teaching of the Gospel in the United States was by example rather than by word," said Johnson.

That gesture was followed by the first Mass on U.S. soil. It was celebrated by the priest who accompanied the expedition, Father Francisco Lopez de Mendoza Grajales, on Sept. 8, 1565, on the site known to this day as Mission Nombre de Dios (Name of God).

After the Mass, Menendez de Aviles invited the Timucuan to join him for "the first communal meal of Europeans and natives together," Gannon said. "This was the first communal act of thanksgiving in the first permanent European settlement of what is now the United States."

Nombre de Dios also is the site of the first Marian shrine in the United States, the Shrine of Our Lady of La Leche y Buen Parto (The Milk and Happy Delivery), a devotion carried over from Spain by couples seeking to conceive or bear healthy children.

"People come from all over the United States and other countries to pray to Our Lady of La Leche," Johnson said. "What started with Father Lopez as the first parish priest has continued to this day."

An example of sustaining faith

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

By mid-June, school vacation days have begun across most of the country. Breakneck schedules for families subside.

During this blessed time, travel is usually on the agenda. Those of us who live where it is hot long to go to some place cool.

On the other hand those who have endured months of living in a deep freeze often plan trips to sunny realms.

No matter what direction the compass may lead us, the summer itinerary of most vacationers will include a visit to at least one historical site. Walking the same ground where our fellow human beings have been put to the test often mesmerizes us. Their past becomes part of our past, and their stories become part of our own.

I never will forget my first visit to the lush Pennsylvania farmland where fields rich with sweet corn create towering green roadside walls. My destination that day had once been simply part of the rolling landscape — an open field that stretches to a patch of trees in the distance.

I was one of millions of people to have visited this quiet place where the echoes of birdsong and muffled voices fill the air. One of history's great ironies lay before me.

The green grass now covers ground that once was soaked with blood. In the peace of a summer day the thunder of war raged — men and animals alike were trapped in the great pandemonium of suffering.

As I walked around the field, I thought of Abraham Lincoln, tormented by loneliness and the anguish of leadership, waiting for the horrific battlefield reports telegraphed from Gettysburg in July. Biographers tell us he was a man of great prayer, a man chosen by history whose only constant was God.

The first reading for this Sunday comes from the prophet Jeremiah. When we hear this ancient voice, it is helpful to know something of the man. God called Jeremiah to preach a message of repentance to God's people who had strayed far away from their faith.

In times of doubt, Jeremiah thinks that perhaps God has made a fool of him. In today's passage from this great prophet we have a window into his suffering. However, we also have a palpable example of his sustaining faith.

Questions:

What people in your life have been models of courage sustained through their reliance on God? When has your trust in God strengthened your ability to stand against the work of evil?

New Zealand to air animated series lampooning papacy, Vatican

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (CNS) — An animated series that the British Broadcasting Corp. canceled after protests by Catholics because it lampooned the papacy will make its world premiere on New Zealand television June 8.

"Popetown," described by its creators as "'Father Ted' meets 'South Park,'" will air on C4, a youth-oriented music television station, which last year purchased the rights to air the show in New Zealand before the BBC pulled the show from its schedule.

The BBC was inundated with complaints about "Popetown." The show was said to feature the pope, who travels around on a pogo stick, as a childish retiree whose every fickle whim must be indulged.

"When we purchased 'Popetown,' there was no controversy," said Andrew Szusterman, station and program manager for C4, a CanWest network. "There was no word of ever pulling the show."

Szusterman said the BBC only pulled "Popetown" from its schedule after the health of Pope John Paul II declined.

However in September, Stuart Murphy, controller of BBC Three, announced the show's cancellation, saying, "There is a fine judgment line in comedy between scurrilously funny and the offensive."

Szusterman said he did not see any problems with the show.

"The scope of it, and I've seen four episodes, is much tamer than 'Father Ted' and much tamer than 'South Park' in its context," he said.

"It is satire in the same sense that 'Father Ted' was satire, and I don't think anyone complained about that. I think this has been blown out of proportion," he said.

"Father Ted" was a British show that satirized life in an Irish parish. "South Park" is a scatological animated series on the Comedy Central cable channel that tells the stories of young children in the mythical town of South Park.

Szusterman said the station recommends parental guidance in allowing children to watch "Popetown." He said nothing in the show raised any red flags when tested against broadcasting standard guidelines.

The show's creators say "Popetown" is a satire of office life.

"Office politics exist in any workplace, but in 'Popetown' there's a bizarre twist: The company is the Vatican and the chief executive happens to be the pope," says the show's Web site.

NO SIGNS OF CANCELLATION

Actor Gilyard finds Catholicism is role for a lifetime

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Actor Clarence Gilyard is well known for being Chuck Norris' right-hand man on "Walker, Texas Ranger" and for being Andy Griffith's on "Matlock."

"Why I got to do 13 straight years of network television and somebody else didn't, who knows?" Gilyard mused in an interview June 2 with Catholic News Service in Washington.

What's less well-known about Gilyard is that he's Catholic. It has been a 10-year run since he joined the church and it shows no signs of cancellation.

He was in town to attend meetings of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Communications, on which he serves as a consultant.

Gilyard, originally a member of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, said his journey to Catholicism came as the result of the breakup of his first marriage.

"I went through a serious divorce that brought me to my knees. I had to think on all aspects of my life," he said, speaking in quiet, measured tones.

"Someone took me to Mass, and I looked anew at life at that time, and I felt at home - immediately," Gilyard recalled. "Not long after that I started praying the rosary, too. The man who brought me to Mass essentially taught me to pray the rosary. And praying it was hard."

Now, his family prays the rosary together, said Gilyard, who is married and has three children. "(The Virgin) Mary knows how to teach."

Gilyard, whose home is Texas, has been on a sabbatical from TV and movie acting so he could pursue a master's degree in classical theater at Southern Methodist University.

"I'm about twice the age of my

Actor Clarence Gilyard, who joined the Catholic Church 10 years ago, serves as an advisor on communications and media to the U.S. bishops.

fellow students," said Gilyard, who will celebrate his 50th birthday on Christmas Eve this year. "I really have to work hard to keep up with them."

The discipline has helped him as a consultant to the bishops' communications committee, on which he has served for about three years.

"I missed the last meeting" in January, Gilyard said, so to prepare for the May 31-June 2 meeting, "I really had to do my homework."

He got the consultant's post based on his friendship with Bishop Joseph A. Galante of Camden, N.J. He attended the episcopal ordination of Bishop Galante when he became coadjutor for the Dallas Diocese in 1999, Gilyard told CNS.

When Bishop Galante assumed the chairmanship of the communications committee, he asked Gilyard to be a consultant; of the committee's 10 current consultants, he is the only one who works in show business.

But he is more than just an actor, he said. He sees himself "as a Catholic Christian," he explained.

"People don't necessarily want to see you in that way," nor do they see him, he added, "as a person, as a father," as someone "called to marriage" or "as an artist."

Gilyard turned down reprising his role as Pastor Bruce Barnes for a third "Left Behind" movie.

"That made Bishop Galante really happy," he said with a laugh. The movies stress a fundamentalist theology of the end times seen as being in conflict with Catholic teaching.

But taking the Barnes role had some important elements for Gilyard.

"I took the (part) because of the character," he said. "Not just because of his being clergy, but the predicament he faces ... the struggle of the individual, and that's putting it lightly."

Abbey's alumni magazine wins international awards

BELMONT — Belmont Abbey College's alumni magazine, "Crossroads," earned high honors for the second straight year, garnering three Communicator Awards in the 2005 Print Media competition.

The college won two Awards of Distinction for its Winter/Spring 2004 issue in the Best Magazine for an Educational Institution and Best Magazine for a Non-Profit categories. The Abbey also won an Honorable Mention for Best Writing for a Magazine.

"We are certainly proud of the recognition," said Fran Kirk Piñeros, the college's director of alumni and parent relations. "Without a doubt, the awards fall in line with the college's initiatives outlined in its strategic plan — achieving excellence and virtue."

Belmont Abbey College's director of public relations agreed.

"Our goal for the magazine has always been to reach the Abbey's alumni in a meaningful way," said Teresa Sowders, also the magazine's editor-in-chief.

"From the redesign of the magazine to putting more of their personal stories in print, from the use of captivating photos to the participation of everyone at the college so it's a true product of the Abbey — we couldn't be more proud."

"No one starts a project thinking it will necessarily win anything," she said. "But it is always nice when you are able to not only meet the goals you set, but also have your work recognized by a group of your peers."

The Communicator Awards is an international awards competition that recognizes outstanding work in the communications field with entries judged by industry professionals. Belmont Abbey College was chosen from among 5,078 entries in this year's competition from advertising agencies, corporate communications departments, educational institutions, government entities, designers, writers, video production professionals, broadcast and cable operations and other businesses throughout the country.

"Crossroads" is published bi-annually by the college's Office of Public Relations with assistance from Alumni Office and the Development Office. The magazine features success stories of alumni and current students of the Abbey and includes; news, sports, arts, calendar events, alumni news, and open letters from the college president, the abbot and alumni president.

This year's Communicator Awards had 187 categories with three awards in each category; the Crystal Award of Excellence, the Award of Distinction and Honorable Mention.

The Crystal Award of Excellence was given to 13 percent of entries, which demonstrated the best in their field.

The Award of Distinction is awarded for projects that exceed industry standards in communicating a message or idea. Approximately 19 percent of the entries won this award.

Honorable Mention certificates are granted to those entries that meet the high standards of the industry. Approximately 10 percent of entries were honorable mention winners.

In 2004, Belmont Abbey College won three Awards of Distinction and two Honorable Mentions for the 2003 Winter issue of "Crossroads" featuring Ed Antosek '68 on the cover.

Msgr. Richard Allen dies at 74

Msgr. Richard Allen

CHARLOTTE — Msgr. Richard Allen, a priest of the Diocese of Charlotte, died June 7 in Charlotte. He was 74.

Born Aug. 28, 1930, in Brooklyn, N.Y., Msgr. Allen was ordained to the priesthood in Durham by Bishop Vincent S. Waters of Raleigh in May 1956.

After serving in several parishes throughout the Diocese of Charlotte, Msgr. Allen retired in July 2000 and began a new ministry as a "circuit priest" in Alaska, traveling by plane across an archdiocese covering nearly 14,000 square miles.

Church at forefront of AIDS treatment, prevention

the international community's AIDS-related programs.

Father Robert S. Meyer, a U.S. priest on the staff of the Vatican's U.N. mission, cited estimates of the Pontifical Council for Health Care Workers that more than a fourth of all AIDS services were sponsored by the Catholic Church.

The Catholic AIDS Funding Network Group of donor organizations reports that it funds or sponsors AIDS programs in 102 countries, he said.

Father Meyer presented the Vatican statement to a session described as a "round table on treatment, care and support." It was one of several meetings held by the U.N. General Assembly June 2 to review progress toward goals set at a 2001 special session on AIDS.

At a round table on prevention, Msgr. Ruben Dimaculangan, another staff member of the Vatican mission, said the church does not accept condom use and called for changes in behavior to prevent transmission of the disease.

When people live out their sexuality in a responsible way, the prevention issue has been largely resolved, he said.

Francisco Dionisio, a Portuguese intern at the Vatican mission, told a conference on the question of stigmatizing people with AIDS that the inherent human dignity of every person means "we are called today to fight against the stigma and to continue to care generously and without judgment" for those with AIDS.

At the beginning of the AIDS crisis, he recalled, while "most government agencies, public and private entities, and even family members" abandoned those in need, church agencies "embraced and cared for" people with AIDS.

The call to speak the truth "challenges us to shout that HIV/AIDS is not a punishment, is not a crime, is not a horror, and is not a curse, but rather it is the face of suffering in our brothers and sisters," Dionisio said.

Father Meyer said his round-table topic recalled "the particularly strong and determined leadership shown by the late Pope John Paul II in this area."

The pope promoted education to prevent AIDS, led the church to care for AIDS patients and "through his own personal witness and example" discouraged any kind of stigmatizing of people with AIDS, he said.

Citing a statement on the priority of human rights issued by Pope Benedict XVI shortly after his election, Father Meyer said, "The Holy See wishes to register its strong concern that the rights of people affected by the HIV/AIDS pandemic demand more careful safeguarding and promotion by both governments and civil society."

On treatment, he reported that Catholic Relief Services and the Catholic Medical Mission Board were working with other agencies in a program funded by the U.S. government.

He also said the Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference had sponsored programs at 22 sites in three areas most seriously affected by AIDS — South Africa, Botswana and Swaziland.

And church leaders in many areas are developing ways to mobilize their resources "in a more strategic, efficient and effective manner," he said.

Peter Piot, director of the UNAIDS program, and Richard Feachem, director of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, were asked whether Christianity, Judaism and Islam were part of the problem or were the solution to the AIDS crisis.

"Part of the solution — there's no doubt about that," Piot responded.

Archbishop Emeritus John Donoghue, a nice guy finishes

Love of Eucharist one of archbishop's many qualities

Archbishop Emeritus John F. Donoghue's dream come true was making the fire marshall worry in College Park, Ga., June 4. The Archdiocese of Atlanta's 10th Eucharistic Congress was underway inside the cavernous Georgia International Convention Center near Atlanta and the place was packed.

The congress' record crowd of 23,000 people in 2004 was eclipsed this month by the 29,000 souls who came to hear the speakers, attend Mass and to understand better the source and summit of Catholic life, the Eucharist. The problem was that there were too many people.

Archbishop Emeritus John F. Donoghue

The crowd was orderly, but was apparently larger than the building was designed to hold. Kathi Stearns, chancellor of the archdiocese, added, "At one point the fire marshall was thinking of closing the building to additional attendees."

In 1993, long before the celebrations of this Year of the Eucharist, then-Bishop Donoghue wrote the pastoral letter, "Rejoice in the Lord, Always!" In it he called the transformation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ "the wellspring of our salvation and the ultimate meaning of our individual lives."

He backed up those words, first by establishing perpetual adoration in the Archdiocese of Atlanta — something he had established in the Diocese of Charlotte when he served as bishop 1984 to 1993. Two years later he instituted the first Eucharistic Congress for the Archdiocese of Atlanta. About 1,000 people gathered in a church for a day of worship, praise and proclamation, all centered on the Eucharist.

The congress grew each year to the point where it is now — a focal point of Catholic life in the Atlanta area, an event to which thousands look forward each year, and the model for other dioceses, including the Diocese of Charlotte, that are planning Eucharistic Congresses of their own.

(Mark your calendar for Sept. 23-24 at the Charlotte Convention Center for our first diocesan Eucharistic Congress, and visit the Web site at www.goecucharist.com.)

This year's Eucharistic Congress in Atlanta also marked the last one for Archbishop Donoghue. He retired in January and was succeeded by Archbishop Wilton D. Gregory.

Will the congress continue? A fair question, as Archbishop Gregory may have other spiritual plans for north Georgia. But at a dinner at the end of the June 4 congress, Archbishop Gregory made it clear that the event would continue. His announcement was met with enthusiastic applause, and a smile from Archbishop Donoghue.

This year's congress also marked another milestone for Archbishop Donoghue. It was held on the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. Speaking to the 200 people who gathered for the dinner, the archbishop reminisced about his years in Charlotte, his appointment to Atlanta and his gratitude for the growth of the congress.

His talk was sprinkled with humorous stories, such as his appointment as archbishop. When the papal pro nuncio called to ask if he would go to Atlanta, then-Bishop Donoghue responded, "What for?"

He also explained with a laugh that his new title of archbishop emeritus means that he has a voice, but no vote. There were tears amid the laughter and it was clear that he would be missed.

When dinner was over and goodbyes were being said, a young Dominican nun began singing, a cappella, "Ave Maria." The room became silent as the lovely tune and her soaring lyric soprano voice filled each of us with awe at the new beauty she brought to the familiar verses.

All who were gathered, indeed all who have been privileged to experience Archbishop John Donoghue's leadership — in Charlotte and in Atlanta — had a lot for which to be thankful.

Pope, at audience, urges faithful to appreciate life's great gifts

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — An optimistic outlook on life and an appreciation of life's great gifts prepare us for the great gift of the Eucharist, said Pope Benedict XVI during his weekly general audience.

"Too easily we see the negative aspects of our life," he said June 8 in remarks apart from his prepared text at his audience in St. Peter's Square.

The faithful are invited "to also see the positive things, the many gifts that we receive," and be more appreciative and grateful, the pope said.

"Only a grateful heart can worthily celebrate the great liturgy of gratitude that is the Eucharist," he said.

Some 35,000 people from around the world gathered in the square to hear Pope Benedict's weekly catechesis.

Focusing on Psalm 111, the pope underlined God's unique compassion and tenderness toward his people.

"Compassion is the divine grace that envelops and transforms the faithful" and the Lord's tenderness is even "more merciful than a mother's," he said.

The Lord's saving acts reflect the "intimate bond that ties God to his people," the pope said.

While the psalmist invites the faithful to "fear the Lord," the pope explained

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

this fear refers not to "fright and terror" but to "serious and sincere respect that comes from love."

He said just as the psalm calls on us to be thankful to the Lord, it also asks us to give him praise.

Just as God's covenant and his "saving justice" endure forever, there is "no break" in the psalmist's gratitude and his prayer is "without end."

At the end of the audience, Pope Benedict offered pilgrims greetings in more than 10 languages.

He also made special mention of the presence in the audience of Ukrainian Cardinal Lubomyr Husar of Lviv and a group of about 30 bishops from Eastern Catholic churches in Europe.

Cardinal Husar later introduced each bishop to the pope. The bishops were on a pilgrimage to Rome and other Italian cities to venerate the tombs and relics of some of the church's saints.

The blessedness of marriage

OUR COMMITMENT TO EACH OTHER IS SIMILAR TO GOD'S COMMITMENT TO US

Some time ago I was running with a group of men through a park. During the run, they began to talk about the difficulty at times of understanding their wives.

This makes us wonder why God created marriage in the first place! Why commit one's entire life to a significant other?

Let's go to the Bible for our answer.

The English language gives us the word "chaos" and its opposite "cosmos." In Genesis we read that all was chaos, lacking any semblance of unity. Then God breathed into it, and it became a cosmos, i.e., it was unified.

In other words, life from the beginning is based on the principle of oneness.

When the Hebrews arrive in the Promised Land, they fall into the bad habit of forgetting God who brought them there. Prophets come on the scene and tell the people that they are like an unfaithful wife or husband who has broken the marriage bond. As the prophets tell it, God is a jealous lover forever in pursuit of his beloved.

Moving to the New Testament, we read of the Prodigal Son, a strong-headed young man going his own way. He is given his inheritance, which he squanders. Suddenly he finds his life coming apart. No longer is he connected to his father, his true friends or his home.

The story does not end here, but has the father and son reuniting again. Through their renewed union "a son that was dead is now alive."

The Human Side

FATHER
EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

Here Christ teaches us of God's mercy and especially of God's desire that we be one and alive in him.

When we step back from these examples, we see that the new life the Prodigal Son found is the life God wants for us. This life depends on unification: being one within ourselves, with one another and with God.

As humans, we were born to be one with others. When we disconnect and go our own way, we end up like the people of Babel, the unfaithful Israelites and the wayward Prodigal Son. We tend to come apart, become chaotic and self-destruct.

Marriage signifies the unity that dispels chaos, selfishness and disconnection, and opens the way to beauty, goodness and oneness.

As humorous as that runner's words were, they were profound. Our life is all about committing to a significant other.

Actually, when it is all said and done a principal reason for living our lives virtuously is to be eternally joined to God, who has committed himself completely to us. Our goal is thus to end up in what might be called a truly blessed marriage.

Priesthood: Reflections on my 45th anniversary

A holy priest is one who gives no matter what

As Catholics, we stand firmly against moral relativism and reject that modern-day heresy called "situation ethics." This claims that there are no absolutes and no unbreakable principles.

At the same time we recognize the fact that Jesus condemned the legalistic spirit of those Pharisees who delighted in rigidly enforcing the letter of the law. They put sins like murder and the breaking of the Sabbath fast on the same level. Jesus rebuked this.

We believe that there are absolutes, that is, unbreakable prohibitions like abortion, blasphemy and child abuse. These are always sinful.

However, missing Mass on Sunday is not. Canon law allows you to excuse yourself from the divine command to worship on the Sabbath if you are sick, but not if you are merely lazy or neglectful of your Christian duty to worship God.

I celebrated my 45th anniversary as a priest May 28. I congratulate all my brother priests and deacons who are celebrating their anniversaries this time of year.

Here is a little piece, which I adapted from St. Paul's beautiful passage in 1 Corinthians 13:1: "If I have all the eloquence of men or of angels but speak without love, I am simply a gong booming or a cymbal clashing ..." (Jerusalem Bible).

Spirituality for Today

FATHER JOHN CATOIR
CNS COLUMNIST

Here are a few of my reflections for priests:

—If we were to preach like prophets and impress everyone with our flair for storytelling but had no real love for our audience, the people of God, our words would be lifeless seeds scattered on good soil.

—If we were to administer huge parishes with expert skill but showed no charity toward those under our care, our skills would be fruitless and our people denied.

—If we were to visit the sick and bury the dead with meticulous fidelity to the rubrics but had no empathy for those grieving, we would be robots, light-years removed from the heart of Christ.

—If we loved honors and fancy titles but had no compassion for the poor, we would be like expensive caskets filled with dead men's bones.

—If we were loyal to the church but never rose to her defense in the face of unjust criticism, we would be mere functionaries lacking in courage.

—If we surmounted all temptations and persevered to the end but failed to understand our vocation as instruments of God's love, we would be rosebuds that never bloomed.

A holy priest is one who has the love of Jesus flowing through him. This love never depends on good feelings or kind treatment. It keeps on giving until it hurts.

We priests may not always live up to our highest ideals, but we do try to be loving ministers of the Word. Phariseism is an unconscious vice. Those Pharisees who were criticized always saw themselves as righteous men. Today there may still be some priests who unconsciously tilt in that direction.

But the vast majority of priests agree with St. Alphonsus Liguori, the patron saint of moral theologians, who taught quite clearly in "Theologia Moralis," VI, 918, that a sense of exception can be applied in difficult cases to all manmade laws, and even to secondary formulations of the natural law, as long as there is no malice present.

If you are struggling with some unresolved moral issue, seek the guidance of a good priest to help you to understand the church's teaching on the primacy of an informed conscience.

Here is the bottom line: Orthodoxy without charity is not Christianity.

ABORTION 'INCREASE' IS MISLEADING CLAIM

Life Issues Forum

SUSAN E. WILLS, ESQ.
GUEST COLUMNIST

Did you know that some politicians claim "abortions have gone up 25 percent since George Bush was president"? Are you shocked? Skeptical?

According to data from the Alan Guttmacher Institute (AGI), abortion rates are continuing their gradual 20-year decline. AGI's interim figures show 0.8 percent fewer abortions nationwide in 2001 than in 2000, and a similar drop in 2002.

It's a politically useful claim for those who want to discredit efforts to protect the unborn. But it simply isn't true.

Factcheck.org (a service of the Annenberg Public Policy Center) has traced the claim that abortion rates are increasing during Bush's presidency to a pre-election article published in the online edition of Sojourners. In the article Dr. Glen Stassen's conclusion that abortions increased during the Bush presidency ("52,000 more abortions occurred ... in 2002 than would have been expected") is loosely cobbled from misread and/or unrepresentative data, plus erroneous extrapolations and unsupported assumptions.

Some examples:

His "nationwide" claim is based on figures from only 16 states. By comparison, AGI found decreased abortions from analyzing 44 states, after excluding two statistically unreliable states that Stassen showcased.

Stassen lists South Dakota and Wisconsin as states where abortions increased from 2001 to 2002, but state health records contradict his claim. For South Dakota, he may simply have misread the table: he asserts a 2.1 percent increase in abortions (in fact births rose 2.1 percent), while abortions decreased 9.7 percent that year.

He claims that abortions are rising in Illinois, based on a 0.9 percent increase in 2002. But he ignored Illinois' 10 percent decrease in abortions in 2003, more indicative of a long-term downward trend than a one-year statistical blip.

Moral: If an abortion statistic seems too good, or too awful, to be true, check your facts.

What fathers really want

Some ideas, prayers for dads everywhere

Sometimes it's tough coming up with gift ideas for dear old Dad. (Father's Day is June 19!) Here are a few points to keep in mind:

—No matter their age, all boys like toys.

Dads DON'T like it when family members spend a lot of money on something, and that certainly includes a gift for them. ("I got this for you, Dad" should always quickly be followed by "and it was on sale.")

—No matter their age, all boys like to play.

One of the joys of fatherhood is goofing around with the children. One of the joys of fatherhood is, at least for a little while, getting to be a kid again.

—No matter their age, all boys like treats.

What boy didn't imagine himself all grown up and able to eat whatever he wanted whenever he wanted! While common sense and the physical facts of being middle-aged or older have eliminated "whatever" and "whenever," a treat is still a treat. Even a small and reasonably sensible one is much appreciated.

—No matter their age, all boys like showing somebody else what they've learned or what they can do.

A dad loves it when a son or daughter shows an interest in something he enjoys doing, but — be warned — it can take patience on both sides to learn to share this skill. Teacher and student need to go slowly and remember that, ultimately, the point is not just to learn a particular skill but to spend time together as that learning occurs.

So, ideally ...? Perhaps a reasonably priced toy for Dad and his children to play with, with Dad doing a little coaching along the way. Followed by a treat!

And don't forget!

Use this special day to thank not only dads and granddads but godfathers, uncles, older brothers and any other man who has played an important role in your life.

Assisting refugees is sign of authentic faith, pope says

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope Benedict XVI offered a special prayer for the world's refugees, and said helping them was a sign of authentic faith for Christians.

The pope made the remarks at a blessing June 19 to several thousand people gathered in St. Peter's Square. World Refugee Day was celebrated worldwide the following day.

The pope said the theme of this year's refugee day, "Courage in the Face of Flight and Exile," reminded people of the strong spirit people need when they are forced to flee their homes and their families and face a series of risks and problems.

He said the Catholic Church feels close to refugees

HENDERSONVILLE — Retirement can be a chance to kick back and take life easy.

For Grace Poli, a parishioner at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville, it's an opportunity to immerse herself in church and civic projects.

"I believe that we all have talents, and we're supposed to use those talents," she said. "I feel that as Christians, if we believe in our faith, we're supposed to be good stewards and share them with the larger community. We all can make a contribution, and we all do it in different ways."

Poli's contributions have earned her the Mother Teresa Memorial Award from the Knights of Columbus North

RUNNING ON HOPE

Along the highway, nearing the high point of his journey, Jonathan Williams of West Hartford, Conn., makes his way toward the Continental Divide in New Mexico June 8. The Fordham University graduate is running across America to inspire people to do something positive with themselves and for society.

Man runs across U.S., aims to inspire people to do something positive

GALLUP, N.M. (CNS) — When Jonathan Williams arrived in Gallup June 7, he was one day shy of being one month into a run across America that he has undertaken to inspire people to do something positive with themselves and for society.

"I'm doing this to promote positive attitudes and goals," said the 26-year-old native of West Hartford, Conn. "I want people to think outside of the box."

Williams began his cross-country journey on Mother's Day, May 8, from Newport Beach, Calif. He will end his run in Newport, R.I. He said he did not realize the significance of his departure date until he started running.

"My mother died of breast cancer seven years ago, and I think of her every day but didn't realize the significance of starting the run on Mother's Day until later," Williams said.

He said he decided not to dedicate himself to one particular cause, but to allow people to choose a cause with which they can identify vicariously through him as he made his way across the United States.

For a year, Williams roughed out the course he would take across the United States. To carry along his clothes, sleeping bag and personal belongings, he pushes a three-wheeled stroller.

Averaging 25 to 30 miles per day with breaks that last no more than two days, Williams anticipates arriving in Newport by early October.

During his breaks he relies heavily on the generosity of people to help house and feed him. Firehouses have been common spots for Williams to sleep. He has spent nights in motels paid for by strangers who became interested in his effort.

"People are inherently good, sometimes they forget just how good they are," said Williams. "I've told my girlfriend many times that if people treated each other like they have treated me, the world would be an even more incredible place."

It is this optimism that Williams said he has shared with adults and children along the way. He sees his run as a pilgrimage of hope not only for him but for others.

"I've broken down crying on more than one occasion because of the sheer physical and emotional stress," said Williams, but added that he told himself, "I'm not going to let this day beat me!"

Catholic Extension marks 100th anniversary in Chicago

CHICAGO (CNS) — More than 180 bishops gathered at Chicago's Holy Name Cathedral June 15 to celebrate the accomplishments of Catholic Extension over the past 100 years.

"It's a great joy for many of the bishops of the United States who are here to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Catholic Extension Society," said Chicago Cardinal Francis E. George, the group's chancellor, prior to the Mass.

"The society was founded with a zeal to allow the church to flourish in every part of our land," he said.

The Mass, celebrated the evening before the beginning of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' June meeting, gave Extension leaders an opportunity to thank the bishops for their support. The support of bishops, priests and lay people has allowed Catholic Extension to give more than $400 million to the home missions — Catholic communities in dioceses around the country that are too poor or too small to meet all their own needs.

The organization started small, said Archbishop Oscar H. Lipscomb of Mobile, Ala., the group's vice chancellor. He noted that Catholic Extension, then known as the Catholic Church Extension Society, was founded by a young Canadian-born priest serving a small parish in northern Michigan.

Father Francis Clement Kelley started the group after being moved by the poverty he saw in rural and remote America. Ironically, Father Kelley was on a speaking tour trying to raise money to pay off the church he built in Lapeer, Mich., when he saw far greater needs in other areas.

CORRECTIONS

Mercy Sister Mary Timothy Warren, diocesan vicar for women religious, was incorrectly identified as a jubilarian celebrating an anniversary to the religious life in a photo caption in the June 10 issue.

In the "Wiping away the despair" story (May 27), it should have stated that Maryknoll Sister Joan Petrick, not Maryknoll Sister Joan Uhlen, spoke at St. William and Immaculate Heart of Mary churches. Also, the Somotillo Committee members of St. William and Immaculate Heart of Mary churches are Father George Kloester, Susan Haley, Mike Regner, Iowa Van Hamme, Mary Lou La Penna, Mary Colabella, Joan Otte, George and Mary Ann Schwane, and Notre Dame Sister Terry Martin. Mary Priest and Margaret Norton were very active committee members but have recently moved away.

FROM THE VATICAN

Simplified catechism to be released June 28 at Vatican liturgy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The shortened, simplified version of the "Catechism of the Catholic Church" will be presented by Pope Benedict XVI during a June 28 liturgy at the Vatican.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said national bishops' conferences would be responsible for translating the volume into their local languages and for publishing the volume in partnership with the Vatican publishing house.

The "Compendium of the Catechism of the Catholic Church" was drafted by a committee led by the new pope while he was prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

A draft of the volume, in which church teaching is presented in a question-and-answer form, was sent for comment in early 2004 to all the cardinals and the presidents of bishops' conferences around the world.

"Forty years after the conclusion of the Second Vatican Council and in the heart of the Year of the Eucharist, the compendium can be a precious aid for satisfying the hunger for truth felt by every human person of every age and condition," said Navarro-Valls.

In 2003, Pope John Paul II commissioned the shorter, simpler version of the 865-page catechism, saying there seemed to be a widespread desire for "a brief compendium containing all the fundamental elements of Catholic faith and morals, formulated in a simple and clear manner."

The late pope had said the new, shorter text would "faithfully mirror" the "Catechism of the Catholic Church" and would be "an authoritative, sure and complete synthesis."

HICKORY — A Charismatic Mass is celebrated the first Thursday of each month in Sebastian Chapel of St. Aloysius Church, 921 Second St. NE, at 7 p.m. For further information, contact Joan Moran (828)-327-0487.

Vatican officials say giving blood helps Christians heal the sick

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Top Vatican officials encouraged blood donation, saying it was a powerful and practical way to carry out Christ's command to heal the sick.

Pope Benedict XVI, addressing pilgrims from his apartment window June 12, sent special greetings to blood donors everywhere to mark World Blood Donor Day June 14.

He said Christians should find inspiration for blood donation in Christ, who "redeemed us with his blood."

Cardinal Javier Lozano Barragan, head of the Pontifical Council for Health Care Workers, celebrated Mass near the Vatican June 12 with several hundred blood donation volunteers. In a sermon, he asked why people should give blood.

The answers are many, he said. For one thing, despite millions of donors each year, the world does not have enough blood to meet medical needs — especially in poorer countries.

Many give blood out of a sense of solidarity or compassion for the sick, he said. But for Christians, donating blood should have another special meaning.

"Christ gave to his disciples a specific mandate: 'Heal the sick,'" he said.

"Beyond solidarity and natural compassion, there is this mandate of Christ, whom we obey with our innermost nature by giving blood. This is a great satisfaction, fulfilling from our hearts Christ's command to give health," Cardinal Lozano said.

The cardinal added that giving blood was also a concrete way for Christians to oppose what church leaders have called the "culture of death" and its values of selfish pleasure, power and domination.

The World Health Organization began sponsoring the annual blood donation awareness day in 2004. It said that 82 percent of the world's population does not have the certainty they will receive safe blood if a transfusion is needed.

The situation is worst in impoverished countries, where most people have to rely on family replacement donations or paid donations, the WHO said.

It said more than 80 million units of blood are donated every year around the world, but only 39 percent is collected in developing countries, where 82 percent of the global population lives.

Making home sweet again

Diocesan Housing Corporation donates $5,000 to Home Repair program

GREENSBORO — Many low-income homeowners now will be able to make much-needed repairs, thanks to a $5,000 gift to Greensboro's new Home Repair program from the Catholic Diocese of Charlotte Housing Corporation (CDCHC).

Launched by Habitat for Humanity of Greater Greensboro and other partners, the Home Repair program specializes in making much-needed repairs for low-income homeowners, many of whom are elderly and can no longer afford to make basic repairs to their aging homes.

The CDCHC was founded in 2001 in response to the need among seniors for affordable housing. The CDCHC works within the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte in western North Carolina. Its mission is to seek housing solutions for seniors, individuals and families with low incomes and those with special needs.

In addition to seeking out opportunities to develop and manage affordable housing facilities, the CDCHC also aims to partner with other local groups who share its mission of addressing the housing needs of the most vulnerable.

"Since part of our goal is to work with nonprofits and others of good will to leaven our collective talents to improve housing, this seemed like a natural fit for the CDCHC," said Gerard Carter, director of the CDCHC.

"By providing a financial contribution to Housing Greensboro (the Home Repair program) at this early stage in its development, it is our hope to encourage the creation of an organizational structure that will support this initiative for many years to come," he said.

The Home Repair program is helping homeowners like "Leroy," who's raising his two grandchildren on an insufficient Social Security income. His longtime home had fallen into disrepair — a leaking roof, a hole in the ceiling and deteriorating insulation.

After repairs were made, his utility bill decreased from $350 per month to $81 per month.

As of May 2005, the Home Repair team had undertaken repairs on 13 homes. There are seven home repairs in process and 14 other families approved and awaiting repairs.

"We're so grateful for the support of the CDCHC for the Home Repair ministry," said Bob Kelley, executive director of Habitat for Humanity of Greater Greensboro, who is providing oversight of the program.

"Our waiting list of families who need home repairs is growing and this generous donation will go a long way toward helping us meet their needs," he said.

IN MEMORIAM

The journeyman

Msgr. Allen, retired priest, dies at 74

Mission-spirited priest leaves indelible mark

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — Msgr. Richard Allen, a retired diocesan priest, died June 7 in Charlotte.

A funeral Mass was celebrated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis of Charlotte with Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin and Archbishop Emeritus Francis Hurley of Anchorage, Alaska, June 10 at St. Gabriel Church. He was buried at Belmont Abbey cemetery.

Msgr. Allen, an avid traveler and licensed pilot, began and ended his 49-year career as a priest traveling and ministering to people in rural areas. Throughout his ministry, he organized and worked in many outreach programs for the youth, needy and disenfranchised.

Msgr. Allen spent his first year as a priest with the Missionary Fathers Apostolate as an assistant at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Newton Grove. In 1957, he traveled in a camper to celebrate Mass in rural areas of North Carolina, and later served at Sacred Heart Cathedral in Raleigh.

Over the next four decades, he served diligently as pastor of six parishes and vicar forane of two vicariates.

He served as a counselor at Notre Dame High School in Greensboro and as state chaplain of the Knights of Columbus.

Msgr. Allen retired in June 2000 and, with the blessing of then-Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte, left to become a "circuit priest" to minister to people in rural Alaska. He traveled by planes, boats, cars and even snowmobiles to the outlying areas of the state.

Following his retirement from the Diocese of Charlotte July 2000, Msgr. Richard Allen ventured north to Alaska to work as a "circuit priest," echoing his early days as a priest in North Carolina. Msgr. Allen died June 9 at the age of 74.

Diocese of Anchorage is significantly larger than North Carolina, the missionary spirit of the area reminded Msgr. Allen of his early days in North Carolina.

"I average seven Masses a weekend, some said in small churches, others in homes, schools, cinder-block basements, fish canneries and even on the wing of an airplane," he said in an October 2003 interview with The Catholic News & Herald. "The people have a strong faith and make every effort to come to church whether there is a priest there or not. Some travel up to 100 miles for Sunday Mass."

Msgr. Allen noted that his new ministry freed him from administrative duties.

"I concentrate on what I am asked to do, be it Sunday Mass, a funeral or hospital visits in Anchorage," he said in 2003. "I may be asked to go to a fishing village and spend the day with a fisherman. I might not fish, just converse with him about his faith."

Even in retirement, Msgr. Allen rarely slowed his active schedule. In addition to his ministerial schedule, he continued to lead trips to Europe, his last being in January 2005.

Msgr. Allen happily showed his friends and former parishioners his northern home, leading a group on a 10-day trip there in July 2001.

In June 2003 he led a group of 22 teenagers and five chaperones from St. Therese Church in Mooresville and St. Ann Church on a two-week mission trip through the Diocese of Anchorage.

Pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury July 1982-July 1988. Vicar forane of the Albemarle Vicariate, August 1982-July 1988.

Pastor of St. Ann Church in Charlotte, July 1988-June 2000.

Died: June 7, 2005 in Charlotte, N.C.

Over the years, Msgr. Allen became known for his firm but loving guidance of his teenage parishioners, chaperoning many trips to his mountain cabin, through the Canadian wilderness and on sailing trips to the Bahamas.

Linda Diorio, a close friend of Msgr. Allen, recalled how he reached out to her adolescent sons in 1978. Fifteen-year-old Todd was "drifting down the wrong road" following his parents' painful divorce.

"He guided Todd away from the direction in which he was headed, and helped him to get away from drugs," Diorio said. "My youngest son, Craig, also became close to Father Allen, who helped him through school, sponsored him for Outward Bound, and guided him along the right paths."

"Father Allen's contribution to the community was amazing," Diorio said. "God surely had a superior soldier in his army in Richard Allen."

Poli honored with Mother Teresa award

Carolina state council.

The award, announced by John Harrison, Mother Teresa Award chairman for the state council, was presented by Capuchin Franciscan Father John Aurilia, pastor of Immaculate Conception Church, during Mass June 18.

David Onofrio, Knights of Columbus state deputy, was on hand to announce two $250 donations to the Henderson County Council on Aging and Interfaith Assistance Ministry (IAM) on Poli's behalf.

Annually since 1999, the state council has conferred one Mother Teresa Award in each of the Charlotte and Raleigh dioceses. In addition to a plaque, the recipients receive $500 checks to help carry on their ministries.

"The question the nominating committee asks is, 'Do we see a bit of Mother Teresa in that person?'" Harrison explained.

Pastors nominate candidates from their parishes.

"Grace Poli's ministry can be described in three words: service, leadership and love," Father Aurilia said in his nomination letter.

"She is a woman of strong faith and solid Catholic values," he said. "Her ministry has many branches; however, the root and the center is Jesus himself."

"I feel very strongly about my faith, and I think that just about everything I do is guided by my faith," Poli said. "When I used to go to seminars, they would say, 'Prioritize your values.' For me it was faith, family and work. If you believe that, you have to put it into practice."

Poli serves as board vice president of IAM, a nondenominational crisis intervention program funded by Henderson County churches. She also has been a member of IAM's Strategic Planning Committee and was on IAM's "Taste of Hendersonville" fundraising committee.

She volunteers with IAM's Faith Link, which in nonfinancial ways helps women get the social services they need.

"People who are at the poverty level feel powerless," Poli said. "They don't know the system. We help them get through the system."

She and her husband, Joe, moved to North Carolina in 1988. Grace worked for a bank, and their jobs and raising four children left little time to volunteer.

"I worked nights for nine years and my husband worked days so one of us would always be home," Poli said.

Even so, she was active in the National Association of Bank Women and mentored some of the women at the bank. She attended Mundelein College part time, earning her bachelor's degree in business the year before she retired as a bank vice president in human resources.

At St. Joseph Church in Downer's Grove, Ill., she taught third-grade religion classes and served on the parish council.

Arriving in Hendersonville, Grace joined the League of Women Voters. Joe was a member of the Knights of Columbus at Immaculate Conception Church.

"I felt if you were moving into an area, you should learn about the area and the best way was through the league," she said. "They asked me if I would chair a committee that would look into child care."

The result was a child care coalition.

"We brought women from agencies that dealt with young children," Poli said. "What we did was come together on a monthly basis to exchange information about what was happening."

"Today, our community's children have a Child Care Resource and Referral program, the Children and Family Resource Center, the Henderson County Partnership for Children, and other services," said Liston B. Smith, Henderson County Department of Social Services director in his letter endorsing Poli's Mother Teresa nomination.

But that wasn't all.

"In addition to child day care, Grace has provided leadership in addressing many other children's needs in our community," Smith wrote. "Grace was a founding member and chairperson for both the local Smart Start board and Kids Count initiative. Taking a special interest in neglected children, especially children placed in foster care, Grace successfully advocated for and established additional financial resources and policies/procedures protecting the rights of foster parents and foster children."

Poli has also served as chair of the Henderson County Board of Social Services and as a board member of the Henderson County Council on Aging. She completed the mediation course at the Dispute Settlement Center of Henderson County and now trains other volunteers in dispute resolution.

At Immaculate Conception Church, she's an extraordinary minister of the Eucharist and lector. Father Aurelia wrote that, as a member of the parish council, Poli is "reshaping the structure of our parish profile as well as making our committees workable and alive. She does all of the above with love and a deep sense of humility and service."

Grace and Joe Poli had been married 56 years when he died last December. Grace has continued on, but now prefers to remain behind the scenes.

"I don't like attention," she said. "I like to do my thing, stay in the background and let it go at that. I know what I've done. Someone else (God) knows what I've done. I don't have to be rewarded any more than that."

YEAR OF THE EUCHARIST

The second movement: the consecration

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 19

In our study of the Mass, we discovered that the liturgy of the Eucharist is composed of three distinct movements: the offertory, the consecration and the reception of holy Communion. Last time, we concluded our examination of the offertory, where we have the opportunity to offer ourselves to God as our Lord offered himself to his heavenly Father.

The essence of Christianity is the reproduction of what Jesus encountered in the soul of each and every individual in the world. As our Lord accepted his suffering, crucifixion, death and the glory of the resurrection, so also every person is to offer his or her human nature as an offering to the heavenly Father. We are to die to sin in order to rise and live in grace and glory.

In the offertory, we present and offer gifts of bread and wine as well as ourselves to the Father. And in the second movement, the consecration, we unite ourselves with the perfect sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the high priest and victim.

We now turn to the second movement, the consecration, to investigate how this is accomplished.

The consecration of the Mass occurs within the larger context of the prayer, known as the Canon or the Eucharistic Prayer. The Canon begins with the Preface and continues through the doxology chanted by the celebrant and concelebrants: "Through him, with him and in him"

The Canon, as a prayer of thanksgiving and sanctification, is the center and the summit of the entire Mass. The Canon is recited by the celebrant alone, or parts may be recited by other concelebrating priests. In either case, the priest speaks on behalf of the church, often denoted by the use of "we": "We offer to you ..."; "We pray to you"

However, in the "institution narrative," the person speaking changes although the voice remains the same. No longer does the priest speak on behalf of the church, but now Christ speaks. No longer is it "We pray to you," but "This is my body."

Here, within this prayer the Son addressed to the Father, eternity breaks into time, as the voice of Jesus Christ, the high priest, is heard speaking the sacred words consecrating bread and wine into his own body and blood.

As Pope John Paul II wrote in "Ecclesia de Eucharistia," "the priest says these words, or rather he puts his voice at the disposal of the One who spoke these words in the Upper Room and who desires that they should be repeated in every generation ..." (5).

This is the most solemn moment in the Mass, the greatest expression of love on earth. That is why the church instructs us that "the Eucharistic Prayer demands that all listen to it with reverence and in silence" (GIRM 78).

This second movement, the consecration, truly makes present the perfect sacrifice of Jesus Christ. As the Holy Father adds in the same encyclical, "When the church celebrates the Eucharist, the memorial of her Lord's death and resurrection, this central event of salvation becomes really present and 'the work of our redemption is carried out.' ... The sacrifice of Christ and the sacrifice of the Eucharist are one single sacrifice" (11).

And so before the Eucharist is a banquet, it is first of all the sacrifice of our Lord on the cross. In other words, before the reception of holy Communion is the consecration, where Christ perpetuates and continues throughout time his redemptive sacrifice.

Why? What is the purpose of continually re-presenting his sacrifice if the redemption already occurred?

Above all, the sacrifice of Christ is true worship of the Father. The sacrifice of the Son gives glory and honor to the Father. Further, you and I are the beneficiaries of his sacrifice. The fruits of the redemption must now be applied to our souls.

Finally, Jesus instructed us to, "Do this in memory of me." And so in humble obedience, the church faithfully follows the command of the Lord to offer the sacrifice of Christ, that not only may bread and wine become his body and blood, but more importantly, that we may be consecrated to him and more and more become what we receive: the body of Christ.

LIVING THE FAITH

JUBILIARIAN SPIRIT

Four Sisters of Mercy celebrate 195 years of combined service

CHARLOTTE — Four Sisters of Mercy who have given a combined 195 years of service publicly renewed their vows recently.

More than 250 women religious, associates, family and friends gathered during a Mass honoring the sisters and their anniversaries to the religious life at St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte June 11. Renewing their vows were Mercy Sisters Mary Emmanuel Blasi, Mary Matthew Snow, Mary Rosalind Picôt and Joanne Agnes Kuhlmann.

Mercy Sister Mary Emmanuel Blasi

Mercy Sister Mary Emmanuel Blasi celebrated 70 years as a Sister of Mercy.

The platinum jubilarian, born Catherine Florence Blasi in Brooklyn, N.Y., entered the Sisters of Mercy on Aug. 14, 1934.

Sister Blasi taught at St. Patrick School in Charlotte and Sacred Heart School in Salisbury. In 1938 she was assigned to an orphanage's dietary department.

Until her retirement, she remained in one kitchen or another. From the dietary departments of St. Joseph's Hospital in Asheville, St. Leo's Boarding School and Sacred Heart Junior College in Belmont to serving as director of the dietary department at Mercy Hospital in Charlotte, Sister Blasi nourished both bodies and souls.

She also managed the coffee shop and volunteered as a sister visitor at Mercy Hospital while serving as local superior of Mercy Hospital Convent.

She later served as local superior of the Belmont motherhouse from 1974 to 1976, and also began a prayer ministry.

Involved in the charismatic renewal movement, Sister Blasi attended monthly charismatic Masses in the diocese and was actively involved in a weekly prayer group.

She also undertook a month-long mission to Juarez, Mexico, to help distribute food and clothing to needy families.

"The best thing about my trip was the peace I found in understanding how you can live without all the comforts of life and be at peace and enjoy every moment of life," she said. "Each day was a new challenge."

Mercy Sister Mary Matthew Snow

Mercy Sister Mary Matthew Snow celebrated 50 years as a Sister of Mercy.

Born in Maine as Sylvia Snow, she credits her mother and grandmother with instilling in her strong Christian principles.

After entering the Sisters of Mercy in 1954, Sister Snow said she was influenced by the humility, compassion and humor of Mother Maura Buchheit, then-mother superior.

As a member of Mercy Institute, Sister Snow emphasized her passion for the Sisters of Mercy's mission and service to the poor, sick and uneducated, primarily through her teaching. In teaching science, Sister Snow sought to create an atmosphere for learning, help students be more aware of the world around them and understand their unique roles in God's world.

cess," she said. "We're always learning something new."

For 50 years, Sister Snow has regaled her religious community with her widespread and somewhat unusual talents. Known for her penchant for writing and for adventures, Sister Snow is proficient at snowmobiling, hot-air ballooning, hiking and snowshoeing.

Mercy Sister Mary Rosalind Picôt

Mercy Sister Mary Rosalind Picôt celebrated 50 years as a Sister of Mercy. She was born Mary Rose Picôt in Wilmington Sept. 18, 1933.

Attending St. Mary's Catholic School in Wilmington, which was staffed by the Sisters of Mercy, Sister Picôt felt an attraction to religious life.

After considering another religious order and serving as a medical missionary, she instead was received into the Sisters of Mercy in 1955.

As a young sister, she admired and strove to emulate the qualities of Mother Mary Benignus Hoban.

"She was so real, down-to-earth, joyful, holy and had a keen sense of humor," said Sister Picôt.

The motto Sister Picôt chose as a postulant, "In te, domine, speravi," translates as "In you, oh Lord, have I hoped." Unknown to Sister Picôt at the time, it was the same motto Mother Benignus had chosen.

Sister Picôt spent many years educating Catholic youths, and enjoyed teaching and serving as principal at Charlotte Catholic High School.

She served in educational administration at Sacred Heart College and spent eight years as vice president and eight years as president of the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina.

What has kept her a Sister of Mercy for 50 years?

"I entered to search for God. I stay for the same reason — I keep finding God in so many different ways, events and people," she said. "There have been sudden revelations and an evolving process, filled with God's grace. And it's all so exciting and fulfilling that I eagerly await whatever is next."

Mercy Sister Joanne Agnes Kuhlmann

Mercy Sister Joanne Agnes Kuhlmann celebrated 25 years as a Sister of Mercy.

Born in Hartford, Conn., Sister Kuhlmann was active in Catholic youth activities and developed a deep faith while growing up.

After college, she became a commissioned officer in the U.S. Air Force Nurse Corps. She encountered the Sisters of Mercy at Pope Air Force base outside Fayetteville during a liturgical workshop sponsored by the Diocese of Charlotte. Shortly thereafter, she began

Sisters of Mercy gather at institute chapter

SILVER SPRINGS, Md. — More than 300 members of the Sisters of Mercy are currently gathered to elect new leadership and determine how they can best respond to changing needs of the world.

The sisters are holding the meeting, called an "institute chapter," at the Texas A&M International University in Laredo, Texas, June 20-30.

Throughout the chapter, Sisters of Mercy from North, Central and South America, the Caribbean, Guam and the Philippines will probe questions of identity, governance, new membership, and forms of commitment.

Decisions are part of a multiyear planning process involving 4,630 sisters; 2,615 lay associates; and thousands of coworkers in reconfiguring the 25 regional communities that comprise the Institute of the Sisters of Mercy of the Americas.

In addition to electing the institute president and leadership team, the sisters will develop interim legislation that will lead to changes in their constitution, a document by which religious congregations govern themselves.

While in Laredo, the sisters plan to visit various neighborhoods June 24 to meet and learn from women whose lives are limited by economic and social factors exploring a call to the religious life and in 1979 resigned her commission.

"I chose the Sisters of Mercy because of the vow of service," she said.

Of her many assignments, her current one as nurse case manager with Franciscan Home Care is her favorite.

"I feel that I am treated with dignity and respect and have the time to minister to my patients," she said.

Looking toward the future, Sister Kuhlmann hopes to write a book on the history of her religious community from 1931 to 1991.

ALASTING LEGACY

Sister Dennis Eileen honored for lifetime of community

BY SUSAN DEGUZMAN
CORRESPONDENT

WINSTON-SALEM — The church overflowed with admirers of Sister of St. Joseph Dennis Eileen at a special Mass of thanksgiving at St. Leo the Great Church June 12.

Sister Eileen, now retiring at 88 years of age, was honored for her impact on the community. The extent of her life's work was captured in an article of a local newspaper on her last day as pastoral minister at Wake Forest University Baptist Medical Center June 3.

"The fact that an old nun ... is on the front page of the paper, that is God's grace working in my life," revealed Sister Eileen, who has ministered to the sick since 1983.

Regina King, admissions supervisor at the hospital, praised Sister Eileen's "undying dedication and overwhelming commitment," and described her as "feisty, compassionate, witty, loving, fragile yet strong and, to many of us, she is our saint."

Sister Eileen is grateful for the opportunity to help people.

"Of all the blessings God has given me, his greatest is (the opportunity) to visit the sick and the needy," she said.

For those who are dying, she said, "I love to help somebody get a peace and calm before they are called, and to be there for the family."

Sister Eileen never turned down a patient's request for a visit. Many non-Catholic patients asked for her, according to Jane Litzinger, a chaplain supervisor of the Pastoral Care Center at the hospital. In order to ensure a visit from Sister Eileen, some patients would falsely designate themselves as Catholic on the admissions list.

On occasions that Litzinger would fill in for Sister Eileen, she would sometimes be politely turned away by patients who felt there was no substitute.

Sister Eileen believed her sensitivity allowed patients to connect with her.

"When I begin, I don't know what I'm going to say," she said. "The Holy Spirit inspires me. ... I say whatever the Lord moves me to say at the moment."

Raised by her grandparents in Philadelphia, Sister Eileen's interest in religious life was stirred by one of her teachers, a Sister of St. Joseph. Sister Eileen joined the convent in 1934.

She served as a teacher for several years before being asked to serve as an extraordinary minister of the Eucharist at the hospital. Later, she devoted herself to full-time work as a hospital chaplain.

She also served as a volunteer and board member of AIDS Care Service for more than 10 years.

Sister of St. Joseph Dennis Eileen greets Beth and Paul Hoeing, parishioners of St. Leo the Great Church in Winston-Salem, at a parish reception for Sister Eileen's retirement June 12.

Sister Eileen is retiring to her congregation's motherhouse in Philadelphia.

"We are very confident that you will take Christ with you to Philadelphia," said Father Thomas Kessler pastor of St. Leo the Great Church, during his homily. "We are so grateful to you and to almighty God for his work through you. You speak with your actions and you have done that well."

Following Mass, Father Kessler presented Sister Eileen with several gifts from the parish.

"Father didn't prepare me for this," she told the congregation. "I want you to know ... I'll hold you in my heart and my prayers and, until God calls me, I'll pray for you."

Sabbatical will take priest through Asian culture

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — For many students at Asheville Catholic School, Father Frank Cancro is the only priest they have known in any personal capacity.

That is about to change. The pastor of St. Eugene Church is going on a year-long sabbatical, effective July 5, that will take him throughout Asia.

During his homily at a farewell Mass May 31, Father Cancro told the students gathered that they carry the "gift of faith" and that it "will sustain you through all the good-byes and hellos, our beginning and our end."

"The love you feel in your heart never goes away," he said.

Each school family designed a small piece of cloth; the patches and a picture of the students were sewn into a quilt that was presented along with gift bags.

In thanking the students, Father Cancro noted he could see "a lot of chocolate in these gift bags that will sustain me over the first two months in Asia, where chocolate is difficult to obtain."

Father Cancro plans to study the monastic life, visit Maryknoll missionaries and explore the Catholic faith in several Asian countries, including Cambodia, China, Korea, Vietnam and the Philippines, where he will do course work.

He plans to celebrate Christmas and Mass on an island in Micronesia that has a small Catholic community but no priest, electricity nor running water.

In Vietnam, Father Cancro will teach English at a university. In Cambodia, he will visit a Maryknoll orphanage that cares for children maimed by land mines.

Upon his return, Father Cancro hopes to write articles about his experiences.

Eighth-graders at St. Michael School in Gastonia perform "Treasure at Bentley Inn" at the school May 26. The play, a mystery-comedy, had the audience roaring with laughter as a young man, played by student Parker Holland, writes a news article about a treasure map hidden at the Bentley Inn run by his girlfriend, played by Hannah Meeler. Hoping the article would boost business, the inn is soon packed with an array of characters, including swindlers, gangsters and little old ladies all frantically searching for the hidden treasure.

Oliver Warbucks, played by Joe Mankowski, and Grace Farrell, played by Lucia Leahy, ponder Annie's fate during "Annie Jr.," a play performed by the Drama Club at Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School in Charlotte. Comprised of about 60 sixth- and seventh-graders led by parent Rosemary Nocella Franz and other parent volunteers, the Drama Club performed for the school May 6, for the public May 7 and for rising fifth-graders in the Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools system May 10. Eighth-graders and students from Charlotte Catholic High School also assisted in the production set in Depression-era New York about an orphan determined to find her parents. In a series of adventures, Annie befriends President Franklin Roosevelt and finds a new family in billionaire Warbucks, his personal secretary Farrell and a loveable dog named Sandy.

The pre-kindergarten class at Asheville Catholic School is all smiles while helping serve food, tea and gifts during the school's Mother's Day Tea Party May 6.

Pre-K students end year with party, diplomas

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — Between serving tea and collecting diplomas, May was a busy month for the pre-kindergarten class at Asheville Catholic School. The students helped make the Mother's Day Tea Party May 6 a special day by preparing desserts, setting up tables and decorating with flower arrangements. Girls with aprons and boys in white shirts and black ties then served their parents and grandparents, sang songs and presented gifts of decorated tote bags and flowers. The pre-kindergarteners proudly marched into the school auditorium May 27 for their diplomas, presented by their teacher Jennifer Palmer. The students sang songs before each told his or her favorite part of the school year. Highlights included field trips to the pumpkin patch and zoo, planting a garden and singing to the homeless. The students' eighth-grade Big Buddies then spoke about what made their Little Buddies special.

Students chosen for local chamber leadership program

HIGH POINT — Seventh-graders Robert Garland, Kenneth Kennedy and Jennifer Lindh at Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point have been selected by the High Point Chamber of Commerce to participate this summer in its Teen Leadership program.

Teen Leadership is a weeklong community awareness program for rising eighth-grade students in public and private middle schools and home schools in the High Point area. Its goal is for students to increase their awareness of and concern for their community, improve their leadership skills and learn about career options.

Each day's program will be at a different location to give students a taste of various business settings and career possibilities. Past locations have included The Millis Regional Health Education Center, Guilford County Courthouse, FOX8-TV, the High Point Enterprise newspaper, Open Door Ministries, Thomas Built Buses and the Piedmont Centre Business Park.

Students interested in participating in Teen Leadership had to fill out applications and obtain written recommendations.

It was Deacon Ayala's first time assisting at his home parish since being ordained to the transitional diaconate by Bishop Peter J. Jugis at St. Vincent Seminary in Latrobe, Pa., April 3.

The transitional diaconate is the final step before ordination to the priesthood. Seminarians serve one year as transitional deacons before they are eligible to be ordained as priests.

Born in Argentina, Deacon Ayala was a parishioner of and was employed at the basilica before entering St. Vincent Seminary, where he is in his third year. Ayala also recently served a pastoral internship at St. Barnabas Church in Arden.

Five graduate from ministry extension program

BY KEVINE E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — Five people from the Diocese of Charlotte recently took big steps in their ministry formation.

Mike Wilson, Lynn Rogers, Jim Dudley, Susan Krasniewski and Pat White graduated from Loyola Institute of Ministry Extension (LIMEX) program at Loyola University in New Orleans, La., in May.

The Loyola program offers master's degrees and non-credit, continuing education certificates in religious education and pastoral studies from Loyola University. The Diocese of Charlotte began sponsoring the opportunity for higher education in 1998. Prior to that, the Oratory in Rock Hill, S.C., was the sponsoring agency for students in the diocese.

The graduates and their facilitators, Ann Rowe and Julie Platte, gathered for a celebratory dinner in Charlotte April 7.

"After many years of hard work, they have accomplished their task and the Diocese of Charlotte has five new lay people with theological training who can help in the church's mission at various levels," said Frank Villaronga, director of diocesan evangelization and ministry formation for the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Some are working in the churches and can bring what they have learned to their day-to-day efforts," he said.

Founded in 1983, the 36-hour program offers a total of 12 classes for the non-traditional student, a person who works a full-time job or has a family and cannot attend classes on a college campus.

The students gather with a Loyola-trained facilitator to discuss what they have read for the class, and watch videos and listen to audiotapes as supplements to their own study. Each class can require up to four papers with up to 20 hours of preparation per week.

The 10 core courses consist of subjects such as practical theology, pastoral leadership and organization, church, sacraments and ethics, and other classes. The two focus classes include youth ministry, Hispanic ministry, religious education and other areas of concentration.

"The students meet in learning groups, so they can be challenged and challenge others as they focus on practical theology," said Villaronga. "They integrate the material into their lives and into the complex world around them."

Villaronga said LIMEX learning groups can be formed anywhere there is interest. Currently, additional groups are being formed throughout the Diocese of Charlotte.

Examining the good and bad of Harry

Three books on Harry Potter and Gospel messages

REVIEWED BY JEAN GONZALEZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

"Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince" by J.K. Rowling will hit stores July 16, but not everyone is wild about Harry.

Three new books offer insight about the young wizard's tales: two for and one against. The "pro" books will have Potter fans racing for highlighters to underline insightful passages, tips on talking to children about the books and keys to symbols in the series. The single "con" book could be boiled down to: "Read Deuteronomy 18."

"Looking for God in Harry Potter" by John Granger asks on the cover, "Is there Christian meaning hidden in the best-selling books?" His answer is "Yes."

Granger is the "Harry Potter Professor" at Barnes and Noble University, a free, online offering of courses and reading groups where he has taught a course on using the series in children's literature classes. He guides readers seeking the spiritual messages in the books and uses Bible passages to back up his notions.

Granger sees in the Potter books such Gospel values as the ultimate triumph of love over evil, loyalty, friendship and the good or bad consequences individual choices have on an entire community.

Granger finds it significant that Potter uses incantational, not invocational, magic.

"Incantational magic is about harmonizing with God's word by imitation," Granger explains. "Invocational magic is about calling in evil spirits for power or advantage — always a tragic mistake."

It is invocational magic that is contrary to Scripture, he says. Thus, concern that the books might lay a foundation for occult practices is "misplaced" because Potter magic is not "demonic."

Potter fans will love the insight Granger has about the Potter symbols and scenarios, especially the chapter on the historical and spiritual significance of alchemy. Throughout the book are high-light-worthy passages.

Don't put that highlighter away if you grab Mary Margaret Keaton's "Imagining Faith with Kids," subtitled "Unearthing Seeds of the Gospel in Children's Stories from Peter Rabbit to Harry Potter." Keaton looks at how the messages of Gospel stories, fables and literary classics can enrich children's lives.

Keaton suggests ways parents and catechists can look for "seeds of Gospel messages" within stories and spark conversations with children about those messages.

In one example, Keaton parallels "The Little Engine That Could" to the parable of the good Samaritan.

Keaton says that parents who discuss with children the seeds of the Gospel in the Potter books will find more in the series than just the comfort that "at least Johnny's reading a book."

Steve Wohlberg's "Hour of the Witch: Harry Potter, Wicca Witchcraft and the Bible" tries to warn readers of the sinful and even devilish nature of the Potter series. Wohlberg, director of Endtime Insights radio and television ministry, admits he never liked what he calls the idea behind the novels — glorifying witchcraft.

Wohlberg's basic conclusions are that the Potter series is bad because it might inspire readers to learn more about Wicca, which is bad, and Harry Potter makes sorcery look good and cool, even though the Bible states sorcery is bad. Wohlberg points to Deuteronomy 18 as a biblical passage in which sorcery is seen as evil.

The author goes so far as to imply that perhaps the devil inspired Rowling — unbeknownst to her — to write the Potter series and to get it published. He says parents turn a blind eye to that notion because "at least Johnny's reading." Wohlberg's interesting proposition is delivered in a condescending, single-minded, doom-and-gloom tone.

In God, there is truth, guidance, wisdom

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

For years, my regular meeting with my spiritual director followed a frustrating and troubling pattern. I would walk into his office anxious and confused. After an hour's conversation — with me talking and him mostly listening — I would leave feeling buoyant and hopeful.

Soon, however, the old fears and uncertainties would return, undermining my confidence. I began to wonder if my director was equal to the task of helping me.

Patience, compassionately, he listened to my stories. Over and over, he gently invited me to go deeper, to address issues closer to my core.

How was I dealing with failure?

Were my expectations of others realistic? How might I let go of the impulse to judge everything? What was I scared of?

For a long time I talked all around the tough issues he encouraged me to consider. Slowly, though, my friend's wisdom began to sink in: I would never have the contentment and calm I longed for unless I began to confront these foundational concerns.

Without embracing the discipline of a more radical honesty, that is, without exploring the deeper truths of my life, I would always be anxious and distracted from what matters by things that don't.

It was painful sometimes, facing facts I'd never wanted to see, acknowledging flaws and limitations I'd pretended not to have. But in my companion's good and wise company, I have gradually begun to take baby steps toward a more peaceful and trusting faith.

When Jesus promises us, in Sunday's Gospel, to ease our burdens and give us rest, he is not saying that discipleship will be painless, that anxiety and sorrow won't be felt.

He is promising to walk with us as we carry our crosses; to guide our steps, even when we stumble; to give us his strength and his peace, confident that if we accept his yoke he will do the heavy lifting.

Weekly Catholic radio program marks fifth anniversary

BY CHRIS SCAPERLANDA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Catholic Radio Weekly is celebrating its fifth anniversary.

The weekly program, produced by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Catholic Communication Campaign, is carried by two major Catholic radio networks — Relevant Radio and Ave Maria Radio — that serve more than 30 stations.

It is used in the radio ministries of 27 archdioceses and dioceses and broadcast by 25 independent religious and secular stations, and is also available weekly via the campaign's Web site.

The show was created in response to a 1997 survey of the U.S. bishops. The bishops were asked to describe the kinds of media that they believed would be most effective in reaching the Catholics in their dioceses.

An overwhelming 78 percent of the bishops responded that they believed radio to be an effective and economical way to reach into the lives of the people in their community, according to Patricia Ryan Garcia, executive producer of the program and director of the communication campaign's office of distribution.

She explained that a summit was held to analyze the survey and "was the genesis for the show."

According to Garcia, who has been working on the program since it first aired in 2000, there is no formula for the way in which a station might use the show.

"They can use the show in its entirety or they might simply use bits and pieces of it. We structure the show in such a way that it can meet whatever needs a particular station might have," Garcia said in an interview with Catholic News Service.

Co-host Carole Lehan, an accomplished actress and voice-over talent, is performing arts director at Glenelg Country School in Howard County, Md. She is also program director for the Cappies, an awards program for high school theatrical productions.

Johnny Holliday, the program's other host, began his broadcasting career as a rock 'n' roll disc jockey in Cleveland. He has been the announcer for the University of Maryland basketball and football teams since 1979, and his daily sports reports have been heard on ABC Radio for more than 20 years.

The aim of the show is to give its listening audience a better sense that they are part of the Catholic Church in the United States, and it informs people about happenings in the bishops' conference.

"Our target audience is the average Catholic in the pew who isn't aware" of the larger church, said Garcia.

"People tend to identify with their parish and diocese but often don't understand themselves as a part of the American church as a whole," she said. "Our goal is to help make people more aware of the larger movement they are a part of."

Frank Morock, director of communications for the Diocese of Raleigh, is writer-producer of Catholic Radio Weekly.

The program includes interviews with bishops and USCCB staff on current issues they are addressing and covers other stories of interest to Catholics. Regular features are provided by several USCCB departments.

Other features include Paulist Father Larry Rice's "Facts of Faith" and Franciscan Father Greg Friedman's "Sunday Soundbites."

Catholic Radio Weekly has won numerous awards including an award of merit from the 2005 Religion Communicators Council's DeRose-Hinkhouse competition and a 2001 Communicator Crystal Award for special programming immediately following the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Catholic Radio Weekly's wide distribution may soon become even wider.

"We hear a lot from people who want Catholic radio in their area," explained Garcia.

"The United States is set to release a new round of low-power FMs (stations)," she said. "This is an opportunity for them to take the initiative and start stations."

Low-power FM stations can be operated with as low as one watt of power to a maximum of 100 watts, making them accessible for community groups to run. They can be heard anywhere from a few blocks away to a few miles away.

The success of Catholic Radio Weekly — it started with 12 diocesan subscribers its first year — has launched other programs such as "Lino at Large" — targeted at young adult listeners — and "Tu Companero Catolico" — a Spanish-language show.

U.S. bishops discuss issues

"Essential Norms" implementing the charter legislatively. Both documents were approved by respective votes of 229-3 and 228-4.

As a legislative text the norms still need Vatican approval. But Vatican rejection seemed quite unlikely since the final version approved by the bishops had only four minor variations from the draft jointly developed by U.S. and Vatican officials.

The revised charter and norms are to take effect for five years.

While several other abuse-related items were also on the bishops' agenda, the bishops, including Bishop Peter J. Jugis, also took time to approve other documents and projects, vote on financial matters and discuss the growing phenomenon of lay ecclesial ministry.

Various demonstrators picketed and held press conferences during the bishops' conference. Among them were leaders of clergy sex abuse victim groups, abortion opponents, gay rights advocates, women's ordination advocates, and members of Voice of the Faithful and other groups who have been calling for greater openness and accountability by church officials.

Tasks accomplished

Documents the bishops approved during the meeting included a new Program of Priestly Formation, a statement in support of Catholic schools, a statement on missions and a statement committing themselves to mutual support and correction in implementing the child protection charter. All were adopted by overwhelming margins.

The new Program of Priestly Formation will replace the 1992 edition of that program if the Vatican approves it. It sets norms for seminary admissions and seminary formation.

Reflecting the increased awareness of child sexual abuse, the new program for the first time explicitly orders the rejection of any seminary applicant and expulsion of any seminarian who has molested a child or shows inclinations to do so.

It also devotes extra attention to ensuring that seminarians are well-rounded human beings as an integral part of achieving their mature commitment to chaste celibacy.

For the first time it explicitly addresses questions of sexual orientation, saying that when the Vatican publishes its expected norms on the admission of homosexually oriented men to the seminary or priesthood, U.S. seminaries will follow those policies.

The statement on Catholic schools urges more efforts to make Catholic schools available to all Catholic children and, especially in poor rural and inner-city areas, to non-Catholics whose parents seek the quality of education and values that Catholic schools can offer.

The mission statement reminds Catholics that everyone is called by baptism to participate in the mission of spreading the Gospel to all nations. It especially urges those engaged in teaching and formation of Catholics to expand the missionary awareness and involvement of Catholic men, women and children in U.S. Catholic parishes and schools.

Episcopal commitment

The "Statement of Episcopal Commitment," adopted by a 223-4 vote, deals with the difficulty that by church law, bishops, who are ultimately accountable only to the Holy See and not the bishops' conference on virtually all church matters, could not be subjected to the child protection charter and norms in the same way priests and deacons are. It commits the bishops to report to the papal nuncio any allegation of sexual abuse of a minor by a bishop and to work and reflect with one another to promote full implementation of the charter in every diocese.

The bishops elevated their Ad Hoc Committee on Sexual Abuse to a standing committee and renamed it the Committee for the Protection of Children and Young People.

Its chairman will be elected by the bishops and will be an automatic member of the USCCB Administrative Committee, but unlike any other committee of that kind, its membership is to include one bishop from each of the 14 USCCB regions — at least double the size of other standing conference committees.

Also on the clergy sexual abuse issue, the bishops committed themselves to spending up to $1 million from a reserve fund to help pay for a study of the causes and context of that abuse over the past half-century. The study is expected to cost between $2 million and $5 million, and the bishops' financial commitment is expected to help generate additional funds from foundations and philanthropists to pay for the entire study.

On another financial matter the bishops who head dioceses rejected a request by their Committee on Budget and Finance to increase their diocesan assessment by 4 percent next year to cover one-fourth of an expected 2006 conference budget deficit of more than $2 million.

Only the 193 bishops who head dioceses can vote on assessments. While 86 bishops present and voting approved the proposed increase, the 80 who voted against it defeated it, since passage required at least two-thirds approval.

Other items

With a new English translation due soon for the latest official Roman Missal in Latin, the English Committee on Liturgy asked the bishops to approve a series of current U.S. adaptations in the Mass, in use for more than 30 years, in order to obtain the necessary prior Vatican permission for their continued use before the new translation of the main Latin text is submitted for approval.

Following up on a request by the late Pope John Paul II, the bishops decided that each diocese in the country should establish an annual day of prayer specifically for priestly vocations.

In preparation for a probable debate and vote this fall on a document on lay ecclesial ministry, the bishops heard presentations on various aspects of that issue.

With more than 30,000 lay people now employed in U.S. Catholic parishes as lay ecclesial ministers, working in the name of the church under the authority of its ordained ministers, questions about the role of such lay ministers and their relation to the ordained have come increasingly to the fore in recent years.

In another look toward their fall meeting in Washington, the bishops approved a proposal that their Committee on Domestic Policy, in collaboration with other committees, will develop an updated statement on growing church opposition to use of the death penalty.

Schiavo autopsy does not alter church's pro-life stand based on her dignity as a human person."

Schiavo, 41, died March 31, nearly two weeks after her nutrition and hydration tube was removed following a contentious seven-year battle between her husband and her parents. She had been in what doctors described as a persistent vegetative state since 1990, when her brain was deprived of oxygen after her heart stopped.

Dr. Jon R. Thogmartin, medical examiner for Pinellas and Pasco counties in Florida, said June 15 that Schiavo's autopsy showed that the brain damage she suffered in 1990 was irreversible.

"No amount of therapy or treatment would have regenerated the massive loss of neurons," he said.

Thogmartin said Schiavo died of "marked dehydration," not starvation, but that the underlying cause for her collapse 15 years ago could not be determined.

"The only diagnosis that I know for sure is that her brain went without oxygen," he added. "Why? That is undetermined."

Critical analysis

Doerflinger said some of the conclusions in the autopsy seemed "off base," such as the determination that there was no evidence that Schiavo had an eating disorder before her collapse and the assumption that the shriveling of her brain indicated massive brain damage.

When any person is deprived of water for two weeks, his or her brain is likely to shrink, he said.

Doerflinger also said there is "no established degree of brain damage" that cannot be reversed. "There are people walking around whose cerebral cortexes have been largely destroyed," he said.

Dr. Paul McHugh, professor of psychiatry and behavioral science at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine and a member of the President's Council on Bioethics, also criticized the autopsy report, saying it was part of the "typical misleading about doctoring and medicine" that is becoming common.

"I'm not contending that she did or did not have PVS (persistent vegetative state)," he said June 17. "Either way, that doesn't excuse killing her."

Writing in the June issue of Commentary, McHugh recalled his work "in caring for patients like Terri Schiavo with neuropsychiatric disorders," specifically a patient who "gave little evidence of awareness" 13 years after a botched brain operation.

One day, however, the patient responded correctly and in a full sentence to a scientific question posed by McHugh.

"Somehow, deep inside that body and damaged brain, he was there — and our job was to help him," McHugh wrote. "If we had ever had misgivings before, we would never again doubt the value of caring for people like him. And we didn't give a fig that his EEG was grossly abnormal."

Similarly, Terri Schiavo "was alive," McHugh said in an interview. "That's all I as a doctor care about."

He criticized the mind-set that says, "You're worthy if you're productive, and if you're not productive, you're not worthy of life."

"I'm not going to judge if a patient is worthy," he said. "I'm here to benefit the lives of patients."

Loss of compassion

The Schindler family said in a statement that the autopsy report "confirms that Terri was not terminal ... that Terri had a strong heart and that Terri was brutally dehydrated to death."

"The moral shame of what happened is not erased because of Terri's level of disability," the Schindlers added. "No one would say that 'blind people' or 'brain-injured' people should be put to death. That would be an irresponsible and heartless position to take."

"Tragically, that is what happened to Terri. As a society, it seems that we have lost our compassion for the disabled."

Father Frank Pavone of Priests for Life, who visited Schiavo hours before her death, said in a statement that she "did not die from an atrophied brain."

"She died from an atrophy of compassion on the part of her estranged husband and those who helped him to have her deliberately killed," he said.

Pope says to assist refugees and tries to help them spiritually and materially. People who find themselves far from their homelands should be made to feel that "the church is a country where no one is foreign," he said.

The pope said that for Christians, there is an essential connection between participation in the Eucharist and charitable acts, including service to refugees.

"Charity work, in fact, is a criterion that confirms the authenticity of our liturgical celebrations," he said, citing Pope John Paul II's apostolic letter on the current eucharistic year.

Pope Benedict said that with participation in the Eucharist, Catholics should naturally take greater interest in the poor and try to build a more just society.

"Those who nourish themselves with the faith of Christ at the eucharistic table assimilate his same style of life, which is the style of attentive service, especially to the weakest and the most disadvantaged," he said.

The pope entrusted the care of all refugees to Mary, recalling that she was a refugee, along with Joseph and the newborn Jesus, under persecution.

The office of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said the global number of refugees fell 4 percent in 2004 to 9.2 million, the lowest total in almost a quarter of a century. It was the fourth straight year of decline in the number of refugees, largely a result of voluntary repatriation in countries like Afghanistan.

At the same time, the numbers of internally displaced and stateless people and others "of concern" to the U.N. agency increased to 19.2 million from 17 million over the course of the past year.

Atrophy of compassion

An examination of body and soul is needed in Schiavo case

The autopsy of Terri Schiavo has been released to the public, bringing attention once again to this sad and tragic case, and re-igniting so many of the debates surrounding her life and death. Does the autopsy shed any light on this tragedy? Does it change anything?

The autopsy, of course, is a medical document about Terri's physical condition. It is filled with complicated medical terms and statistics. In and of itself, it tells us simply the details found upon examining Terri's body.

An autopsy is not a crystal ball either into the past or the future. Nor is it a moral evaluation of the worth of a human life.

The big temptation is to stretch the autopsy beyond its purposes and somehow get it to do more than it can do. Some, indeed, wonder whether this autopsy was, from the beginning, a political tool worked out by the euthanasia advocates to advance their agenda regarding Terri. Whether or not that is the case, the autopsy will certainly be used by such advocates to further de-humanize Terri and rob her of her claim for care and protection.

But let's presume that those who conducted this exam did so objectively and honestly. What, then, do we learn?

For one thing, the autopsy shows that all the media reports that so confidently asserted that Terri collapsed because of "an eating disorder" or "a heart attack" should not have been so confident. In short, the autopsy does not provide a basis for those claims, and leaves the cause of her initial collapse in 1990 a mystery.

Was Michael Schiavo at all responsible for her collapse? He claims he was not, but the autopsy does not answer that question.

What the exam does tell us, however, is that Terri died from dehydration. Of course, we knew that already. She wasn't given any water the last two weeks of her life, and we know why.

Michael, and those acting in concert with him, insisted on that and got the courts to enforce their wishes. We don't know if Michael was responsible for Terri's injury, but we do know he was responsible for her death.

The autopsy goes on to say that Terri's brain was "profoundly atrophied" and only half the normal size. Fine. If that's what the experts tell us, there is no problem believing them. But what does that mean, that she was only half-human, only half a person, or that she had only half the rights that the rest of us have?

That is the conclusion that we must never accept. That is a conclusion that does not come from an autopsy, but from a callous disregard for human life.

Terri did not die from atrophy of the brain. She died from an atrophy of compassion. Too many people, starting with Michael, were unwilling to accept the fact that profoundly injured people require profound compassion and care. Even if this autopsy report showed that Terri was ten times more damaged than she was, our moral obligation to respect and protect her life would not change at all.

We don't have to pass a test to qualify for our human rights. An autopsy is a measure of physical damage, not of human rights.

The autopsy says Terri was blind. That is not the morally relevant point. The point is that we are blind — blind all too often to the fact that even the disabled and the severely injured have the same dignity and worth as the rest of us, and show forth the image and glory of God, even in their brokenness.

The autopsy says that Terri was beyond repair or rehabilitation. But that does not mean we are supposed to throw her away, like we throw away a car that is beyond repair.

Again, there is no problem accepting this medical conclusion. But morally speaking, our compassion is not beyond repair. We can build a society that re-

At audience, pope speaks of God's gaze, dons fire chief's helmet, chats on mobile phone

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — With thousands of soggy pilgrims and tourists awaiting his teaching, Pope Benedict opened his weekly general audience in St. Peter's Square June 15 with a prayer that "the weather improves."

The day had begun with a major downpour, but by the end of the audience, the sun had broken through the thick black clouds, leading the pope to thank God for "the sign of his kindness, for which we had hoped."

In his audience talk, Pope Benedict focused on Psalm 123, a prayer recited in times of persecution and difficulty, but one that is filled with trust that the Lord will rescue those who love him.

The psalm, the pope said, focuses on "an exchange of gazes: The faithful (one) lifts his eyes to the Lord and expects a divine reaction, a gesture of love and benevolent gaze."

Keeping one's eyes fixed on the Lord, he said, is a common biblical expression for the trust the poor, the oppressed and the righteous have in God.

"The supplicant expects that the divine hands will take action because they work for justice, destroying evil," he said. "The just await God's gaze, which will reveal all his tenderness and goodness."

Due to the rain, the Swiss Guards covered up their uniforms with dark blue rain gear. The guards' matching blue caps were bland compared to the new hat the pope received at the end of the audience; Italian firefighters gave him a silver chief's helmet.

With a practiced hand, a firefighter flicked open the chinstrap, and Pope Benedict put the helmet on his head.

The pope, having spoken to more than 20,000 people, also spoke to someone on a mobile phone.

A middle-aged man in a wheelchair, who was among dozens of people led up to the pope at the end of the audience, handed Pope Benedict a mobile phone and asked him to talk. The pope did so.

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

Officials at the Vatican press office could provide no information about who was on the other end of the phone or what Pope Benedict said.

ANSA, the Italian news agency, reported that the call was made to a nun who was sick.

ANSA later interviewed the cell phone owner, Emilio Testa, and the 44-year-old nun with cancer, Sister Maria Cristina, a member of the Sisters of St. John the Baptist in Angri, Italy.

"When I heard his voice I could not believe it was Pope Ratzinger," the nun said. "I thought it was a dream, but instead it was real."

"He asked me how I was, he told me to stay calm and that he would pray for me," she said. "The most surprising thing was that he remembered my name. He kept calling me Sister Maria Cristina, almost like we already knew each other."

Testa told ANSA: "I knew how badly Sister Maria Cristina wanted to see the pope, but her health would not permit it. So when I saw the pontiff, I did not think twice. I got close, kissed his hand and, without pausing, asked him to pray for Sister Maria Cristina and perhaps say hello to her on the phone."

"The pontiff immediately said 'yes,' took my cell phone and, smiling, began to speak to her," Testa said.

"When it was all over, I started bawling like a baby. I realized that something extraordinary had just happened," he said. "I was happy because I knew that with that call Sister Maria Cristina's heart filled with joy."

spects and protects all our brothers and sisters, recognizing that their value does not come from how well they function, perform or produce.

I will never forget my hours with Terri, both before and after her feeding tube was removed. She responded to me, and she responded to others who visited her. She laughed, she tried to speak, she returned her parents' kisses, she followed us with her eyes, she closed her eyes when I prayed with her and opened them when we were finished.

Medical examiners can offer their conclusions because of what they saw, but none of that changes what we saw. But both we and the medical examiners were looking in from the outside. Any honest medical expert will admit that there is so much about the human brain we still don't know. What Terri experienced on the inside is a mystery that only she and God know.

The challenge at this moment is simply this: Whatever she experienced, to whatever extent she was damaged, and even if she were totally unresponsive, Terri was one of us. She was our sister, she was a child of God, she was fully in possession of her human rights, and nothing can ever justify what was done to her.

Terri Schiavo was murdered because she was deprived of food and water. We've done the examination on her body. Maybe it's time for an examination of our souls.

Are we overmedicating ourselves?

Alternatives abound to heal sacred

Television advertising of drugs for everything that ails us has gone to extremes. Almost everybody, it seems, is taking a drug for some ailment, at least until the next report comes out telling us that this particular drug is not good for people.

I know I'm going to get criticized for writing about this subject because people are sensitive about their need for medications, including those taken to "prevent" possible medical problems.

I stay away from medications, and I know the roots of this decision. It has to do with my being a pre-med student several decades ago at the College of St. Rose in Albany, N.Y.; and hearing a lecture by an osteopath.

I interpreted what he said along these lines — that the human body was made to stay healthy and heal itself. Most important was to make sure that one kept the body in balance so that all the internal organs could function as they were meant to.

If something happened to upset this balance, like a fall, an accident or even poor posture, improper eating, drinking or other bad habits, then the organs could go awry. The body could also be damaged by a germ, a sudden change in temperature or a genetic disorder.

In other words, staying well wasn't a given, but we all had pretty good odds that we could live a healthy life if we maintained a belief that we had been given a body meant to stay well and worked at this.

Given my very strong Catholic beliefs, I saw this lecture as something of a good sermon, affirming what I had come to believe — that God takes care of us. Already I had been impressed with reading somewhere that Jesus was the divine physician.

In the decades of my life, I have never forgotten the words of the osteopathic physician who insisted that the human body was made to heal itself. Many years later, I worked at a university and attended some yoga classes given by a young Catholic priest from India.

He turned out to be a terrific teacher, explaining that people need to be in control of their bodies if they want to be totally integrated persons, spiritually and physically.

He said we needed to surrender ourselves to the spiritual side of life and to God, and this could be done in conjunction with yoga, which combines breathing control with control of muscular development. He ended each class by having us lie flat on our backs, with our palms lifted to heaven.

Then he encouraged us to let all our thoughts drain out of our bodies as he was talking. This was a way of suggesting the idea of surrendering ourselves totally to the nonphysical world. In other words, we were now in a state where we could really pray, really reach out to God.

Those exercises taught me how to line up my spine, putting my body back in balance, as the osteopath in my college years had taught me was essential.

God does indeed take care of the bodies he gave us, and they are indeed amazing. As poet Walt Whitman said, "If anything is sacred, the human body is sacred." Bravo to the Creator!

Life-changing events

The Human Side

FATHER
EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

A recent article on Pope Benedict XVI in Commonweal magazine told how he once was a young, progressive theologian who considered the theology of St. Thomas Aquinas "too closed in on itself, too impersonal and ready-made."

He preferred St. Augustine's personalism in all its passion and depth, and embraced a theology that "had the courage to ask new questions and a spirituality that was doing away with what was dusty and obsolete."

But student unrest at the University of Tübingen in 1968 caused the future pope to do an about-face in some regards and to become in the minds of many the poster child for conservative reaction in theology and church politics.

Pope Benedict XVI isn't the only person to change his life because of an extraordinary event or development. All of us have experienced life-changing events.

Before the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, we were conscious of security, but afterward we were inundated by security concerns.

Before the bombing of Pearl Harbor, America was a peace-loving country that successfully had overcome the Depression. After, the United States became the most powerful military force in the world.

The word "event" means a coming or a happening. Life-changing events can arrive or happen at any time in one's life.

For example, a father takes his son to a ballgame. His son is inspired to become a major league player. One event, and a life is transformed.

Events are the soul of life. One thing to remember is that events don't always occur simply by happenstance but often are knowingly and willingly created.

I wonder what would happen if we were more aggressive or proactive in creating events that really make a difference to people. What if parents were more assertive in planning memorable events in their children's lives?

Think how important it might be to bring about the circumstances in which your children could truly learn their family's unique history and ancestry.

Creating a memorable event is not an easy task. Sometimes when we try to make something memorable, the event falls flat. We would rather forget it than remember it.

Producing an unforgettable happening is an art. Like a concertmaster, we must be sensitive to overtones and undertones, when to be explosive and when to be subtle, how to build to a crescendo and how to complete it.

It might be that just one event that we help to bring about or that we create will get the ball rolling and change a life forever.

Bishop's pastoral letter appreciated

Thank you Bishop Jugis for your pastoral letter, "Calling for an end to the death penalty" (May 6).

I have heard Catholics who claim that the teaching of the church "does not exclude recourse to the death penalty," ignoring that the church also proclaims that it is opposed to such lethal force in a modern society that has the sufficient resources (non-lethal means) to protect the innocent from harm.

As you remind us, this also gives the violent offender the opportunity for repentance and redemption, which is the saving work in which Jesus calls us all to take part. God bless you for shedding a light of truth on this fundamental Catholic pro-life teaching.

Wade," May 27).

Although this newest study is very much in the news these days, readers may be interested to know that there are 40 other studies worldwide showing the same thing — that even one abortion increases your risk of a premature baby in future pregnancies.

For example, in 1993 and 1998, Australian researcher Judith Lumley reported in peer-reviewed journals that prior induced abortions elevated the risk of extremely premature (28 weeks or less) deliveries.

While Lumley found that one abortion increases the risk of extremely premature babies by 55 percent, the newer French study shows the risk being increased to 70 percent, strong support for something pro-life physicians and researchers have been recognizing for more than a decade.

Any baby who is born prematurely faces a number of risks and hardships. For the baby born at 28 weeks gestation or younger, research shows the risk of cerebral palsy is increased by 38 times. As Ruse mentioned, there is also a risk of death.

Sadly, the risk of an extremely premature birth goes up steeply with increased abortion. Dr. Byron Calhoun, president of the American Association of Pro-Life Obstetricians & Gynecologists, authored research in 2003 showing an 800 percent increase in extremely premature births after four abortions, confirming a massive German study in 1998 with similar results (800 percent increase after three or more abortions).

Vatican Radio officials should accept wrongdoing

Regarding "Two top Vatican Radio officials convicted of polluting the environment," (May 27), the Catholic Church has always taken "be fruitful, multiply and subdue the earth" quite literally without too much consideration of the implications to God's creation.

One thing that the church cannot be accused of is being "environmentalist" or "green," not even at a time of severe threats to God's holy creation.

When the Vatican was recently found guilty of polluting the environment with electromagnetic waves from its radio towers, it had an opportunity to show good example by at least honoring the spirit of Italian environmental law. But no, the Vatican chose to resist and appeal the case.

The Vatican would do well to admit guilt and pay the penalty, even if Cardinal Roberto Tucci has to go to jail for 10 days. Doing so would provide the world with a better example of stewardship.

HIRBNIANS REFURBISH HISTORIC CATHOLIC CHURCH

MOUNT HOLLY — With precision and care, a group of Irish-Americans straightened and balanced gravestones in the cemetery of the small, white clapboard church.

The scene may have resembled the work of 19th-century Irish Catholics, who helped build the church and buried many of their dead outside its walls.

Members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, Sons of Erin Division in Mecklenburg County spent a full day June 25 refurbishing St. Joseph Church in Mount Holly, one of the oldest standing Catholic churches in North Carolina.

CHARLOTTE — St. Joseph Vietnamese Church celebrated the Year of the Eucharist with a special Mass June 26. Father Le Van Tan, pastor, carried the Eucharist, encased in a gold monstrance, during a eucharistic procession preceding the Mass.

A few hundred parishioners, including members of several parish groups, walked in the procession, many of the elder parishioners wearing native Vietnamese dress. During the procession a recitation of the Rosary, prayers of the Eucharist, prayers of Jesus' Sacred Heart, songs about the Eucharist and the Sacred Heart were played over loudspeakers.

During the Mass, nine teenagers and adults were initiated into the Catholic Church and an infant was baptized. Also, new members of the Sacred Heart of Jesus men's group were initiated.

FENDING FOR HIS FAMILY

Ernesto Tuleno, 40, a migrant worker from the Mexican state of Guerrero, shows a photograph of his son, while resting in an encampment near strawberry fields in Carlsbad, Calif., June 9. About 60 workers live in the camp hidden under a canopy of trees and bushes. They are given no support services from their employers and survive on what they can buy or what various church and human rights groups are able to provide. Tuleno sends his earnings to his wife and four children in Mexico.

At U.S.-Mexico conference, cardinal calls for new hope for migrants

EL PASO, Texas (CNS) — Washington Cardinal Theodore E. McCarrick urged bishops from the United States and Mexico to help make "the New World a place of new hope" for migrants throughout the Western Hemisphere.

Addressing the binational conference on migration in El Paso June 23, Cardinal McCarrick said, "Let our solidarity with them (migrants) and our love be obvious in what we do, even if it means that in this one America we must share our God-given resources in a more equitable way and share our wealth more equitably as well."

Jointly sponsored by the U.S. and Mexican bishops' conferences, the June 23-26 meeting was to consider how to implement the ideals of "Strangers No Longer: Together on the Journey of Hope," a joint pastoral letter issued by the two bishops' conferences in 2003.

Building on the themes of migration in the Gospels, the church's teachings on just treatment for migrants and Pope John Paul II's call for solidarity in "The Church in America," the cardinal offered three suggestions for dealing justly with migrants in the hemisphere.

First, "we must change the minds of people about migrants," he said. "We must try to change their hearts and seek to address their fears."

Second, "we must ultimately change the laws affecting migrants, immigrants and refugees in both" the U.S. and Mexico, said the cardinal.

He said U.S. immigration laws lead to the separation of families, the violation of human dignity and sometimes to tragic deaths in the desert. "In Mexico as well, we must work to ensure that migrants are not harmed and abused."

Finally, Cardinal McCarrick called on the bishops to "continue to provide pastoral care to migrants and their families."

"Those who find themselves outside their own country as they seek a better life for themselves or for their children must be aware that the church will meet their spiritual needs no matter where they are on the migration journey," he said.

Knights of Columbus sets new record for charity in 2004

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (CNS) — The Knights of Columbus set new records for charitable giving and volunteer hours in 2004.

The results of the Knights' annual survey of fraternal activity for 2004 show that total contributions to charity at all levels climbed to $135,753,039, exceeding the previous year's total by more than $5 million.

The survey also showed that Knights devoted an estimated 63 million hours to charitable work last year. Members contributed another 9.3 million hours to fraternal service activity.

There were 407,746 Knights of Columbus blood donors during the year, and Knights made more than 6 million visits to the sick and the bereaved.

Cumulative figures show that over the past decade, the Knights of Columbus has donated $1.174 billion to charity, and provided in excess of 560 million hours of volunteer support for charitable causes.

Knights of Columbus in Ontario led the way in charitable giving, with $7.6 million, followed by California ($6.6 million) and Quebec ($5.7 million).

The Knights of Columbus is the world's largest lay Catholic organization, with 1.7 million members in the United States, Canada, Philippines, Mexico and Central America.

Gerry Kissel, an artist and graphic designer from Springfield, Mo., was officially designated the organization's 1.7 millionth member when he joined April 26.

"Hitting the 1.7 million member mark represents an enormous milestone in the history of the growth of the Knights of Columbus," said Carl A. Anderson, supreme knight. "I'm proud of every Knight who has brought in a new member this year, and thank each of them for helping to make the Knights of Columbus the very best fraternal benefit society in the world."

The Knights of Columbus was founded by Father Michael J. McGivney in New Haven in 1882.

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope chooses 'In Truth, Peace' as theme for World Peace Day

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — When founded on the truth about the human person and human dignity, peace creates an atmosphere where people grow in righteousness and love, said the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace.

"In Truth, Peace" is the theme Pope Benedict XVI has chosen for the Jan. 1 celebration of World Peace Day.

The Vatican published the theme June 25 along with a brief explanation of the theme by the council.

The pope's message for World Peace Day will be released in December.

The council's presentation quoted heavily from the Second Vatican Council's document on the church in the modern world, particularly its insistence that true peace is the result of justice and righteousness and not simply a matter of finding a balance between opposing forces.

Peace, the Second Vatican Council said, "is the fruit of that right ordering of things" according to God's plans for creation.

The Vatican's explanation of the peace day theme said true peace allows people the space and freedom to seek the truth about themselves, about life and about God. A thirst for truth, therefore, translates into a desire for peace and for order.

"True peace is also pacifying," the Vatican said. "It reconciles and brings people out of their isolation. Truth enlightens and helps people see the path for authentic human relations, allows them to correct errors, to reconcile themselves with others, to be transparent in negotiations and faithful to their word."

Catholic-Russian Orthodox dialogue proceeds slowly, cardinal says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Even with Pope Benedict XVI pledging to make ecumenism a priority of his pontificate and the Russian Orthodox Church welcoming his election, the Catholic-Russian Orthodox dialogue is proceeding slowly.

Cardinal Walter Kasper, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, visited Moscow June 20-23 for talks with his Russian Orthodox counterpart, Metropolitan Kirill of Smolensk and Kaliningrad.

The cardinal did not meet Russian Orthodox Patriarch Alexy II, but he told a Moscow Catholic newspaper that no meeting had been planned.

"I did not ask to meet him because we are still at the beginning of our work," Cardinal Kasper said. "Our aim now is to discuss some technical and concrete matters."

Cardinal Kasper said that Metropolitan Kirill had a half-hour meeting with Pope Benedict at the Vatican in April when the Orthodox leader was in town for the pope's inauguration.

"They decided to continue the dialogue about the principal problems existing in our relations," the cardinal said.

"Right now we are trying to continue and perhaps deepen the dialogue."

Cardinal Kasper said he was not expecting any breakthrough in the relationship, but was hoping relations would improve with "small steps" forward.

While the Russian Orthodox Church continues to complain to the Vatican about the activities of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, Cardinal Kasper said, "It is not my task to speak about questions tied to another church."

The Ukrainian Catholic Church is in communion with Rome and requires papal approval for some of its activities, but is considered a self-governing church for the most part.

Cardinal Kasper said his discussions with Metropolitan Kirill were focused on "what the Holy See and the Russian Orthodox Church can do together in Europe and for Europe, to support Christian values in Europe."

At the end of the meetings, the Russian Orthodox Church issued a press release saying the focus had been "cooperation between the Orthodox and Catholic churches in consolidating Christian spiritual and moral values."

LONGTIME VOLUNTEER COORDINATOR
RETIRES FROM REFUGEE RESETTLEMENT OFFICE

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — After 22 years of welcoming refugees to North Carolina, Sonia Hayden is saying goodbye.

Hayden, volunteer coordinator for Catholic Social Service's Refugee Resettlement Office in the Diocese of Charlotte, was honored by co-workers and friends during a retirement party at the diocesan Pastoral Center June 17. Her last day with the diocese was June 30.

While Hayden facilitated volunteers to assist new refugees, she said her some of her fondest memories are working directly with the refugees.

"Doing the everyday things they needed was satisfying, especially teaching them English," she said. "I still see some of them, and hearing them speak English now is a joy."

"We help a lot of people often in very stressful situations. Sonia is sensitive and caring toward the refugees, many of whom were trying to reconnect with family, children," said Linda Campbell, Refugee Resettlement Office's employment case coordinator.

"Sonia radiates Christ's love and has a calming effect on them," said Campbell. "She really listens to them and gives them hope."

Hayden is credited with expanding the volunteer program.

"She developed the program and made it an integral part of the Refugee Resettlement Office," said Elizabeth Thurbee, executive director of CSS in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Sonia made it into a real outreach to parishes and other community organizations to partner and work with the agency to help refugees," said Thurbee.

Sonia Hayden, with CSS's Refugee Resettlement Office, shares a laugh with co-workers during her retirement party at the diocesan Pastoral Center June 17. Hayden is retiring after 22 years.

Thurbee said Hayden's warmth and dedication inspired the volunteers.

"I couldn't have done this job without the dedication of the volunteers," said Hayden.

Hayden plans to travel, visit her grandchildren and take a cruise or two.

"I am also writing a book on the refugees' experiences," she said.

"Sonia may never know the extent of her 22 years of helping refugees and placing volunteers, but it's certain they will never forget her," said Ciria Ponce, Refugee Resettlement Office director.

"Sonia has a bright smile and attitude that we miss when she's off (from work) on Wednesdays," said Campbell. "When she's gone, every day will be Wednesday for a long time."

FUNDING THE FUTURE

Verizon grant helps ELS classes for refugees

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — The Verizon Foundation recently gave a $4,000 grant toward the English as a Second Language (ESL) classes of Catholic Social Services' Refugee Resettlement Office in the Diocese of Charlotte.

The Verizon Foundation provides support to nonprofit organizations within the United States. The foundation supports literacy, domestic violence prevention and technology.

"The funds will help us continue the much-needed English language classroom instruction for our refugee clients," said Ciria Ponce, CSS Refugee Resettlement Office director.

"The ESL classes help the refugees become self sufficient," said Luz Vickers, ESL project director. "If they understand the English language, they can better navigate life in the United States. The classes make a significant impact on the refugees' efforts to start a new life here."

Currently, the ESL classes, which are offered at two locations in Charlotte, consist primarily of Montagnards from the highlands of Vietnam and Bantu tribal people from Somalia in eastern Africa.

The Montagnards are Christians who aided U.S. Special Forces during the 1960s, and many became prisoners in re-education camps after the Vietnam War ended. Hundreds have settled in Charlotte since the mid-1970s.

The Bantu are a minority clan in Somalia whose persecution includes confiscation of their lands and denial of some basic rights. The CSS Refugee Resettlement Office resettled 123 Bantu people in the Diocese of Charlotte in 2004.

Since 1975, the CSS Refugee Resettlement Office has assisted in the resettlement of more than 8,000 refugees from 26 nationalities in Charlotte.

Hibernians refurbish historic church

"We wanted to give back to our Irish heritage and do something for this place," said Matt Crawley, a Hibernian. "This is where our ancestors from Ireland came. It's Irish history and Catholic history."

The Ancient Order of Hibernians, founded in 1836, describes itself as the oldest lay Catholic organization in the United States. The Church of St. Joseph and Mary, known as St. Joseph Church since the Civil War, was built by Irish immigrant gold miners in the 1800s.

The church accommodates maybe 100 parishioners. It has no electricity, no bathroom; six large windows were used to light and heat the church.

A small room for a priest is located at the rear of the church; on the Spartan walls are 19th-century photographs showing how Catholicism's roots in North Carolina took hold at this tiny church near the banks of the Catawba River.

"Our ancestors laid the groundwork. We're continuing what they started," Crawley said. "We want to bring the church back as close as it can be."

"I don't turn down any help," said Carl Heil, a parishioner of Queen of the Apostles Church in Belmont and volunteer caretaker of St. Joseph Church since 1993. "I'm thrilled to have them (Hibernians) over here."

The Hibernians righted gravestones, weeded and cleared brush, and painted and cleaned the structure, helping preserve the church's history and presence.

"Otherwise it would be a major loss in history, and we learn from history," said Hibernian Evan O'Donnell, a parishioner of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte. "We would make mistakes if we didn't have history to learn from."

Back in the day

The discovery of gold in North Carolina lured miners from Ireland to what is now Gaston County. Six Irish Catholic families living on the western bank of the Catawba worshipped in a chapel inside the home of Chevalier Riva De Finola, the French-Italian owner of several gold mines.

De Finola hoped to build a church, but plans were deferred when his mines were closed by an 1832 court injunction.

"The (miners) were very poor ... all they had were their lands ... but being very dedicated Catholic people from Ireland, they wanted a church," said Heil.

A missionary priest, Father J.J. O'Connell, traveling via horseback across Georgia and the Carolinas, brought infrequent Masses to the area, but the remaining miners wanted to establish a parish. One of the families offered to donate more than six acres if the bishop of Charleston, S.C., would build them a church. At that time, the Diocese of Charleston encompassed both North and South Carolina and Georgia.

Bishop John England of Charleston agreed, but only if the families helped raised construction money. The bishop assigned a priest to the area and St. Joseph Church

HISTORY OF ST. JOSEPH CHURCH

Early 1800s — Irish Catholic gold miners settle in Mount Holly area. Missionary priest brings Mass to the area infrequently.

1843 — St. Joseph Church completed by Irish immigrants.

1844 — Church dedicated, becoming fourth Catholic church in N.C.

1876 — Church closed; parishioners placed under care of Belmont Abbey.

1970s — Designated as National Historical Site by North Carolina and U.S. Department of Interior.

1993 — Sesquicentennial celebration held. Carl Heil becomes volunteer caretaker/historian.

was completed in 1843. The Irish immigrants were so thrilled they inscribed "Habemus Altare" ("We have an altar") above the humble altar.

Bishop Ignatius Reynolds, second bishop of Charleston, dedicated the church in 1844, making St. Joseph Church the fourth Catholic church in North Carolina. During the same year, St. Paul Church in New Bern, the state's first Catholic church built in 1841, was dedicated (churches had also been built in Raleigh and Fayetteville). Today, St. Joseph and St. Paul churches stand as the oldest Catholic churches in the state.

After the Civil War, all but one of St. Joseph Church's families remained, and when Belmont Abbey opened nearby in 1876, area Catholics were relegated under the care of the Benedictine monks.

St. Joseph Church was mostly neglected over the years, said Heil.

Continuing efforts

In the early 1970s, under then-Bishop Michael Begley of Charlotte, the church exterior, altar and pews were restored to its 19th-century splendor.

"All they did was refinish what was here. Nothing was replaced," said Heil.

In 1979, the church was designated as a National Historical Site by the State of North Carolina and the U.S. Department of Interior. In October 1993, Msgr. John J. McSweeney, then-diocesan administrator, celebrated the sesquicentennial celebration of St. Joseph Church.

The continuing upkeep efforts of Heil and others, Catholics and non-Catholics alike, are a tribute to the immigrants' faith.

"It's here for everybody to enjoy," said Heil. "But there are those who do not know this place exists. It's such a shame."

The Hibernians plan to make repairs at the church an annual service project.

"We've got our teeth in it now, and there's a lot of work to do," said Crawley.

Heil offered a reason for the church's longevity.

"We've had many chances of this place burning down, because there's no water on the property; there hasn't been a well here since the 1800s. Yet nothing's ever happened," he said. "The Lord's kept his eye on it."

Rome opens canonization process for Pope John Paul

the Rome Diocese's investigation into "the life, virtues and fame of holiness of the servant of God, Pope John Paul II."

He began by thanking Pope Benedict XVI for accepting "the choral and ardent pleas raised by the people of God" to waive the normal five-year waiting period before Pope John Paul's cause could begin.

While the June 28 ceremony was the official beginning of the process, it was clear much work already had been done.

Cardinal Ruini had appointed a Polish priest working in the Rome tribunal, Msgr. Slawomir Oder, to be the postulator of the cause.

The postulator promotes the cause by identifying witnesses to testify about the candidate's life and holiness, collecting the candidate's writings, compiling his biography, gathering evidence that he has a widespread reputation for holiness and looking into claims by the faithful that they were healed through his intercession.

Oaths and witnesses

During the opening ceremony at the Basilica of St. John Lateran, Rome's cathedral, Msgr. Oder presented Cardinal Ruini with a list of some 100 people who will be called to testify about their knowledge of Pope John Paul.

While "reserving the right to present other witnesses," Msgr. Oder formally vowed not to "say or do anything directly or indirectly that would offend justice or limit the freedom of the witnesses; I swear, finally, to maintain the secrets to which those having a part in this cause are held."

One of those secrets is the identity of the people on the list, although Msgr. Oder told Catholic News Service earlier that not all the witnesses are Catholics.

Cardinal Ruini, the judges and the notaries involved with the cause took oaths promising to carry out their assigned tasks in investigating "the life and virtues" of Pope John Paul, as well as any miracles attributed to his intercession.

They also were asked to swear they would not accept "any type of gift" meant to influence their work.

Holy conviction

Cardinal Ruini read a long biography of Pope John Paul, which, he acknowledged, "could appear superfluous given how great and universal knowledge of him is and given how deep and unanimous is the conviction of his holiness."

The cardinal said that as archbishop of Krakow under the communist regime, the pope "knew how to unite his intellectual strength and artistic genius with a passionate love for Christ, for the church and for men and women."

His 1978-2005 pontificate, the cardinal said, was marked by a deep love and concern for "humanity wherever it was threatened," by untiring efforts to promote peace and help the poor, and by an unwavering call to defend every human life and the traditional family.

"At the root of all this untiring apostolic activity, there clearly was the intensity and profundity of the prayer of John Paul II — which many of us witnessed directly — that intimate union with God that accompanied him from his childhood to the end of his earthly existence," Cardinal Ruini said.

The cardinal prayed that God would help the process to beatify and canonize Pope John Paul reach its conclusion soon.

In an interview published June 28, Avvenire, the Italian Catholic daily, asked Msgr. Oder about a rumor that Pope John Paul could be canonized without first being beatified.

"At this point, I can say only that that is a pious hope," Msgr. Oder answered. "Our technical approach is the 'normal' one," working first toward beatification.

"But, certainly, the competency belongs to the Holy Father, and he could decide what he wants," the monsignor said.

YEAR OF THE EUCHRIST

Celebrating culture, faith

PHOTOS BY KAREN A. EVANS

St. Joseph Vietnamese Church celebrated the Year of the Eucharist with a eucharistic procession and Mass June 26. The procession included members of Sacred Heart of Jesus men's group, Eucharistic Youth Group, Catholic Mother's Group and many parishioners. During the Mass, a group of adults were baptized, confirmed and received first Communion.

Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 20

Last time, we began our investigation of the Canon, or Eucharistic Prayer, which begins the second movement of the Liturgy of the Eucharist, known as the consecration.

In the consecration, we unite ourselves with the perfect sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the high priest and victim, and thereby render true worship to the Father and receive the fruit of our redemption. Let us continue with our study of the Eucharistic Prayer to trace the elements that unfold this mystery of our salvation.

Since the advent of the Novus Ordo (New Mass), authorized by Pope Paul VI after the Second Vatican Council, there are several options for the Eucharistic Prayer of the Mass: four common Eucharistic Prayers — three prayers that may be used for Masses with children and two that may be used for Masses of reconciliation.

The first Eucharistic Prayer, commonly known as the Roman Canon, originated in Rome at the end of the fourth century. It developed its present form around the seventh century and has had no significant changes since. In fact, the Roman Canon was the only Eucharistic Prayer used extensively in the Roman Rite since the Council of Trent (1563) until the Second Vatican Council (1965).

This prayer contains two lists of saints: the first includes the apostles and the early popes, while the second list includes many early martyrs.

The second Eucharistic Prayer is the shortest and is similar to the text of St. Hippolytus around the year 215. The third Eucharistic Prayer is rich with Eastern influences (such as the Alexandrian, Byzantine and Maronite rites) and emphasizes the work of the Holy Spirit.

Finally, the fourth Eucharistic Prayer provides a fuller summary of salvation history and relies extensively on biblical events.

Within the variety of Eucharistic Prayers, there are certain commonalities that define them as Eucharistic Prayers. The Eucharistic Prayer is composed of several parts that can be distinguished as follows: 1) Thanksgiving (Preface), 2) Acclamation (Sanctus), 3) Epiclesis, 4) Institution Narrative and Consecration, 5) Anamnesis (Memorial), 6) Offering, 7) Intercessions and 8) the final doxology (GIRM #79).

GUEST COLUMNIST

The Eucharistic Prayer actually begins with the Preface and its customary dialogue between the celebrant and the congregation. Ever since the third century, this series of three verses and responses has marked the introduction of the Preface.

Here is established the ultimate purpose of the Mass: Dignum et iustum est ["It is right and just"]. Immediately following this dialogue is the first part of the Eucharistic Prayer mentioned above: Thanksgiving.

As with the Eucharistic Prayers, there is a variety of Prefaces that change depending upon the day, the festivity or the liturgical season of the year. The Preface expresses profound praise and gratitude to the Father for the wonders of his creation and the wonderful work of redemption accomplished by his divine Son. Each preface concludes by singing the unending hymn of praise, called the Sanctus.

The Sanctus is sung by all and is the second part of the Eucharistic Prayer. What is the origin of this mysterious hymn? The Sanctus was added to the Mass by Pope St. Sixtus (119-128). This hymn is composed of two parts.

The first part, "Holy, holy, holy Lord God of power and might, heaven and earth are full of your glory," is taken from the vision of the Prophet Isaiah (6:1-3), where he saw the Lord sitting upon the throne surrounded by angels singing this hymn.

The second part, "Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest," is taken from the shouts of praise offered to Jesus as he made his triumphant entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday (Matthew 21:9).

In the Sanctus, we unite ourselves to the angelic voices of heaven as we draw near to the divine throne and await the coming of our Savior. The Sanctus is the final warning of the imminent approach of our Lord, who will become truly present in a few moments in the consecration. With haste we unite our voices with the heavenly host of angels and saints and await our Savior's coming.

Next time, we will continue with our examination of the Epiclesis and the Institution Narrative and Consecration.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Internship program at Speedway gives Abbey students advantage

BELMONT — The deafening roar of engines. The heat of the track. The cheers rising from fans in the stands.

Many people say there is nothing like it — the sights and sounds at Lowe's Motor Speedway in Concord, the home of NASCAR.

Now students at Belmont Abbey College will get an exclusive look into the inner workings and behind-the-scenes drama of one of America's fastest-growing sports.

Lowe's Motor Speedway and the college have partnered to give practical on-the-job experience to students who excel in the classroom. The partnership gives Abbey students exclusive rights to the first of six internships offered at the speedway in the fall and spring semesters.

The internships involve various areas of operations including sales, marketing and public relations, events, administration, general operations and tickets.

H.A. "Humpy" Wheeler, speedway president and member of the Abbey's board of trustees, will personally review all resumes from the college for the fall and spring semesters.

"We are extremely grateful to Mr. Wheeler and everyone at Lowe's Motor Speedway for this opportunity and what it will mean for students at the Abbey," said Dr. William Thierfelder, Belmont Abbey College president.

"It is truly an exciting venture for our students, who excel in the classroom, to now also have the practical experience of applying what they learn into a business setting with one of the country's leading sports companies," he said.

Although Lowe's already has internship programs with other colleges and universities, Abbey students will have priority.

"The Abbey is a very special place, giving its students a true sense of purpose," said Wheeler, whose father served as athletic director, coach and faculty member at the Abbey. "We're hoping to nurture that with this new internship program."

Belmont Abbey College also plans to develop curriculum related to motorsports management in the near future.

The Abbey's new chair of the business department, Dr. Philip Bayster, will work with faculty members to further build the college's business program, providing students with learning experiences in courses and internships.

Bayster plans to lead the business department in seeking accreditation, increasing internship opportunities for the Abbey's students and building relationships with the local business community.

With the majority of racing teams based within 30 miles of the track and a number of racing events held each year, Lowe's Motor Speedway is considered the home track for NASCAR.

Children's books guaranteed to chase away summer doldrums

REVIEWED BY BARB FRAZE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

The following children's books are guaranteed to chase away those mid-summer doldrums.

"Help Wanted Stories," by Gary Soto.

This book has a multifaceted appeal to middle-grade readers: First, it's great story-telling. The main character of each tale is a middle- or high-school student who faces a problem common to teens, from feeling too gangly ("Teenage Chimps") to feeling ashamed of siblings and parents ("Sorry, Wrong Family").

Most stories include Hispanic characters and Spanish phrases, and the book includes a three-page translation list in Each story has a Bible citation on which the tale is based, and some stories have small matching or sorting games for nonreaders. For example, "How many colors can you see?" is under the illustration of Joseph's coat of many colors. The book works especially well if older readers read along or read aloud. (Ages 3-8)

"Please Bury Me in the Library," by J. Patrick Lewis, illustrated by Kyle M. Stone.

This is possibly the most clever book of poetry I have read. From haiku to rhymes to free verse, Lewis proves himself to be an accomplished wordsmith with an unlimited imagination.

Each poem has something to do with reading. Stone's colorful and humorous paintings make this book, to steal the title of one poem, "Ab-so-lu-tas-ti-cal!"

It is billed as a book for beginning readers, but, as Lewis writes, "A children's book is a classic/If at six, excitedly/You read it to another kid/Who just turned sixty-three." (All ages)

the back. Stories are told from the perspective of both sexes, yet the problems cross gender lines. The short stories make the book easy to read in short spurts — a fine competitor to TV and computers. (Ages 11-14)

"My Very First Bible," by James Harrison, illustrated by Diana Mayo.

Mayo's colorful illustrations make this book worth buying, but special children's features add to its charm. Large-font story type blends well with the pictures, and some pages contain even larger type with simple phrases or sentences for beginning readers.

Growing in God leads to fruitful harvest

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

As the child of farmers and vegetable growers, I've spent much of my adult life trying to get things to grow.

Recently I visited my parents' farmstead in Texas where my mom's lush flowerbeds and my dad's bumper corn crop greeted me. Inspired, I returned to my struggling flowerbeds in Ohio, ready to do battle again with the moles, rocky yellow clay and unfamiliar variables of vegetation, climate and rainfall.

For a Texas gardener, Ohio is a different world that requires patient learning through trial and error and the advice of experienced neighbors.

It was through the lens of that experience that this week's Gospel acquired fresh meaning for me. I've always taken this parable as an admonition to prepare the ground of my heart for God's word and to avoid those factors that would jeopardize its reception and full fruition.

After all, it would seem that spiritual deafness and lack of understanding is simply a matter of choice.

But sometimes, lack of understanding is part of the human condition of "changing landscapes" — of trying to move from one realm (self-centered) to another (God-centered) with little personal knowledge to guide the way.

If redemption were merely a matter of enlightenment or straightforward choice with guaranteed outcomes, there would be no "groaning" involved. But the seedbed of each person's life provides unique challenges and opportunities that must be dealt with.

We are capable of embracing the word of God joyfully, even as we cling stubbornly to hardheartedness and our own distractions. But as Isaiah claims, that same word is relentlessly persistent.

The psalmist sings of a God who prepares the land and blesses its yield. As St. Paul writes, we have the "first fruits" of the Spirit of Jesus, who not only has shown us the way but empowered us to labor with patience until the harvest.

Made-for-TV movie about Pope John Paul II to air on CBS next season

WASHINGTON (CNS) — CBS plans to air a four-hour miniseries on the life of Pope John Paul II during the 2005-06 television season.

Some secondary filming has already taken place at the Vatican, including St. Peter's Square.

The movie, tentatively titled "Pope John Paul II," has not yet been cast. Plans call for beginning principal shooting this summer. Most shooting will be done in Italy and Rome, with some filming in Poland as well. The movie could land on the CBS schedule as early as November.

Historians at the Vatican are consulting on the script, according to an announcement by CBS.

The made-for-TV movie "will begin with Karol Wojtyla's journey from his youth in Poland through his late days on the chair of St. Peter," the CBS announcement said.

"It will also explore the 264th pope's fascinating life behind the scenes: how he managed to touch the hearts of millions of people and change the face of the church and the world; how he defended the dignity of mankind against all kinds of totalitarianism — from Nazism to communism to consumerism; and who successfully related to people of all ages," it said.

The papal film will be produced by members of the production team that assembled the TV miniseries "Jesus," which aired on CBS in 2000.

"Pope John Paul II" will be an international production, involving the collaboration of Granada America, the U.S. arm of the British production studio; Quinta Communications of France; RAI Fiction, a subsidiary of the Italian state television network; Italy's Lux Vide studio; Spain's Gupe Intereconomia studio; Germany's Tele Munchen studio; and Poland's Baltmedia/Projektor studio.

What's The Road Like Ahead?

The road we have to travel is different for each of us. The only certainty is that we all must end the journey some day.

If you take the time to prepare for that journey's end now, your family, favorite parish, school and diocesan ministry will be supported. A will is an essential part of that overall plan for your life's journey.

LATIN EXTRAORDINARE

Charlotte teen wins Latin exam

CHARLOTTE — Melissa Brzycki, a recent graduate of Charlotte Catholic High School, received a perfect score on the 2005 National Latin Exam.

Only 1,581 students out of 134,000 who took the test in March received this distinction.

A congratulatory letter was sent to the students' principals and Latin teachers, and a hand-lettered certificate was sent to each of the students.

The exam, which was administered in the students' schools, is offered under the joint sponsorship of the American Classical League and the National Junior Classical League.

More than 148,000 Latin students across the United States, Australia, Belgium, Canada, England, Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Niger Republic, Poland, Switzerland and Zimbabwe took the 2005 exam.

This year for the first time, students from China and France also took the exam.

National Directory for Catechesis is published

New book will serve vital role for Catholic educators

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

WASHINGTON — Religion educators in the United States now have an updated resource for teaching catechesis, as the publishing office of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) published the National Directory for Catechesis May 1.

The directory was developed by the Committee on Education and the Committee on Catechesis of the USCCB. It was approved at the June 2003 general meeting of the U.S. Catholic bishops and received Vatican approval in December 2004.

It will replace "Sharing the Light of Faith," the national catechetical directory the U.S. bishops adopted in 1977.

The new directory will serve as a guide for all those who have catechetical responsibilities in U.S. dioceses and parishes, especially those responsible for organizing and supervising catechetical programs such as religion teachers and Catholic-school principals.

In June, Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, director of religious formation for Catholic schools in the Diocese of Charlotte, presented the directory to the diocesan teachers and principals.

"The National Directory for Catechesis is the proactive way that the U.S. Catholic bishops aligned themselves with the Roman magisterium after the Vatican published the General Directory for Catechesis," said Dr. Cris Villapando, director of faith formation programs in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"The Charlotte Diocese is looking forward to conducting a general workshop on the NDC on Nov. 3, when an official representative from the USCCB will provide an even deeper understanding of the document," he said. "The Office of Faith Formation hopes to implement the recommendations in strategies and methodologies in teaching the faith within various catechetical contexts."

The directory stresses the need for appropriate catechesis for all people, including all ages and all varieties of life circumstances — married, single, ill, handicapped, in college, in prison, immigrants, people of different cultural backgrounds, police, firefighters and members of other professional groups.

It provides the fundamental theological and pastoral principles and offers guidelines for applying those principles within the catechetical mission of the Catholic Church in the United States.

"The National Directory for Catechesis provides us with an understanding of the teaching and developments in catechesis that have taken place since the Second Vatican Council," said Archbishop Daniel M. Buechlein of Indianapolis and chair of the USCCB Committee on Catechesis.

"With the 'Catechism of the Catholic Church' ... and the National Directory for Catechesis ... we have two solid tools on which to rely as we concretely respond to the Lord's call to us to baptize and teach," he said.

Throughout the directory, the idea that Jesus is the heart of catechesis regardless of where catechesis takes place is reinforced.

FIGHTING FOR LIFE

Local women grow, bond after difficult pregnancies

difficult time caring for him," Buck said. "She said Casey would never live a full life ... and that the most humane thing is to terminate these pregnancies."

When Buck, a parishioner of St. Mark Church in Huntersville, explained to her doctor that termination was not an option, she said she was told, "Then you are on your own."

Pierson's experience was similar.

"Our (unborn) son, Tanner, was diagnosed with a rare kidney defect ... and it was suggested that we terminate the pregnancy," said Pierson. "We decided instead to seek treatment options."

As her pregnancy continued, Tanner's defect could not be corrected, and the doctors kept reminding Pierson and her husband, parishioners of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, that a termination was still possible.

"One doctor even called me on the telephone and told me to reconsider my decision," said Pierson. "He said that if I didn't terminate the pregnancy, I might feel guilty later because I could have spared my son such a miserable life."

Buck and Pierson both opted to have their children, and each delivered her son early after going into premature labor on their own.

"I realized that maybe the pregnancy, for as long as it lasted, would be my only chance to be Casey's mom," she said. "I have no regrets."

Buck's son, Casey, died during birth.

"I would do it all over again just for those wonderful hours that we had with Tanner," said Pierson. "He was my pride and my joy, and he changed my life forever. He has deepened my faith, given me hope and left me with such wonderful memories."

Tanner lived for just 36 hours.

The two women met through their involvement with Elizabeth Ministry, a peer support ministry for young families who have lost babies before or shortly after birth. Buck and Pierson continue to provide support to those who have experienced a pregnancy loss, stillbirth or newborn death.

Therapeutic abortions

Not every pregnant woman with an adverse prenatal diagnosis chooses to deliver her child.

The termination of pregnancies around 20 weeks gestation (and sometimes later) is called "therapeutic abortion," or "induced labor abortion." Eighty to 90 percent of women now terminate their pregnancies in the wake of an adverse prenatal diagnosis.

Language and circumstance allow this abortion procedure to mimic birth.

COURTESY PHOTO

Mikey Howard, 2, is the son of Jennifer Howard, who carried her son to term despite receiving an adverse prenatal diagnosis about his health.

Many are performed in hospitals that provide obstetric care. In some cases, medical means are used to ensure the death of the baby before delivery, providing a stillbirth.

Parents hold, name and plan funerals for these babies, and often these terminations of pregnancy are treated as perinatal losses.

In some instances, babies have been delivered alive following induced-labor abortions, and reportedly, in these cases, they have then been left to die. It was just this circumstance that led to the passage of the federal Born Alive Infants Protection Act in 2002 when a Chicago nurse went public with the care provided to a Down's Syndrome baby born alive after an induced-labor abortion.

Recently, the National Catholic Bioethics Center (NCBC) in Boston, Mass., clarified the Catholic Church's teachings regarding therapeutic abortion in its statement on early induction of labor. According to the NCBC, an induction of labor before term (37 weeks) is only licit if the mother has a serious medical pathology such as chorioamnionitis or preeclampsia.

Inductions of labor performed because the child has a lethal anomaly and therefore will die at birth or because of maternal emotional distress as the result of such a fetal diagnosis are considered illicit as defined by the Catholic Church.

The NCBC further asserts the benefit of providing psychological support such as is available in perinatal hospice for women carrying to term following an adverse prenatal diagnosis.

Vital support

Those at Elizabeth Ministry believe there is a benefit in providing support to mothers and families following adverse prenatal diagnoses. Many mothers might choose to carry to term if that option were presented as plausible and if services to support them were available.

"I know how much it would have meant to me to have had the support of someone who could have understood my pregnancy with Casey from the perspective of their own personal experience of carrying a baby who is going to die," said Buck.

"The anxiety I experienced as I wondered about the fate of our son who was still alive and kicking inside of me is indescribable," said Jennifer Howard, a parishioner of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, who received an adverse prenatal diagnosis following a routine ultrasound.

"I feared that I'd bring a child into the world who would only live to experience pain and suffering," she said. "I wondered if it would be more peaceful for the baby to end things, but the thought of not giving him a chance was devastating."

Howard's turning point came when a priest put her in touch with another mother at her parish who had carried to term a daughter with a fatal condition.

"Her story and her pictures of baby Claire gave me the first peace I had known in weeks," said Howard. "It was about having someone who understood how I felt and who had survived this experience herself. Spending time with her, I realized I could do this."

Howard's son was born early, too. Despite the grim prenatal prognosis and a harrowing birth, Mikey is now 2 years old and doing the normal things that kids do.

Howard, who works with Elizabeth Ministry in the area of pregnancy complication, admits Mikey's birth and childhood have not been easy medically, but she said people who are unaware of his condition see him as a perfectly healthy, happy and bright child who will celebrate his third birthday this summer.

"Mikey's birth and tenacity to survive what seemed the impossible have taught me to view life in a way that I never could have before," she said. "I am so glad that we listened to our hearts and gave him a chance. He has brought us such joy."

Madeline Pecora Nugent is the author of several books including one for women experiencing a crisis pregnancy and has been involved in pro-life work since 1973.

Barbecue shrimp: First step to evangelization?

Sharing joy, experiences may help others

I just returned from New Orleans, where I was able to enjoy barbecue shrimp.

For those who may never have experienced this culinary treat, barbecue shrimp consists of whole shrimp baked in an incredible butter sauce with Cajun spices. The shrimp is usually served with crusty French bread.

Each restaurant makes it slightly differently, but the common denominator is that it is an amazing dish capable of transporting you to new heights of culinary ecstasy. I love to tell people about this dish and watch their reactions as they eat it for the first time.

While in New Orleans I was enjoying this meal when I overheard the couple next to me debating about what to order. I suggested they try the barbecue shrimp appetizer. They ordered and enjoyed a new experience.

The next day, I went to a different restaurant and decided to once again try this meal and compare it to my previous experience.

The couple next to me saw me enthusiastically enjoying the meal and asked what I was eating. I explained and said they should definitely order it next time they had the chance.

Later that day when I went out to eat with friends, I had them try the dish.

My obsession with barbecue shrimp reminds me of evangelization. In the document "Go and Make Disciples: A National Plan and Strategy for Catholic Evangelization in the United States," the U.S. bishops list as the first goal: "To bring about in all Catholics such an enthusiasm for their faith that, in living their faith in Jesus, they freely share it with others."

The key word is "enthusiasm."

At times, people wonder what is the first step in evangelization. They worry that they may not be knowledgeable about their faith or that they are unable to quote Scripture. They may not be able to answer difficult questions or have not had a course in apologetics.

The truth is that all these things are secondary; while important, they take a backseat to a genuine love of faith — a love that makes people not only curious, but want to partake in it as much as one would want to partake in, well, barbecue shrimp.

Guest Column

FRANK VILLARONGA
GUEST COLUMNIST

The problem is that many Catholics are lukewarm about their faith. It's not so much that they don't understand their faith, but rather they don't feel the power of their faith; they don't relish or enjoy it.

They go through the motions instead of experiencing the joys of their faith. They see it as a series of monotonous rituals that are to be endured and imparted on their children. They lack the experience of faith and with it, the enthusiasm necessary to want to share.

In many ways, we are to blame — and by "we," I mean everyone who understands the genuine joy of being a Catholic. We get enthusiastic about a great many things and are able to feel the joy in them, but when it comes to our faith, we are unable to convey the same kind of energy — we reduce our faith to a series of teachings rather than a powerful experience that has something to offer others in their life.

It's often hard for others to find the "good news" in the Good News. That is why the bishops' first goal is not simply to make others aware of the church's teachings in order to lead others to the truth, but rather to create an enthusiasm that in turn will lead others to begin living their faith in Jesus. Only then will they be able to freely share an awesome experience.

When I left New Orleans, four people had tasted, and six others had heard about, barbecue shrimp. Next time you're in New Orleans, you should try the barbecue shrimp.

And the next time the opportunity rises to talk about something you love, you should try sharing. It may be barbecue shrimp. It may be God.

Knocking on Heaven's door

Graham's message consistent, strong over years

In 1981 I was working as a television reporter at a Charlotte TV station when I got a call from the news director, who was also the station's anchor. His workload was too heavy for him to produce an upcoming news series about Charlotte native Billy Graham.

Someone was needed to spend a day at Graham's home in Montreat conducting an interview, and he wanted to know if I could take over.

Hmm. Would I mind meeting and talking with one of the leading religious figures of the 20th century? Some opportunities need to be carefully considered. But like a skydiver at 10,000 feet, I leaped at this one.

Thus began a relationship with Graham and his ministry that would take me as far as the former Soviet Union twice, and to small American towns as I reported on this spiritually gifted man.

Graham has been in the news a great deal lately as he leads what may be his last crusade in New York City. At 86 years old, he moves slowly, his voice has lost much of its power and zeal and he is beset with the ills of aging.

Long before Pope John Paul II's 1991 statement on communication — "It is not enough to use the media simply to spread the Christian message and the church's authentic teaching. It is also necessary to integrate that message into the 'new culture' created by modern communication ..." — Graham understood that his ministry was a child of mass communication.

Over the years his organization perfected the marketing logistics of bringing the message of salvation to large audiences both in person and through the media of television, radio, motion pictures and the written word. A Billy Graham Crusade is a well-oiled machine that involves thousands of volunteers, who, along with those in attendance, rally around the simple message that salvation comes through Jesus Christ.

The news media has a special affection for the first and the last. The first man on the moon or the last game of a superstar athlete each attracts additional attention simply because they represent a beginning or an end. And so it was with much of the coverage of Graham's New York Crusade.

DAVID HAINS
GUEST COLUMNIST

But reporters who were unfamiliar with the evangelist's ministry found that he didn't have anything new to say. He preached the same message of faith in Jesus and salvation that he had for decades.

During an interview I once asked Graham about his work and retirement. He surprised me by saying, "I'm going to retire when God calls me home, and I hope that is soon."

Did he want to die? Not necessarily, he explained, but he did look forward to spending eternity in heaven. That was 18 years ago.

Graham, who suffers with Parkinson's disease as well as various neural and bone problems, has had a lot to say since then. Like our beloved Pope John Paul II, this preacher is showing the world the dignity of growing old gracefully and the spiritual fire that burns brightly even as physical flower wilts.

Who will succeed Billy Graham? Graham has often stated that the Lord has always provided evangelical voices.

Over the years Graham has been closely associated with other evangelists, most notably Leighton Ford and more recently his son, Franklin. But neither has been able to attract the kinds of crowds that flock to a Billy Graham Crusade.

In doing that series of news stories, I asked one of his associates what would happen to the ministry when Graham retired or died? The answer about the future was refreshing. "We look at it from the biblical perspective of 'dust to dust.'"

At audience, pope confirms African synod, relaxes with crowd

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — With a dozen African cardinals and bishops seated behind him, Pope Benedict XVI announced that he was confirming Pope John Paul II's decision to convoke a second Synod of Bishops for Africa.

"I nourish great hope that this gathering will mark a further impulse on the African continent for evangelization, the consolidation and growth of the church and the promotion of reconciliation and peace," the pope said June 22 at the end of his weekly general audience.

Pope Benedict did not say when the synod would take place, although it was expected to take several years to prepare. The bishops present at the audience were in Rome to begin planning for the gathering.

The first special assembly of the Synod of Bishops was held in 1994. For the next 10 years, a small group of African bishops met annually at the Vatican to discuss the implementation of the synod's recommendations and new challenges facing the church on the continent.

Vatican officials said significant changes in the situation of the church and society in Africa since 1994 gave rise to the idea of a second synod for Africa.

An estimated 31,000 people had gathered in St. Peter's Square under a scorching summer sun for the audience.

When the crowd began to cheer the pope, he waved and kept repeating "thank you," which only seemed to fuel people's enthusiasm.

"We feel not only the heat of the sun, but also the warmth of your hearts," the pope said.

In his main audience talk, Pope Benedict spoke about Psalm 124, a hymn of joy and thanksgiving to God, who saves his people.

"We, too, can be sure that God will come to save us, even when all hope seems lost," he said.

Pope Benedict said God demonstrates his saving power particularly on behalf of "victims and the persecuted who cry to him day and night."

The psalm of thanksgiving, he said, "can be thought of as our song, the song of the church on earth, expressing our confident hope that whatever difficulties may befall us, the Lord will be on our side."

The pope appeared relaxed and comfortable throughout the audience. Preparing to end the formal part of the gathering by greeting Italian-speaking groups, he hesitated a moment and then said, "Ah, there is still a page to read."

After leading the singing of the Our Father in Latin and greeting dozens of bishops, Pope Benedict went to shake hands with and offer his blessing to several groups of nuns, seminarians and newlyweds. Although the pope did his best to reach all the outstretched hands, several people could not resist tugging him toward them.

At one point, Pope Benedict had to step back so that he could put his fisherman's ring securely back on his finger.

Because of the high temperatures, the sick and the disabled were seated in the shade on the perimeter of the square instead of near the pope's chair. But Pope Benedict, standing in the back of an open jeep, had his driver stop so he could still shake hands and bless the sick.

What if teaching people to pray was your parish's top goal?

The Human Side

FATHER
EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

"I have been saying that we should drop all church programs for a year and just teach our people how to pray!"

This quote by Franciscan Father Richard Rohr raises this question for me: When we summarize all that happens in a parish, what is its primary mission?

Those who advocate social justice would argue that the parish is a prophetic voice in the midst of a secular society; the parish defends the less fortunate and those enduring injustices. A social justice model of a parish would make room for activities such as protecting the migrant worker, advocacy on behalf of improved laws and actions against war, racism, euthanasia, capital punishment, abortion and unjust wages.

Here the parish is seen as a proactive faith community pursuing just causes within and outside its boundaries.

Others tend to view the parish as a spiritual social network in which the community works together to uphold family life, protect its youth, enhance the life of singles and come to the aid of single parents, substance abusers and those on the margins of society.

Here the parish is seen as a proactive faith community that supports its immediate members.

Still others see the parish as a learning center whose primary aim is religious education and learning more about God.

Here the parish is viewed as a center seeking ways to communicate religious knowledge, wisdom and understanding.

We all know that parish life encompasses a range of services, and the various ways it serves its people are wholesome. But what if a parish focused solely on becoming a praying congregation?

What would happen if for one year, the only parish program available was one that taught people to pray?

What if such a program focused on questions such as: When do we know we are praying? Does God really hear our prayers? Why does God seem to answer some prayers and not others? Is there a "right" way to pray? If God already knows everything, why pray? What does it mean to listen to God?

What if a parish made it a pre-eminent goal to encourage and help people to pray, as Pope John Paul II did? I have to believe that all the other ways a parish serves its people not only would fall into place, but would become driven by a fresh and awesome spirit.

Supreme Court did not resolve abortion controversy: It created it

AMERICAN PEOPLE USURPED ON PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

June 29 marks the 13th anniversary of Casey v. Planned Parenthood, the 1992 U.S. Supreme Court decision that reaffirmed the central holding of Roe v. Wade — that women have a "liberty interest" to choose abortion throughout the nine months of pregnancy.

The Supreme Court said it decided to maintain its precedent in Roe v. Wade in part because case law subsequent to and legal principles developed since Roe v. Wade have not undermined its legal basis. The Court said, "No evolution of legal principle has left Roe's doctrinal footings weaker than they were in 1973."

This line of enquiry begs the question of whether Roe ever stood on a firm legal foundation.

Any legal basis for Roe was challenged immediately following its announcement even by scholars who support legal abortion.

In 1973, John Hart Ely, a professor of law at Yale Law School, writing in the Yale Law Journal said, Roe v. Wade is "a very bad decision ... It is bad because it is bad constitutional law, or rather because it is not constitutional law and gives almost no sense of an obligation to try to be."

The same year, Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe wrote, "One of the most curious things about Roe is that, behind its own verbal smokescreen, the substantive judgment on which it rests is nowhere to be found."

Earlier this year, Benjamin Wittes, a Washington Post legal affairs writer noted, "Since its inception Roe has had a deep legitimacy problem, stemming from its weakness as a legal opinion."

Perhaps most interesting of Roe's commentators is Edward Lazarus, a former law clerk to Justice Harry Blackmun, Roe's author. Lazarus, who describes himself as someone who loved Blackmun "like a grandfather" called Roe "one of the most intellectually suspect constitutional decisions of the modern era" and "a jurisprudential nightmare."

Lazarus has also commented on Casey v. Planned Parenthood. He said the Casey opinion was "not an act of constitutional interpretation or lawmaking. Instead, it was an act of judicial and political diplomacy — one designed to extricate the Court from the eye of the abortion rights storm."

Indeed, in Casey, the Court said that a "dimension" of its decision in Roe was to "call the contending sides of a national controversy to end their national division by accepting a common mandate rooted in the Constitution."

It is now 32 years after Roe, 13 years after Casey and five years after Carhart v. Stenberg, which invalidated Nebraska's ban of the grisly partial-birth abortion procedure. On the Court's docket for this fall is consideration of New Hampshire's parental notice law.

The national controversy of which the Court speaks is far from over. The Court did not resolve the controversy. It created it. Without any real constitutional basis, the Court usurped from the democratic process and the American people the question of what protection ought to be afforded to unborn children.

The Court said none. The vast majority of Americans disagree. Roe must be overturned.

Pope says body, soul can benefit from vacation, especially outdoors

LES COMBES, Italy (CNS) — Both body and soul can benefit from a relaxing, getaway vacation, especially one spent in the outdoors, Pope Benedict XVI said from an Alpine mountain retreat in northern Italy.

Vacation time with family and loved ones offers the opportunity to spend "more time dedicated to prayer, reading and meditation on the deep meaning of life," he said July 17 before praying the Sunday Angelus in Les Combes, in Italy's Valle d'Aosta region.

NFP Awareness Week to encourage 'healthier view of parenthood'

CHARLOTTE — The Catholic Church sees sexuality as a gift from God that touches all aspects of the individuals involved — spiritual, moral, physical and psychological, according to Pope John Paul II.

The late pope said in 1994 that the use of natural methods of family planning help couples keep these four aspects in mind as they decide together whether to take advantage of the wife's fertile or infertile periods.

With Natural Family Planning Awareness Week July 24-30 this year, the pope's beliefs still hold true, according to many Catholic pro-life and family advocates around the country and in the Diocese of Charlotte.

On July 16, Bishop Peter J. Jugis blessed Northgate Family Medicine in Concord, where

PULLING STRINGS TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Jessica Billings of Bloomington, Minn., poses with her puppets at her home in early June. Jessica was inspired by her autistic brother, Jamey, to educate others about people with disabilities.

Minnesota Catholic teen an advocate for people with disabilities

ST. PAUL, Minn. (CNS) — Jessica Billings was 5 years old when, she recalled, a woman approached her family at a restaurant and complained, "My husband and I paid good money for our meals, and we don't appreciate having him here."

The woman was referring to Billings' brother, Jamey, who has autism and sometimes makes loud noises or has erratic movements. At the time, Billings said, "I didn't even know what to feel." But the experience left a lasting impression on her.

Now, at age 18, the teen has dedicated her life to advocating for people with disabilities and educating others about people with special needs.

Growing up, Billings said, her brother's disability was not something she talked about. But at age 13 she won an essay contest sponsored by the Bloomington Human Rights Commission.

That's when Billings found her voice — and her passion.

Billings founded a program called "Dare To Be Different" to educate youths about diversity.

When she won the Miss Minnesota Junior Teen pageant in 2002, she used her platform to educate people about disabilities.

Twice she spoke at the Minnesota Capitol about her family's experiences with autism. She also is a volunteer and puppeteer with PACER (Parent Advocacy Coalition for Education Rights), which provides services to families with special needs and performs puppet shows for children.

Through all of her volunteer work, Billings realized that "if we can teach kids to have a strong belief in who they are, then they can make positive decisions."

To that end, she joined Students Against Destructive Decisions at the Academy of Holy Angels in Richfield. The group helps students avoid underage drinking, drug abuse, driving while impaired and other destructive behaviors.

In May, Billings was named that organization's national student of the year. Next year, Billings will travel around the country to speak to her peers about making positive choices.

Billings said her faith has inspired her to take action in her community. "I have so many gifts from God and I need to use them," she said. "Actions speak so much louder than words."

USCCB official praises G-8 promises to help Africa, Palestinians

Commitments will help make world 'more peaceful,' says bishop

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The commitment made by the world's wealthiest countries to help improve living conditions in Africa offered "hope and promise" to the world's poorest countries, said the chairman of the U.S. bishops' international policy committee.

Bishop John H. Ricard of Pensacola-Tallahassee, Fla., said he welcomed the promise made by world leaders at the recent Group of Eight summit to extend debt relief and to double aid to Africa.

"At a time of sadness, fear and determination following the terror attacks on the people of London, the G-8 leaders have offered commitments of hope and promise. They launched a new partnership in pursuit of a more just, secure and peaceful world," Bishop Ricard said July 12.

At the G-8 summit July 6-8 in Scotland, leaders of the world's industrialized nations promised a $50 billion package to help lift Africa from poverty and proposed up to $9 billion to help the Palestinians achieve peace with Israel. Bishop Ricard said the G-8 leaders should take steps to ensure that these goals are reached by 2010.

The bishop also welcomed the world leaders' acknowledgment of the need to address climate change and encouraged them to continue to pursue measures to mitigate the changes and to examine the effects of such changes on the poor.

"Clearly one meeting will not overcome poverty and despair. However, through sustained implementation of ... commitments, our world can become more just and more peaceful," the bishop said.

Pope appeals to London attackers, terrorists to stop sowing hatred

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI urgently appealed to those responsible for the July 7 bombing attacks in London by calling on the perpetrators to stop sowing hatred and terrorism.

“I say to you: God loves life, which he created, not death. Stop in the name of God,” said the pope.

After praying the Angelus July 10, Pope Benedict asked the faithful gathered in St. Peter’s Square to pray for “the people killed, for those wounded and for their loved ones.”

He then asked: “But let us also pray for the attackers. May the Lord touch their hearts.”

Pope Benedict asked that there be a conversion of heart in those who “fuel feelings of hatred” and “carry out repugnant terrorist acts.”

Meanwhile, Rome and the Vatican beefed up security measures after the July 7 attacks on London’s transit system.

In a statement on its Web site, the group claiming responsibility for the attacks, the Secret Organization Group of al-Qaida in Europe, named Italy and Denmark as possible future targets.

Meanwhile the Vatican newspaper, L’Osservatore Romano, said terrorism today has become “an international plague that does not take account of one’s race, religion, social status.”

Terrorist acts no longer target “the enemy,” but rather “the crowd,” in such a way as to “bring about the most injuries possible” and to provoke fear, it said in its July 10 front-page editorial.

The paper said the best and only way to “unhinge the logic of terrorism, which is the logic of fear,” was to remain hopeful and not cave in to their “blackmail” of violence.

Vatican budget back in black despite weak dollar, drop in donations

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican had a budget surplus of almost $3.7 million in 2004 after running a deficit three years in a row.

Higher investment income and the sale of some property, mainly individual apartments in buildings outside Rome, offset increased personnel costs and a continued drop in the value of the U.S. dollar against the euro, Vatican officials said.

Cardinal Sergio Sebastiani, president of the Prefecture of the Economic Affairs of the Holy See, presented the Vatican’s 2004 final budget figures during a July 11 press conference.

Cardinal Sebastiani also said the 2005 forecast was for a balanced budget; extraordinary costs connected with the death and funeral of Pope John Paul II and the election of Pope Benedict XVI will be accounted for separately, he said.

Cardinal Sebastiani is responsible for overseeing two separate budget reports: the Holy See, which includes the Roman Curia, Vatican diplomatic missions around the world, Vatican Radio and Vatican investments; and Vatican City State, which includes the Vatican post office and Vatican Museums.

The income reported by the Holy See in 2004 was about $246.3 million — at July 11, 2005, exchange rates — while expenses were about $242.6 million.

While salaries for the Holy See’s 2,663 employees rose by 9 percent in 2004, the amount of money spent by 127 Vatican diplomatic missions was lower than in 2003, mainly because fewer new offices were opened, the cardinal said.

The Vatican’s investment portfolio earned about $7.3 million in profits in 2004, while it showed a loss in 2003, he said.

Cardinal Sebastiani said all Vatican investments meet “ethical” criteria; “we have no relationship with funds that do not provide this assurance.”

Paolo Trombetta, the chief accountant, said that about 80 percent of the investments are in government bonds, while about 20 percent are in stocks.

Sisters of St. Francis celebrate anniversaries

SISTER GANIEL AMONG 75 SISTERS HONORED
AT GATHERING

WINSTON-SALEM — Franciscan Sister Kathleen Anne Ganiel, pastoral associate at Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem, recently celebrated her call to the religious life with hundreds of her fellow Sisters of St. Francis of Philadelphia.

Sister Ganiel, who celebrated 25 years as a woman religious, was among 75 jubilarians with 25, 50, 70 and 75 years of service. They were honored during Jubilee 2005, an event celebrating the 150th anniversary of the Sisters of St. Francis of Philadelphia.

The event, which drew more than 600 Sisters of St. Francis, was held at Our Lady of Angels Convent in Aston, Pa., June 19-25.

With inspirational speakers, reflection and discussion, the sisters assessed their progress since their order's 2002 decision-making gathering and decided on what they need to focus on during the next three years.

Since the beginning of the congregation in 1855, the Sisters of St. Francis of Philadelphia have ministered in a variety of fields, including education and health care, as well as to immigrants, orphans and the elderly.

Franciscan Sister Kathleen

The ministries of the jubilarians have taken them to 23 states and 37 dioceses, as well as to Ireland, Puerto Rico, Guatemala, Kenya, Antigua and Zambia. Collectively, the jubilarians have offered 4,139 years of service.

The jubiliarian anniversaries of Sister Ganiel and other women religious serving in the Diocese of Charlotte were highlighted during the annual Sisters' Appreciation Day, held in Belmont in June.

HART RECEIVES $750 FROM SFO TO VISIT GERMANY

Kelly Hart

CHARLOTTE — Kelly Hart, a parishioner of St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte, recently received a $750 scholarship to attend World Youth Day in Cologne, Germany, in August.

Hart, an aspiring youth minister and rising freshman at Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio, won the scholarship through an essay contest sponsored by the Youth and Young Adult Commission of the Brothers and Sisters of St. Francis Region, Secular Franciscan Order.

She will be one of two winners to join the BSSF's pilgrimage to World Youth Day.

"God once called St. Francis to rebuild his church. I believe that I, along with many others, am being called to this same vocation nearly 800 years later," wrote Hart in her essay.

"Over the past couple of years, I have been amazed at how God has worked in my life. I have witnessed him truly change me into a passion-filled young Catholic with a desire to serve him in all that I do," she said.

The BSSF consists of Secular Franciscan Order fraternities in North and South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee.

FATHER ROBINSON TO SERVE ON ORDER'S GOVERNING BOARD

WINSTON-SALEM — Conventual Franciscan Father William Robinson, pastor of Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem, will help lead his Immaculate Conception Province of the Order of Friars Minor Conventual.

Father Robinson was one of five Franciscans from around the country elected to a five-year term on the Provincial Definitory, the province's governing board.

Established in the United States in 1852 by five European friars ministering to immigrants, the province today extends from Canada down the eastern U.S. seaboard to Costa Rica, with a mission in Brazil. Following the example of St. Francis, the friars strive to spend time in service to others, prayer and fraternity.

Father Robinson, a native of Abington, Mass., who entered the Franciscan order in 1964 and was ordained in 1974, served for six years as assistant general to the order. During his 41 years as a Franciscan, he has worked in initial formation and parish administration.

Under new leadership

New director looks to highlight black Catholics' legacy

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — Making sure the African American Affairs Ministry (AAAM) is a strong body and voice for black Catholics is its new director's top priority.

Sandra Murdock, chairperson of the board of directors of the diocesan African American Affairs Ministry (AAAM), has assumed the position of director of the AAAM following the retirement of Deacon Curtiss Todd in May.

Murdock has been actively involved with the AAAM since 1990, and has served as chairperson for the past two years.

As director, she will continue to head the board of directors for the AAAM. She will be available to black Catholics — who includes Africans and anyone of African ancestry — to hear their concerns, to be a voice for them to the diocese and to keep them informed of programs and events of interest, such as the "Revival of the Spirit 2005" tent revival in August.

Murdock comes to the position with more than 10 years' experience with the AAAM, having worked with the ministry from 1990-1995, and again since 2000. She also established Kabaka, a dance and drum group; and Sankofa, an African American heritage program for children and teenagers.

Black Catholics need to be recognized for the gifts and history they bring to the Catholic Church and to society in general, Murdock said.

"Quite often, our fellow parishioners who are not African American have no idea that there were three black popes and that there are black saints," said Murdock. "There are many contributions that have been made to our religion (by black Catholics)."

Since the AAAM was established in 1985, black Catholics have a "voice" in the diocese they didn't have before, Murdock said.

Murdock and the board of directors plan to expand the AAAM by adding a leadership program for adults, a heritage-appreciation program for teenagers and philanthropic projects to help children in Africa.

There is still much work to do, however, Murdock hopes the diocesan Catholic schools will try to appeal more to blacks — for students, teachers and staff.

"(Black Catholics) need to be involved and visible in all aspects of the diocese," said Murdock.

Wilbur Thomas, pastor of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville; and Deacon Curtiss Todd, recently retired vice chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte.

Titled "Empowered by Faith for Ministry in the Holy Spirit," the conference brought together 260 African-American Catholics involved in lay ministry throughout North Carolina for inspiration and collaboration; to accomplish goals set by the National Black Catholic Congress; and to empower and encourage black Catholics to become more involved in the Catholic Church.

"We must find ways to provide and encourage responsible leadership roles for those black, adult Catholics who are by education and professional achievements entitled by right to such positions and who would serve but have often been made to feel unwelcome," said Bishop Joseph F. Gossman of Raleigh during his address.

"Many have found secular uses for their talents and we suffer the loss," he said. "The church needs competent, dedicated black Catholics in leadership positions if we are to survive and grow in the next millennium."

Speakers and workshop presenters included Mercy Sister Larretta Rivera-Williams, pastoral associate at St. Benedict the Moor Church. Workshop topics ranged from the inspirational to the practical, from "Discerning Your Call to Ministry" to "Learning About Our Heritage Through Music and Stories."

"This is showing how the Holy Spirit is working in the Catholic Church," said Martha Carter-Bailey, executive director of Raleigh's office of African Ancestry Ministry and Evangelization, which sponsored the conference.

"It doesn't matter where you are from. We are all one body in Christ," she said.

Editor Richard Reece of NC Catholics and Sandra Murdock contributed to this story.

SPIRITS TO BE REVIVED AT OUR LADY OF CONSOLATION CHURCH

One of the most important events sponsored by AAAM is the upcoming revival, "Revival of the Spirit 2005," at Our Lady of Consolation Church Aug. 12-14.

The keynote speaker and homilist for the revival will be Franciscan Father James E. Goode. Father Goode is known for his untiring voice for the sacredness of life and for leading the call for the African American Catholic community to support the end of abortion and all other acts of violence against human life.

Father Goode is also known for his work feeding the hungry, sheltering the homeless, educating the young and old, caring for the sick and those living with HIV/AIDS and caring for victims of violence, neglect and abuse.

On Aug. 12, the St. Augustine Catholic Church Gospel Choir will perform a gospel concert. Founded in 1977 by composer Leon Roberts, the choir has established a legacy of African American-based liturgical music in Washington, D.C.

Over the past three decades, the choir has spread the good news in services, concerts and workshops throughout the United States as well as in Italy and France, performing for Pope John Paul II and former President and Mrs. Clinton.

Program to help welcome back inactive Catholics

BY JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

MAGGIE VALLEY — You know they're out there: Catholics who've been away from "home" for a long time. Their roots are in the Catholic Church, but for whatever reason, they no longer practice their faith.

"Inactive Catholics: Who Are They and How Can We Reach Them?" seeks to change that.

Paulist Father Robert S. Rivers will present the program, which is free and open to the public, at Living Waters Catholic Reflection Center in Maggie Valley Aug. 13.

"In all of our towns there are many people who are Catholic (and are not participating)," said Father George Kloster, pastor of St. William Church in Murphy and Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Hayesville, and vicar of the Smoky Mountain Vicariate.

"We're going to learn how to identify them and how to welcome them, to let them know that the home doors are still open," he said.

The program's three sessions are "Inactive Catholics: Who They Are and What Do We Know About Them?," "Inactive Catholics: How Do We Reach Out to Them?" and "Successful Outreach Programs For Parishes."

Father Rivers, vice president and director of parish missions for the Paulist National Catholic Evangelization Association in Washington, D.C., has 25 years of pastoral experience. He is the author of the book "From Maintenance to Mission: Evangelization and the Revitalization of the Parish."

"Deeply committed to developing the ministry of evangelization," the conference brochure states, "Father Rivers specializes in preaching and teaching to help dioceses and parishes carry out the saving mission of Jesus Christ."

Sponsored by the Smoky Mountain Vicariate, "Inactive Catholics" will especially benefit those in parish leadership positions, such as pastoral councils, evangelization, ecumenical and family life commissions and stewardship committees.

Contact Correspondent Joanita M. Nellenbach by calling (828) 627-9209 or e-mail jnell@dnet.net.

doctors prescribe only natural family planning methods to their patients.

On July 17, two of those doctors participated in "God's Plan for Human Love," a free three-hour workshop at St. James Church in Concord. The workshop was conducted by Benedictine Father Matthew Habinger, director of retreats for St. Benedict's Abbey in Atchison, Kansas, and a member of NFP Outreach, a resource center for accurate natural family planning information and principles.

The awareness week, this year themed "Making Good Marriages Great," was started by the American Academy of NFP (now the American Academy of FertilityCare Professionals) and is promoted by the Diocesan Development Program for NFP, a program of the U.S. bishops' Committee for Pro-Life Activities.

The July dates were chosen to highlight the July 25 anniversary of Pope John Paul's encyclical "Humanae Vitae."

Conception and misconceptions

Developed in 1968 by Dr. Thomas Hilgers, natural family planning is based on an awareness of a woman's fertility as a natural way to postpone or achieve pregnancy.

The method involves interpreting certain signs of a woman's body that indicate fertile and infertile times.

When followed correctly, natural family planning is up to 99 percent successful in spacing or limiting births, according to U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

COURTESY PHOTO

Bishop Peter J. Jugis blesses Northgate Family Medicine in Concord July 16. The doctors at the practice prescribe natural family planning to their patients.

Natural family planning is not the rhythm or calendar method, in which time of ovulation is estimated by calculating previous menstrual cycles. Although the Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities states the rhythm approach has sound scientific underpinnings, in practice it often proved inaccurate because of the unique nature of each woman's menstrual cycle.

Natural family planning, by contrast, has been proven scientifically sound in both theory and practice.

Scientific, spiritual benefits

The Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities reports natural family planning: contributes to marriage enrichment and mutual understanding, and the appreciation for the value of children; fosters respect for and acceptance of the total person; and encourages moral acceptability. Couples who use it learn they share responsibility for family planning.

The Couple to Couple League for Natural Family Planning Web site states that periodic abstinence, such as with natural family planning, helps keep relationships fresh, improves communication and gives couples a deeper respect for each other.

Natural family planning offers couples a scientifically supported way to regulate births while respecting each other and the integrity of the human person, said Pope John Paul.

In a 2004 message to a Rome conference on natural family planning, the pope said that while natural methods of planning or spacing the birth of a child are based on science, they are not purely technical.

The methods, he said, help individuals recognize each other as "a unity of spirit, mind and body."

Pope John Paul said that while the biological rhythms of a woman's fertility cycle make natural family planning possible the methods should be taught in such a way as to promote an attitude where "every person, beginning with the child, is recognized and respected for his or her self and every choice is animated and guided by the criterion of a sincere self-giving."

The late pope said many people today seem "almost intimidated by the responsibility of procreation," yet at the same time believe it is acceptable to "dominate and manipulate life."

The values taught by natural family planning, he said, help people return to a healthier view of parenthood, respect for God's plan for marriage and sexuality and respect for human life.

Pope John Paul II praised health care workers who, "coherent with their vocation as servants of life," promote research into natural family planning and teach the methods to others.

The good and bad of Harry

New attention given to 2003 Cardinal Ratzinger letter on Harry Potter

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — With the sixth volume of the adventures of Harry Potter, the teen wizard, about to be released, new attention is being given to a 2003 letter from then-Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger.

Although the Vatican press office July 14 said it would have no comment on the letter since Pope Benedict XVI and his secretary were on vacation in the northern Italian Alps, a former Vatican official said Harry Potter books must be read as children's literature, not theology.

Cardinal Ratzinger, now Pope Benedict, wrote to Gabriele Kuby to acknowledge receipt of her book, "Harry Potter: Gut oder Bose" ("Harry Potter: Good or Bad"), which expresses her concern that children can become fascinated with the occult through reading the series.

In the cardinal's letter, excerpted on Kuby's Web site and published widely since late June, he praised the author's attempt to "enlighten people about Harry Potter" and the possible "subtle seductions" that can distort children's thinking before they mature in the Christian faith.

Cardinal Ratzinger did not say if he had read any of the Harry Potter books.

In the letter, Cardinal Ratzinger suggested Kuby send a copy of her book to Msgr. Peter Fleetwood, then an official at the Pontifical Council for Culture.

Msgr. Fleetwood told Catholic

News Service July 14 that he received a copy of the book in 2003 and wrote Kuby a four-page letter explaining where he thought she may have misunderstood or read too much into the books. He said he never heard back from her.

The monsignor, now an official of the Council of European Bishops' Conferences, said the primary focus of parents and teachers he has spoken with about the books is how enthusiastic children are about reading them.

On a moral level, he said, the books "pit good against evil, and good always wins."

In J.K. Rowling's books, he said, "Harry is the only one not afraid to name Voldemort — whom the others all refer to as 'He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named.' Because he names evil, he is not afraid of it," but can confront it.

Msgr. Fleetwood said the most appropriate way to judge Harry Potter is not on the basis of theology, but according to the criteria of children's literature and whether children will read the books willingly.

God always feeds those with deep hunger

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

My brother-in-law was poetry in motion, sprinting across the busy street, juking and whirling through traffic like an all-star running back evading tacklers.

As he dashed through the steady flow of cars toward the hamburger joint, I watched him with a mixture of awe and anxiety — fearful for his safety, awestruck.

The object of his perilous journey was not simply hamburgers for our summer picnic. No, he was risking life and limb for hamburgers that were absolutely free.

In those ancient days when my brother and I were about 14 and 10, we were visiting our newly married sister and her husband at their tiny apartment in the college town where they lived as nearly starving students. Money was tight, and having two hungry children as guests must have made my sister and her husband feel even more pinched than usual.

The prospect of free hamburgers doubtless appeared like manna from heaven to them, well worth whatever dangers the busy street had to offer.

I remember hungrily even now, more than 40 years later, the mouth-watering sight of that greasy bag of burgers and the heavenly perfume of their onion and pickle-scented aroma. The fact that all this savory goodness was free made the whole experience doubly enriching.

For whom is it good news to hear that the meal is free?

When Isaiah in Sunday's first reading invites people to come to the rich banquet of the Lord, he invites those without money. That must have sounded irritating, or at least odd, to those with cash in their pockets, with good credit at the grocery store, with cupboards full of food.

God feeds us with his word and his body, not because we have paid for it with good deeds and strict religious observance. We can savor just how good this heavenly food is only when we recognize how empty our hands are and how deep our hunger is.

Youth wins top award in Girl Scouts

CHARLOTTE — Christine Mancusi, a member of Girl Scout Troop 55 at St. Ann Church in Charlotte, recently earned her Gold Award, the highest award in Girl Scouts.

To earn her recognition, presented by the Hornet's Nest Girl Scout Council, Christine developed and instructed free classes on butterflies, reptiles and amphibian survival for the recently expanded Reedy Creek Nature Center in northeastern Mecklenburg County.

She also trained volunteers at the center to present the classes to the public using lesson plans, materials and activities.

Christine is a rising freshman at the Six Scouts earn Eagle rank

CHARLOTTE — Boy Scout Troop 8 at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte recently awarded six members with the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rank in Boy Scouts.

Kristopher Bahar, Andrew Birch, Justin Carey, Stephen Carey, Thomas Huckbody and Nicholas Vari received the rank during an awards dinner May 21.

To receive the rank, the scouts had to complete individual service projects.

Nicholas planned and organized a Christmas party for refugees at St. Matthew Church for the Missionaries of Charity nuns.

Birch repaired 120 feet of fencing and built a raised 8-foot square garden at the Missionaries of Charity convent in Charlotte.

Thomas built a concrete walkway at the Hornet's Nest Girl Scout Council headquarters in Charlotte.

Kristopher conducted a book drive for Holy Angels, a nonprofit corporation in Belmont providing services to children and adults with varying degrees of mental retardation.

Humans, the design of God

New York Times.

"Scientific theories that try to explain away the appearance of design as the result of 'chance and necessity' are not science at all, but, as John Paul put it, an abdication of human intelligence," he said in the article that quoted the late Pope John Paul II.

Pope Benedict XVI holds the same position as his predecessor, said

Cardinal Schonborn.

The article did not discuss the current debate in the United States over some local public school boards that want science classes to incorporate views holding that creation is the result of an intelligent design.

Cardinal Schonborn criticized unnamed "neo-Darwinian" scientists as claiming that "an unguided, unplanned process of random variation and natural selection" is acceptable in Catholic teaching.

"The Catholic Church, while leaving to science many details about the history of life on earth, proclaims that by the light of reason the human intellect can readily and clearly discern purpose and design in the natural world, including the world of living things," he said.

"Faced with scientific claims like neo-Darwinism and the multiverse hypothesis in cosmology invented to avoid the overwhelming evidence for purpose and design found in modern science, the Catholic Church will again defend human reason by proclaiming that the immanent design evident in nature is real," he said.

Evolving process

"Evolution in the sense of common ancestry might be true," said the cardinal.

Cardinal Schonborn, who was one of the main editors of the "Catechism of the Catholic Church," said that in the debates over evolution "the Catholic Church is in the odd position of standing in firm defense of reason."

The cardinal said that "neo-Darwinists" are claiming that Pope Benedict agrees with their views about an unguided and unplanned evolutionary process.

In refutation, he quoted from the pope's inaugural homily.

"We are not some casual and meaningless product of evolution. Each of us is the result of a thought of God," said the pope at his installation.

In follow-up remarks published July 11 by Kathpress, an Austrian Catholic news agency, Cardinal Schonborn cited Popes Pius XII and John Paul II as saying that the theory of evolution — as long as it remains within the realm of science and is not made into an ideological "dogma" which cannot be questioned — is in conformity with Catholic teaching.

The cardinal quoted Pope John Paul as saying in 1985 that "the properly understood belief in creation and the properly understood teaching of evolution do not stand in each other's way."

By design

The cardinal told Kathpress that it was the task of philosophy and the theory of science to determine the difference between scientific statements and extrapolations relating to a view of the nature of the world.

Erich Leitenberger, spokesman for Cardinal Schonborn, told Catholic News Service July 11 that "the cardinal believes that evolutionism as an ideology is to be rejected" because it cannot explain the existence of the soul and the spiritual world.

"He believes in a grand design that is in nature and that makes us understand the existence of the universe and life on earth," said Leitenberger.

Leitenberger confirmed a July 10 New York Times news story saying that Mark Ryland, vice president of the Seattle-based Discovery Institute, which supports intelligent design, helped the cardinal place the article in the Times.

Ryland told CNS that the cardinal's piece was not support for intelligent design.

"There is no mention of intelligent design in the essay," said Ryland.

"I see it more as an attack on Darwinism, which argues that there is no intelligent design in evolution," he said. "But it is not an affirmation of any scientific response to Darwin's theory."

Ryland said he recommended the media firm that submitted the article to the Times on Cardinal Schonborn's behalf. He noted that he has known the cardinal for five years.

Both are associated with the International Institute of Theology in Gaming, Austria. Cardinal Schonborn is the chancellor and Ryland is on the board.

YOUTH MINISTER

ST. MICHAEL THE ARCHANGEL CATHOLIC CHURCH in Cary, NC is seeking an experienced youth minister for the position of Director of LifeTeen. Cary, NC is in the heart of the Sunbelt and has been named by Money Magazine as "the hottest town in the Eastern U.S." and one of the most desirable places to live in America. This established youth program currently has over 200 high school youth and is growing! LifeTeen's core mission, to lead teens closer to Christ, is achieved by high impact activities such as weekly Life Nights, retreats, and a variety of regularly scheduled informal gatherings. The Director of LifeTeen will direct the activities of over 40 faith filled adult and high school volunteers to foster the spiritual development of high schoolers through a high-energy Catholic program designed specifically for teens. The ideal candidate will provide guidance and encouragement to the teens through regular weekly activities. The ideal candidate will also have a strong foundation in contemporary Christian music that they will use to impact the spiritual development of the parish's teens. This position will require the ability to effectively coordinate with other parish programs, the Raleigh Diocese, and the national LifeTeen program.

The successful candidate must have a four-year degree, must be a practicing Catholic, and have had at least three years' experience in youth ministry. Compensation includes salary commensurate with experience and an excellent benefits package.

especially in hectic cities, "leave little room for silence, reflection and being in touch with nature," it has become "almost a necessity to be able to refortify one's body and spirit" with a relaxing vacation, said the pope.

Some 6,000 pilgrims gathered at the small mountain village to hear Pope Benedict pray the midday Angelus during his first extended vacation since he was elected pontiff April 19.

"After the first months of the demanding pastoral service that (God) has entrusted to me, this summer pause is a truly providential gift of God," he told the crowd.

Surrounded by fir trees and snow-tipped mountains, the pope said "vacation time offers the unique opportunity to take a pause before nature's striking displays."

He said nature was like "a wonderful book," accessible to young and old. Being in touch with nature helps put things back in perspective; one "rediscovers oneself to be a small, but unique creature with a capacity for God," he said.

Pope Benedict said seeing the "stupendous mountains of the Valle d'Aosta" brought back vivid recollections of "my beloved predecessor John Paul II," who began the tradition of including an Alpine retreat during the summer holidays.

Pope Benedict was vacationing July

11-28 in an Alpine chalet owned by the Salesians.

Though fewer than 40 people reside in the rural area of Les Combes, the village teems with people — pilgrims, tourists and journalists — every summer that a pope visits for vacation. More than 200 Italian agents were reported to be providing security for the pope.

The pope reportedly was spending a large portion of his summer holiday writing and reading.

Papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls, who was staying with the pope, said the pontiff was enjoying "a real holiday, but a working holiday." Italian Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone of Genoa said the pontiff was using the break to write a book.

Cardinal Bertone, who worked many years at the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith under then-Cardinal Ratzinger, visited the pope July 12 at Les Combes.

In an interview published July 15 by the Italian Catholic newspaper Avvenire, Cardinal Bertone said the pope's mornings were dedicated to prayer and the late afternoons to long walks.

The rest of the day, the pope spends working, "reading, studying" and "writing a book," he said.

Navarro-Valls added that the pope was also spending some time playing the piano. For the past several days "I have heard him play Mozart," the spokesman said July 18.

Stem cells without embryos?

PUTTING THE CONTRARY CLAIMS TO THE TEST

The battle lines of the stem cell debate have become familiar.

In one corner we have embryonic stem cells, obtained by destroying one-week-old human embryos. The cells are "pluripotent," capable of producing all the 210 cell types in the human body.

In the other corner are stem cells obtained harmlessly from adult tissues, umbilical cord blood and placentas. These pose no ethical problem, but supposedly are more limited.

Herein lies the alleged tension between science and ethics: We can cure devastating diseases, or respect embryonic human life, but not both.

That dichotomy has always been misleading. Embryonic stem cells are far from curing any disease, while adult and umbilical cord blood stem cells have helped many thousands of patients. Yet scientists still claim that cells obtained by destroying early human life have special advantages that cannot be duplicated.

This claim is about to be tested.

Just before Congress' July 4 recess, Rep. Roscoe Bartlett, R-Md., introduced the Respect for Life Pluripotent Stem Cell Act. It instructs the National Institutes of Health to fund research in obtaining pluripotent stem cells without creating or harming human embryos.

Bartlett knows whereof he speaks. He holds a doctorate in physiology and bases his proposal on a report by the President's Council on Bioethics and the latest research findings.

His bill outlines two ways to get pluripotent stem cells without harming embryos. One is to remove the cells from embryos without harming or destroying them. The bill would fund such efforts in animal embryos to see if this procedure can be safe enough for humans.

The other approach would produce embryo-like stem cells without creating embryos at all. A dozen studies now indicate that umbilical cord blood and adult tissues contain stem cells that may be as versatile as embryonic stem cells.

In addition, cutting-edge research suggests that adult cells can be "reprogrammed" in several ways into pluripotent stem cells.

One avenue is dubbed "ANT-OAR" — altered nuclear transfer by oocyte assisted reprogramming.

"Nuclear transfer" is the cloning method that made Dolly the sheep. The nucleus of a body cell is combined with an egg deprived of its own nucleus. Signals in the egg activate a much wider range of genes in that nucleus, so it no longer directs one specialized type of cell but begins the development of a whole new organism.

What if the egg and the body cell were altered in advance so that, from the beginning, the result is not a one-celled embryo, but a pluripotent stem cell like those now obtained by destroying embryos?

There are good scientific reasons to believe this can be done. And many Catholic scientists and ethicists have declared that it can and should be explored.

It would be good news indeed if modern science ends up resolving some moral dilemmas that an irresponsible use of science has created. Bartlett and his colleagues are helping to demonstrate what has always been true: science and ethics were meant to be allies, not enemies.

Closer look at Harry Potter needed

In a review of several books about Harry Potter ("Examining the good and bad of Harry," June 24), author John Granger indicated that spells are okay and it is only calling upon demons that is forbidden by Scripture. Granger's comments were unchallenged and untrue.

Scripture and the catechism forbid all type of magic. To say that spells (or

Pope says God's plan always has been to save people from sin

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — From the beginning of time, God's plan has been to save people from sin and embrace them as his children, Pope Benedict XVI said at his general audience July 6.

The plan of salvation is God's "great secret project" that he had in mind "before the foundation of the world," the pope said.

It is "our predestination to be children of God" through Jesus Christ, he said in his July 6 catechesis reflecting on the first chapter of St. Paul's Letter to the Ephesians.

At one point in his address to pilgrims in St. Peter's Square, Pope Benedict lifted his eyes from his prepared text and told his audience he was moved every time he meditated on "this truth that from eternity we were before the eyes of God and he decided to save us."

"We are not just human creatures" created by God, "but we belong to him as his children," he said.

God calls everyone to become holy, but holiness is not an impossible dream, the pope said. Holiness, he said, is to take part in God's love and "to follow God, who is charity."

That God is love is "the consoling truth that makes us see that holiness is not something far from our lives," he said, departing from his written text.

More than 20,000 pilgrims from all over the world braved the heat to hear the pope's last weekly catechesis before he departed July 11 for his summer vacation in the Alps of northern Italy.

The weekly general audience at the Vatican was to be suspended until Aug. 3, when the pope was to return from Les Combes di Introd in Italy's Valle d'Aosta region.

Though the pope will spend the month of August and part of September at the papal summer villa of Castel Gandolfo, south of Rome, he will hold his Wednesday general audiences either at the villa or at the Vatican, depending on the number of pilgrims expected to attend.

Part of the July 6 audience was a delegation from the Italian town of Norcia, the birthplace of St. Benedict, patriarch of Western monasticism, patron of Europe and founder of the Benedictine order.

Every year, the town sponsors the Benedictine Torch of Peace initiative in which the torch is lit, usually in a European capital, and is carried back to Norcia as a way to underline the common Christian roots of Europe.

Pope Benedict said this year the torch was lit in Moscow with a representative of Russian Orthodox Patriarch Alexy II meeting with the delegation. Before coming to Rome, the torchbearers stopped in Markt am Inn, Germany, "where I was born," said the pope.

"May this striking initiative foster an ever greater dedication to paying witness to Christian values in Europe," he said.

as Granger called them, "incantations") are acceptable is wrong. The blurring of these distinctions is one of my many concerns about Harry Potter.

In most children's fantasy books, there are clear distinctions of good guys and bad guys. In the Harry Potter books, the distinctions become blurred, with good wizards and bad wizards, good magic and bad magic. "Good guy" Harry lies, blackmails, breaks rules, ridicules others and takes revenge on other students.

The books refer to urination, excrement, "private parts" and students going off in pairs "into the bushes." And one book includes a possible allusion to abortion and fetal tissue research — plants, which look like babies, are to be chopped up to make medicines. These plants scream when uprooted for transplanting.

Catholic children don't need these books.

Rushing to judgment

Being Christian means not jumping to conclusions

These days, articles abound on every book Pope Benedict XVI ever wrote, decrees he issued and actions he has taken. The pope isn't the only person scrutinized in this manner. Every public figure is under the same microscope.

This can become exasperating, especially when nonstop media coverage of an individual starts up and particularly when the coverage lacks any show of respect for the person under scrutiny. But can it be stopped?

If it did halt, an awfully lot of people would be out of a job. So much these days seems to revolve around figuring out people. Just look at the talk shows, newspapers and magazines that thrive on dissecting and passing judgment on people's lives.

But how do we reconcile all of this with Christ's admonition that we not judge others? Christ zeroed-in on judgment, but our culture thrives on it.

The word "judgment" means "pointing one in the right direction." Some years ago I learned the meaning of this word the hard way when cycling through Europe with a college student.

At one point I asked for directions to Freiburg, Germany. But after receiv-

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE
HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

ing the directions, I hesitated to follow them because they were given in German, which I didn't understand well. The college student, who was in a hurry, urged me to go in the direction pointed out to us.

In our haste, we ended up on the autobahn and were stopped by the German police. Without any discussion we were given tickets and then accompanied to the road to Freiburg we'd been looking for.

Christ's admonition on not judging others reminds us to be patient in reading the character of another lest we go down the path of misunderstanding and end up slandering the person. Most honest people try to gather as much information as possible before judging another.

But no matter how much information is gathered, there are always gaps in it.

To know all sides of another person demands a very close relationship. So being Christian means not rushing to conclusions about others and what they are like — not rushing to conclusions that lead in the wrong direction, that is. It implies being well disposed toward another, which comes down to practicing kindness and love.

Our postmodern age conditions us to scrutinize the lives of others. This "dissecting" of others will continue to intensify because we are curious and inquisitive by nature, and because we now have greater means of doing this.

But we need to guard against losing sight of the sacredness of judgment. Our salvation is contingent on the good or bad judgments we make. A nation's security and well-being depend upon good judgments, and our daily lives are guided by them.

Perhaps this business of making judgments, especially about others, won't cease. But judgments that are hurried, biased, based on insufficient evidence and that border on disrespect aren't the Christian way.

We should regard the power contained in our judgments with awe.

For the Journey

EFFIE

"As a deer longs for running streams, so I yearn for you, my God" (Ps. 42).

On a lazy summer morning, I woke to the sound of my dog bolting down the deck stairs. Sunny is a golden retriever, and when she rouses from her catatonic, dead-dog-on-the-deck state to one of high alert, she's noisy.

I peered out the window. Sunny was staring at something back by the wood pile. Sunny remained very still, with the same look of concentration she has when she discovers a spider making its slow way across the carpet weave.

After I persuaded Sunny to come back to the deck, something scurried into the bushes. When I went to inspect, I found nothing.

Later, I glanced out and saw a whole family of whatever — goslings? ducklings? chicks? — rooting around in the middle of my yard. They were fluffy little fellows, and I watched with fascination as they searched the grass for an insect snack. Soon the five of them scurried off into the tall raspberry patch.

Before long the little whatever appeared in the lawn. Another bird, apparently their mother, stood on the other side of the chain-link fence.

Soon Momma issued a command, and each little whatever climbed through the links and marched in single file behind her.

I was charmed by this new family in the neighborhood. I called my friend Mary Bethe to find out what they were. A volunteer at a bird treatment facility and a knowledgeable ornithologist, she guessed they were one of the numerous kinds of duck that frequent our region.

Mary Bethe said waterfowl, even shorebirds, often nest on dry land and then make their way to deeper water.

But they were heading the wrong way when they visited my neighbor's yard.

Yes, Mary Bethe said, but eventually something leads them to the water.

So my visitors weren't new neighbors after all, but pilgrims on a journey.

"Deep is calling to deep by the roar of your cataracts," says the psalmist.

Salmon return to their streams to die, geese arrive and depart on cue, a momma duckling heads to the waters beyond a distant bluff.

Our psalmist understood that as the deer yearns for water, something in us yearns for the God who draws all things to himself.

Did Jesus shed his blood for 'many' or for 'all'?

Q. According to all the Gospel stories of the Last Supper, Jesus says his blood will be shed for "many" for the forgiveness of sins. Why then does the priest at Mass say for "all"? This seems to be misquoting the Gospel. Why the change? (Wisconsin)

A. Only two Gospels, in fact, use the word you quote. Luke does not, nor does Paul in his reference to the Last Supper (1 Cor 11:23-25). John, of course, does not include the institution of the Eucharist in his account of that night before the crucifixion.

You are correct about the seeming change in translation. The present Latin text of the Mass says "pro multis," which means literally for many, but is translated in English as "for all." That this translation is correct, however, is clear from the original languages involved.

In the Bible we find many so-called "Semitisms," written perhaps in Greek, but based on previous texts handed down in a Semitic language, in this case Aramaic or Hebrew.

Thus, the Greek text of Mark and Matthew, in these verses from the Last Supper, do use the word

"pollon," "many." The significant point is, however, that Hebrew and Aramaic have no equivalent word for "all." Hebrew "rabbim" means "many," but also has the meaning of "all" — "the many who form the whole."

Numerous examples appear elsewhere in both the Old and New Testaments. Matthew 20:28 says Jesus gave his life for the ransom "of many." The meaning is clear: He gave it for all humanity, not just some.

The Catholic New American Bible explains this verse in these words. "Many does not mean some are excluded, but is a Semitism designating the collectivity who benefit from the service of the one, and is equivalent to all."

This inclusive meaning of "many" was well understood by early Christians. John's Gospel, for example, while it devotes five chapters to events at the Last Supper, makes no reference to the institution of the Eucharist. John's main eucharistic texts are in Chapter 6, where Jesus "foretells" that he will give his disciples his flesh to eat and his blood to drink.

In the climactic phrase, Jesus declares that the bread he will give is his flesh "for the life of the world" (Jn 6:51).

That same universal meaning of the eucharistic words is preserved, by the way, in the Mass texts of Spanish ("por todos"), French ("pour le multitude"), Italian ("per tutti") and other languages.

Our English words at Mass are, therefore, the most accurate translation of this important passage that biblical scholarship can give us.

SUPREME CATHOLICS Though few in number, Catholics have lengthy history on high court

WASHINGTON — If Judge John G. Roberts is confirmed for a seat on the Supreme Court, he will become one of the historically small number of Catholic justices — the first of whom joined the court as its chief justice in 1836, more than 50 years after the court was established.

Roberts, a federal appeals judge for the District of Columbia, was nominated July 19 to fill the vacancy created by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's retirement. Rob-

BETHEL — Under the trees, out of the hot sun, the breeze is cool. It's early evening July 17. On this day, when the Gospel reading tells of a farmer sowing his fields (Matthew 13:24-43), people are setting up for Mass in a farmworker camp.

The altar cloth covering the folding table is a serape in bright red, yellow, blue, pink and green stripes.

Nearby a shaggy white dog in a pen jumps about and watches as someone places a plastic container of white Queen Anne's lace flowers on the ground in front of the altar.

DETAILING THE BIBLE

Muralist Marianne Savage adds detail to an image from the Book of Exodus in the parish center corridor at St. John Nepomucene Church in Bohemia, N.Y. Savage, the parish secretary, is painting a mural depicting scenes from the Bible along the upper section of the corridor walls, which total 250 feet in length. She began the art project in July 2004 and expects to apply the finishing touches in September 2006.

Muralist brings Bible stories to life on walls of parish center

BOHEMIA, N.Y. (CNS) — The main corridor in the parish center of St. John Nepomucene Church in Bohemia will never be confused with the Sistine Chapel, but an ambitious art project is creating a buzz among parishioners and others who come to the one-story brick building.

"It's astonishing," Father James Wood, pastor, said of a multicolored mural depicting Bible stories that is being created on the upper portion of the corridor walls, which are 250 feet in length.

"People who see it are touched by it," he said. "They bring their friends to take a look at it."

The masterpiece-in-the-making is the work of parish secretary Marianne Savage, who applied the first stroke of acrylic paint to her cement canvas in July 2004. Savage, who expects to put the finishing touches on the project in September 2006, is approaching the midway point and hopes to have the Old Testament scenes completed by late summer.

A Genesis-inspired image depicting the beginning of the universe is the first 27-inch-high panel. From there, the vivid Scripture timeline wraps around a corner and seamlessly moves down the building that houses classrooms for religious education and meeting space for a variety of parish ministries.

While some might find such a project daunting, Savage finds peace and enjoyment in it.

During a typical week, Savage spends Monday through Thursday working in the parish office. On Friday she grabs her paintbrushes and acrylic paints and heads for the hallway, where she climbs a six-foot aluminum ladder to begin painting. She works on the mural from about 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

"I visualize the scenes in my head before I sketch them out," said Savage, who gets her ideas from reading the Bible, scanning faith-themed children's books and reviewing clips from Cecil B. DeMille's 1956 film classic, "The Ten Commandments."

The goal of her mural project, Savage said, goes beyond brightening up the drab walls of a hallway. She wants her artwork to stir interest in the Word of God.

"I'm hoping (the mural) will be a learning tool, that it will encourage children and adults to open the Bible," Savage said. "If they're intrigued by what they see, chances are they will look it up and read more about it. It's my way of introducing God to other people through the gift he gave me. It's my way of 'giving back' that gift."

Late pope confers title of knighthood on rabbi

PITTSBURGH (CNS) — In an honor rarely conferred on people of other faiths, Pittsburgh Bishop Donald W. Wuerl invested Rabbi Walter Jacob, rabbi emeritus of Rodef Shalom Congregation, into the Order of St. Gregory the Great.

The knighthood was granted through the late Pope John Paul II.

The ceremony in mid-June formed part of a daylong tribute to Rabbi Jacob celebrating his 50 years of service to Rodef Shalom in Pittsburgh's Oakland neighborhood and his 75th birthday.

Rabbi Jacob has long been a leader in Reform Judaism, which stresses the use of the vernacular in religious services and encourages social interaction and interfaith efforts. He is also former president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis and has received honorary degrees for his contributions.

The papal honor, Bishop Wuerl said, "is an acknowledgment by the church of the personal character and honorable reputation, together with the generous use of personal talents and gifts for the good of the church, the faith and the good of the wider community of all of God's children."

"While the Jewish community is recognizing Rabbi Walter Jacob for his half-century of service, we want to salute him for the collaboration that he has fostered, and particularly to recognize the tradition of dialogue he supports and sustains out of which deeper respect and understanding have developed between the Jewish and Catholic communities," the bishop said.

In honor of his work, Rabbi Jacob was named a grand commander of the Order of the Republic of Germany, and Austria has issued a postage stamp in his honor.

Pre-Vatican II Latin Mass to be celebrated during World Youth Day

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Apparently for the first time in the history of World Youth Day, young Catholics dedicated to the pre-Vatican II Latin Mass and devotions will have Vatican-approved opportunities to pray with the old liturgies.

Organizers of the “Juventutem” pilgrimage said they expect at least 2,000 young people from 20 countries to join their World Youth Day activities Aug. 10-15 in and around Dusseldorf, Germany, before moving to Cologne for the international gathering with Pope Benedict XVI.

The movement brings together youth groups from a variety of parishes and organizations operating under the terms of “Ecclesia Dei,” Pope John Paul II’s 1988 norms for maintaining union with the Catholic Church while using the Tridentine Mass.

“We have made it explicit to WYD authorities that we expect our liturgical identity to be recognized and indeed welcomed,” said a statement from the group.

Officials at the Pontifical Council for the Laity confirmed July 22 that the World Youth Day celebration is open to all Catholic youths; those operating under the special terms of “Ecclesia Dei” are not excluded.

A Juventutem press release said Cardinals E. Francis George of Chicago and Francis Arinze, prefect of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, will address the group in Cologne and will lead the pilgrimage members in prayer.

Australian Cardinal George Pell of Sydney will celebrate vespers and Benediction with them, it said.

Pius X Church will perform an Outdoor Concert to celebrate the church’s 25th anniversary since breaking ground on the current church building. The concert will begin at 5 p.m. on the soccer field near the church, 2210 N. Elm St. Please feel free to bring a blanket and picnic dinner. Divorced Catholics must be welcomed in parishes, pope tells priests

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Divorced and civilly remarried Catholics who suffer because they cannot receive Communion must be welcomed in parishes as Catholics who witness to the importance of the Eucharist, Pope Benedict XVI said.

At the same time, he said, if a priest, acting out of compassion for their suffering, gives them the Eucharist, he risks undermining the dignity and indissolubility of the sacrament of marriage.

“We all know that this is a particularly painful situation,” the pope said July 25 during a meeting with about 140 priests, religious and deacons from the Valle d’Aosta region where he was vacationing.

The pope added that he knew the issue could get complicated and said, “Given these people’s situation of suffering it must be studied.”

Asked about ministry to divorced and civilly remarried Catholics, Pope Benedict told the priests, “None of us has a ready-made solution, because each person’s situation is different.”

“I would say that a particularly painful situation is that of those who were married in the church, but were not really believers and did so just for tradition, and then finding themselves in a new, nonvalid marriage, convert, find the faith and feel excluded from the sacrament,” he said.

Pope Benedict said that when he was prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith he asked several bishops’ conferences and experts to study the problem, which in effect was “a sacrament celebrated without faith.”

Pope Benedict said that Catholics must keep two things in mind: First, that even if divorced and civilly remarried Catholics cannot receive the Eucharist, they are part of the church and are loved by Christ; and second, that suffering out of love for God and for the church is “a noble suffering.”

While participating at Mass without receiving Communion is not optimal, he said, “it is not nothing; it is involvement in the mystery of the cross and resurrection of Christ.”

“Given that it is the sacrament of the passion of Christ, the suffering Christ embraces these persons in a special way and communicates with them in a different way,” he said. “They can feel embraced by the crucified Lord who falls to the earth and dies and suffers for them and with them.”

Priests and parishioners must share the suffering of those excluded from the Eucharist, he said, but they cannot act in a way that casts doubt on the unbreakable bond of sacramental marriage.

“In the end, faith is simple and rich: We believe that God exists, that God is important. But what God? A God with a face, a human face. A God who reconciles, who defeats hatred and gives the strength of peace which no one else can give,” he said.

God's helpers

Three from diocese to serve as overseas missionaries

CHARLOTTE — Three members of the Diocese of Charlotte are taking their first steps toward serving as lay missionaries.

Bill Eppler, a parishioner of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, and Aaron and Tara Condon, parishioners of St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte, are moving to Los Angeles, Calif., in August for a four-month formation program with the Lay Mission-Helpers Association.

The program consists of classes in Scripture, mission theology, spirituality, communication and cross-cultural issues. Once it is completed, the three will be commissioned in December and receive their mission rings, engraved with

"For we are God's helpers."

They then will be assigned to serve for three years in overseas missions beginning January 2006.

The Lay Mission-Helpers Association was founded in 1955 by Msgr. Anthony Brouwers. Since its founding, the association has sent more than 700 men, women and families to serve in 36 countries in Africa, Latin America, Asia and the Pacific.

Franciscan Sister Jean Linder catches up with Msgr. Mauricio W. West, chancellor and vicar general, at the Pastoral Center in Charlotte July 20. She came to Charlotte to visit Franciscan Sisters Joan Ann Gilsdorf, community member of the Franciscan discernment house, and Andrea Inkrott, director of diocesan Hispanic ministry.

During her 23 years in North Carolina, Sister Linder served as the diocesan vicar for women religious, executive secretary for the vocations office and worked in the diocesan planning office for seven years. She also worked at the Living Waters Retreat Center in Maggie Valley for a number of years.

While visiting her former coworkers in the Pastoral Center, Sister Linder commented that the atmosphere among the employees "was and continues to be special."

In 2000, she moved to the Franciscan motherhouse in Tiffin, Ohio, where she works as the librarian.

Catholics and the Supreme Court

erts graduated from Catholic elementary and high schools in Indiana, and he and his family are members of the Church of the Little Flower in Bethesda, Md.

Should he be confirmed to the court, Roberts will be the 10th Catholic justice in history and the fourth among current members, the most ever at one time.

Paving the way

The first Catholic justice went straight to the top.

After serving as attorney general and acting secretary of war, Roger B. Taney was rejected by the Senate the first time President Andrew Jackson nominated him to become an associate justice of the Supreme Court in 1835. That apparently was due more to the Senate's ongoing political battles with Jackson, though, rather than to Taney or his religion, according to encyclopedia references.

Taney was confirmed as chief justice when that position opened up a year later, and he served until 1864.

The son of a Maryland plantation owner and slaveholder, Taney is perhaps best known for writing the majority opinion in Dred Scott vs. Sandford in 1857. It said Negroes could not become citizens and that Congress had no authority to prohibit the territories from allowing slavery.

The ruling became hotly divisive and was a factor in creating the political climate that led to the Civil War.

The second Catholic named to the court was not seated for another 30 years after Taney's death, but he also became chief justice, the only other Catholic to have held that post.

Edward Douglas White, a U.S. senator from a wealthy and politically powerful Louisiana family, was appointed to the court in 1894 by President Grover

U.S. President George W. Bush listens to remarks after announcing his nomination of federal appeals court Judge John G. Roberts to the Supreme Court in a televised address to the nation from the White House July 19.

Cleveland after his two previous nominations were rejected by the Senate. White had attended Mount St. Mary's College in Emmitsburg, Md., and Georgetown University and served in the Confederate Army before entering politics.

The Encyclopedia of the Supreme Court notes that White's nomination sailed through, apparently at least in part because he was a member of the Senate.

In 1910, White was elevated to the seat of chief justice, which he held until his death in 1921.

White was joined on the court in 1898 by Joseph McKenna, the son of Irish immigrants, who was U.S. attorney general at the time of his nomination.

McKenna had also served as a judge of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and as a member of Congress. Although anti-Catholic sentiment of the 1880s was a factor in McKenna's defeat in his first two runs for Congress, such attitudes were apparently not in play in his confirmation to the court.

Catholics in court

Six other Catholics have served on the court since then. Since 1894, the longest period when there was no Catholic was the seven-year gap between the 1949 death of Frank Murphy and William J. Brennan's confirmation in 1956.

Some sources list Sherman Minton, who took one of two seats vacated by deaths in 1949, as being Catholic. That would mean the longest gap without a Catholic on the court since the 19th century was the 12-week period between the November 1939 death of Pierce Butler, the fourth Catholic on the court, and the swearing-in of Frank Murphy in February 1940.

However, Minton didn't become a Catholic until 1961, after he retired from the court in 1956.

Minton's seat in turn went to Brennan, who would be the sole Catholic on the court for 30 years. He was joined by Antonin Scalia in 1986, and two years later by Anthony Kennedy.

At the time Justice Clarence Thomas was confirmed in 1991, he said that despite having been raised Catholic and having spent several years in a seminary, he was not a practicing Catholic. In 1996 he told fellow alumni at Holy Cross College in Worcester, Mass., that he had recently returned to the church, making him the third Catholic among current justices.

The longest-serving Catholic on the court has been Brennan, who retired in poor health in 1990 after 33 years in the post. The shortest term for one of the Catholics was Murphy's nine years.

New development directors to assist diocese, schools

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — The diocesan Office of Development has two new employees serving the Diocese of Charlotte. Judy Smith joined the staff as the director of planned giving and Susan Cameron is the director of Catholic schools development.

A lasting legacy

Smith sees her role as director of planned giving as expanding on the work that had been done by her predecessors and recognizing donors who have already committed planned gifts to benefit diocesan entities.

"I am looking forward to the opportunity to work with the people of the Diocese of Charlotte to assist them in their philanthropic efforts as they plan for gifts from their estate," Smith said.

Smith has worked in the area of development for close to 20 years, primarily at Habitat for Humanity and the performing arts. Working for the Diocese of Charlotte "presents a wonderful opportunity to help people provide for the future of the church," she said.

Smith said she looks forward to meeting people face-to-face while assisting them with their planned giving to benefit the diocese, either through endowments or other estate gifts.

"When you set up an endowment, your gift lives on," Smith said. "It is invested and accrues interest. There is money to be spent from income earned on the principle year after year."

Building up our schools

As director of Catholic schools development, Cameron is responsible for fundraising for the 18 diocesan Catholic schools.

Tuition alone cannot provide enough money to finance all the programs the Catholic schools offer, Cameron said.

"Collectively, gifts can make up the difference to provide programs students would go without otherwise," she said. Fundraising also helps prevent large tuition increases.

Among the programs funded are tuition assistance, technology enhancements, academic programs and teacher professional development.

Cameron, a graduate of Belmont Abbey College, worked in development for seven years at Elon University and Queens University.

"I strongly believe in Catholic education and the unique experience it can give students," Cameron said.

"Judy and Susan are great additions to the development team," said Jim Kelley, director of development. "Between them, they have almost 30 years of development experience that will benefit our parishioners, churches, schools and agencies."

AWARDING SERVICE

Development director recognized with own community-builder award

CHARLOTTE — Jim Kelley, director of development for the Diocese of Charlotte, was recently awarded the inaugural Community Builder Award from United Way.

The award, which will be known as the Jim Kelley Award, honors individuals who have given countless hours of service to United Way and the community. It was presented at an event recognizing volunteers in Charlotte June 30.

"I have had many blessings in my life. I am very grateful for those blessings, and I have a responsibility to give back in gratitude for what God has given to me," said Kelley. "That is why I spend time in service to the Charlotte community."

Kelley has volunteered with United Way of Central Carolinas for 24 years, serving primarily with the Citizen Review Process, in which more than 300 volunteers annually study the community's most pressing health and human service needs and allocate resources to more than 200 programs within United Way member agencies.

Kelley serves as chair of United Way's Community Building Council, is a member of the Community Investment Committee, has led the diocese's United Way campaign, has served as a United Way speaker and been involved in United Way's "Leading The Way" training program.

Over the years, he has maintained a special passion for supporting the area's homeless population.

"Jim Kelley is a shining example of what we think of when we mention 'Community Builder,'" said Gloria Pace King, United Way president. "We are so grateful for all he's done for this community."

As director of development, Kelley manages the diocesan development office, which organizes and operates the Diocesan Support Appeal, assists parishes with stewardship efforts and capital campaigns, and assists Catholic schools, Catholic Social Services and campus ministries with development efforts.

He is the author of several books on church stewardship, has served as a leader within the International Catholic Stewardship Council.

United Way of Central Carolinas, Inc. partners with agencies, volunteers, donors and local businesses to identify needs and invest community resources in programs that create lasting solutions for our community's most pressing issues.

Synod working document says Eucharist must be celebrated with dignity

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Because Christ is truly present in the Eucharist, the sacrament must be treated with dignity, shared only by those who hold the same faith and lead to efforts to spread the Gospel, said the working document for the Synod of Bishops.

The document, which will form discussions at the Oct. 2-23 world Synod of Bishops, was released July 7 at the Vatican. The theme of the synod is "The Eucharist: Source and Summit of the Life and Mission of the Church."

Its observations about how Catholics around the world see and celebrate the sacrament were drawn from contributions by 113 bishops' conferences, 11 synods of bishops of Eastern Catholic churches, 25 Vatican congregations and councils, and the Union of Superiors General.

In the introduction, Archbishop Nikola Eterovic, general secretary of the Synod of Bishops, said the working document "principally concentrated on the positive aspects of the celebration of the Eucharist that bring the faithful together and make them a community, despite their differences in race, language, nation and culture."

"Mention is also made of various insufficiencies and oversights in the celebration of the Eucharist which, thanks be to God, are rather contained," he wrote.

The document repeatedly called for balance in how the Eucharist is celebrated: times for song, verbal prayer and quiet; adherence to liturgical norms that are the same all over the world and the use of local cultural elements such as songs and gestures; and prayers and readings in the local language and in Latin, especially for international celebrations.

While experience varies around the world, the key problem identified was a decreasing awareness among Catholics of the obligation and benefits of attending the liturgy and receiving the Eucharist every Sunday.

In addition, it said, too many people seem to be unaware of the importance of receiving the Eucharist only when they are in a "state of grace," having received the sacrament of penance after having committed a serious sin.

"Belonging to the church is the basis for admittance to the sacraments," it said. "No one can approach the Eucharist without having first received baptism; no one can return to the Eucharist without first having received the sacrament of penance."

The document also reaffirmed church teaching that Catholics who are divorced and civilly remarried may not receive the Eucharist in most cases, but are encouraged to continue attending Mass and may even approach the priest at Communion to receive a blessing in parishes where that is the practice.

The document explained the Catholic Church recognizes the validity of the Eucharist in the Orthodox churches and the possibility of Catholics and Orthodox receiving Communion at each other's liturgies where circumstances permit.

However, it repeated church rules that in most cases eucharistic sharing with Anglicans and Protestants is not possible; Catholics and other Christians must pray and work for the full unity that would allow them to gather around the same altar and profess their shared faith by receiving the Eucharist together, it said.

The document said bishops around the world felt the liturgical reforms of the Second Vatican Council were overwhelmingly positive, although some misunderstandings and abuses have occurred in how the council's teachings were interpreted and put into practice.

Among the concerns, it listed the loss of a sense of the sacred and a diminished understanding of the Eucharist as Christ's sacrifice on the altar, with the result that many people think the community praying together makes Jesus present in the Eucharist rather than acknowledging that in the sacrament Jesus gives himself under the forms of bread and wine.

The bishops also had special praise for the lay people in their dioceses and parishes who teach children about the Eucharist, who fulfill various functions during the liturgy and who lead prayer services when a priest is not available to celebrate Mass.

The synod's working document said Catholics must understand that a validly ordained priest is absolutely necessary for the valid celebration of Mass.

The working document dedicated one of its four sections to "the Eucharist in the mission of the church," particularly emphasizing that by receiving Communion and the grace of Christ it brings Catholics must live the faith once they leave Mass.

True faith in the Eucharist implies living a morally upright life, acting and even voting in accordance with church teaching, spreading the Gospel, promoting peace and working for justice, it said.

"In a culture of death, the Eucharist is the culture of life," it said. "In an atmosphere of individual and societal selfishness, the Eucharist reaffirms total self-giving. Where there is hate and terrorism, the Eucharist places love."

This is my body

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 21

In our ongoing catechesis on the Mass, we have examined the first two parts of the Eucharistic Prayer: the Preface and the Sanctus.

As soon as the Sanctus comes to completion, the faithful assume the posture of kneeling in humble adoration, awaiting the King of Kings, before whom "every knee must bend" (GIRM No. 43; cf. Phil 2:10). Then, with the simplicity of one lone voice breaking the silence of the upper room at the Last Supper, Jesus Christ, the high priest, utters the sacred words through his priest, the words that he gave to his church on Holy Thursday.

Through this divine mystery, bread and wine actually change into the body and blood, soul and divinity of Jesus Christ, leaving behind only the appearances of bread and wine.

We could admittedly spend months studying and contemplating this divine mystery that lies at the heart of the Mass. But for the sake of brevity and clarity, let us focus our attention only on what pertains to this mystery of faith: the words and actions that effect this sacrament.

To investigate how this is accomplished, we must now turn to the next two parts of the Eucharistic Prayer: the epiclesis and the institution narrative and consecration.

The word epiclesis is a Greek composite of two words: kaleo, meaning "to call, summon, or invite"; and when preceded by the preposition epi, the word means "to call down." During this third part of the Eucharistic Prayer, the priest "calls down" the Holy Spirit and signifies this activity by placing his hands over the gifts that are to be sacrificed. Sanctuary bells may be rung at this time to call our attention.

The epiclesis has at least two main spiritual meanings: 1) in the Old Testament temple sacrifices, the priest would place his hands on the lamb of sacrifice, dedicating it for sacrifice (Cf. Lev. 16:21-22); and 2) the epiclesis recalls the mystery of the Incarnation, where the Holy Spirit descended upon and overshadowed the Blessed Virgin Mary so that the Word became flesh (Luke 1:35).

Indeed, the holy sacrifice of the Mass unites these two mysteries together as Jesus Christ becomes both priest and victim of the sacrifice and again comes to us sacramentally in the flesh. This brings us to the fourth part of the Eucharistic Prayer.

During the institution narrative and the consecration, the familiar voice of Jesus Christ is heard as the high priest of every sacrifice of the Mass. Each priest lends himself to the service of Christ, so that our Lord can once again re-present his sacrifice. It is not simply the priest who speaks, "This is my body," since it is not his body, per se, but rather it is Christ who speaks, "This is my body ... this is my blood."

These words actually effect the change from bread and wine into the body and blood, soul and divinity of Christ.

Just as Christ took bread and wine at the Last Supper, blessed it and gave it to his Apostles after he consecrated it into his body and blood, he continues to offer them for our salvation. This change from bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ is known as transubstantiation, meaning a "change in substance." The whole substance of bread and wine is changed into the substance of Christ's Body and Blood.

The appearances of bread and wine remain the same. Therefore, when we receive the holy Eucharist, we do not receive bread and wine with the body and blood of Christ (consubstantiation), nor do we receive bread and wine that merely signify the body and blood of Christ (transignification; transfinalization).

On the contrary, we do receive the body and blood of Christ, the same crucified, risen and glorified body of Christ, under the appearances of bread and wine.

Christ said, "This is my body." We have no reason to doubt him, who is incapable of deceiving us.

The consecration actually occurs in two distinct consecrations: first the body, then the blood, signifying the death of Christ, whose precious blood was separated from his body on the cross. After each consecration is a moment of adoration, a moment that prepares us for that moment of divine intimacy whereby God desires to enter divine communion with us.

We will continue with the Eucharistic Prayer next time.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

a morning of swimming and playing on the waterslides.

John and a friend noticed a 4-year-old boy struggling to keep his blond head above the water.

Reacting quickly, John pulled the boy out of the water to the side of the pool. A lifeguard then appeared, taking over for John and bringing the shocked child to his own group.

"As Christians, we have to help each other," said John, reflecting on the event.

John is an extraordinary boy in many ways besides his early lifesaving capabilities. Just 9 years old, he is a rising sixth grader at St. Mark School in Huntersville, having skipped kindergarten.

Born in China, John and his mother moved to Kentucky when he was six months old. After several years they moved to Cornelius and soon joined St. Mark Church in nearby Huntersville.

An avid student, John's favorite school subject is history, and he loves studying the U. S. presidents — so much so he won third place in the Mecklenburg Area Academic Games League competition and 10th place in the national competition.

Already this extraordinary young man has high ambitions: He dreams of attending Princeton University.

The second highlight of his summer was a recent camping trip in New England — his first ever.

On the trip home, his group traveled through Princeton, N.J., and John got to see his — hopefully — future alma mater.

"I think (saving the boy from drowning) might help me go to Princeton," John said.

John's lifesaving experience hasn't influenced his career plans, though — he wants to study finance.

'Catholics and Cherokees'

Program explores Cherokee culture, Catholic social teaching

BY JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA — How do past events influence people today?

That's one of the questions that will be answered in "Catholics and Cherokees III: Continuing the Dialogue — Healing the Soul Wound."

The program, which is free and open to the public, was presented July 12 at St. William Church in Murphy and will be repeated Aug. 25 at the Jackson County Justice Center in Sylva.

Patty Grant Long, a therapist and member of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, will discuss historical trauma and intergenerational grief and its impact on the lives of Cherokee people today, as well as Cherokee culture and spirituality.

Mary Herr, faith formation consultant and Native American multicultural worker for the Diocese of Charlotte's Smoky Mountain Vicariate, will facilitate discussion of relevant Catholic social teaching and identify ways to apply it to current issues.

Relevant Catholic social teaching includes the dignity of the human person; call to family, community and participation; rights and responsibilities of the human person; the preferential option for the poor and vulnerable; solidarity; and care of God's creation.

"I really enjoyed it," said St. Margaret of Scotland parishioner Mary Witte, one of about 50 who attended the session held there in June.

"It was very interesting and educational. [Long's] personal experiences made it so vivid. It was eye-opening to me," she said.

Among the aspects of historical trauma and intergenerational grief that Long discussed were how Native American children were forced into boarding schools run by government agencies and, in some cases, religious organizations and the effect this had on those children and their children years later.

For example, children who were placed in boarding schools, often for years, sometimes faced harsh treatment, including being punished for practicing their religion or speaking their own languages. Because they were not parented well by those in the schools, they did not learn how to parent their children.

"I know the whole experience of the Cherokees was awful, but I had no idea it was like that," Witte said. "Everyone should go to (this presentation)."

"Catholics and Cherokees" is sponsored by the Smoky Mountain Vicariate with a grant from the Christian Brothers' FSC Foundation.

Contact Correspondent Joanita M. Nellenbach by calling (828) 627-9209 or e-mail jnell@dnet.net.

WANT TO GO?

The program, scheduled 6:30-9 p.m., is free and open to the public, but registration is requested. To register for the program in Sylva (Aug. 25), contact Father Shawn O'Neal at St. Joseph Church in Bryson City at (828) 488-6766 or Mary Herr at (828) 497-9498.

RAINing education

Diocese, RAIN bring awareness to Hispanic youths

LEXINGTON — In an effort to educate young Hispanics about the myths and facts of HIV and AIDS, the diocesan Hispanic Youth and Young Adult Ministry Office invited the Regional AIDS Interfaith Network (RAIN) to participate in a recent E.V.A.E. seminar.

The E.V.A.E. (El Verdadero Amor Espera, or "True Love Waits") seminar was held at Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Lexington July 9. It is another in a series of seminars by the Hispanic Youth and Young Adult Ministry Office being held in parishes around the Diocese of Charlotte.

"It is very important for the Hispanic Ministry that the people of Hispanic traditions and customs are engaged in overall growth, especially in the area of human sexuality," said Ricardo Veloz, director of Hispanic Youth and Young Adult Ministry, during a seminar at Holy Family Church in Clemmons May 27-29.

North Carolina's Hispanic population is growing rapidly, and many Hispanics are unaware of how HIV is transmitted, according to RAIN educators.

"Through our pastoral care ministry, we have seen an increase in the number of Hispanics infected with HIV in the public clinics in areas of Charlotte and its surroundings," said Rev. Amy Brooks, a Unitarian Universalist minister and RAIN's director of prevention education.

RAIN's Hispanic team, comprised mostly of parishioners from Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte, utilized a bingo game format to teach HIV- and AIDS-related information and statistics to the Hispanic youths in Lexington.

Afterward, Brother Lombardo D'Auria, a Capuchin postulate serving at Our Lady of Consolation Church and RAIN's Hispanic outreach coordinator, emphasized the importance of abstinence in preventing the spread of HIV and AIDS.

Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott, director of diocesan Hispanic Ministry, and Haydee Garcia, Hispanic ministry coordinator for the Charlotte Vicariate, help the RAIN Hispanic team provide bingo-format seminars in different parishes with Hispanic congregations, including Our Lady of Guadalupe, St. Vincent de Paul and St. Ann churches in Charlotte; and St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

In order to educate the public and encourage faith communities to assist persons living with HIV/AIDS, RAIN has coordinated programs in 100 congregations from 20 denominations in 13 counties in North and South Carolina since 1992.

RAIN delivers its services through faith- and community-based CareTeams who provide practical, emotional and spiritual support to persons living with HIV/AIDS and their families.

Our Lady of Consolation Church's RAIN Care Team has been in existence for eight years.

"In my personal experience, it has taught me to be patient, nonjudgmental, increased my Catholic faith and helped those brothers and sisters (who are) less fortunate," said Denise Shropshire, a CareTeam member at Our Lady of Consolation Church.

Veloz has invited the RAIN Hispanic team to participate in the next E.V.A.E. retreat at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville Aug. 12-14.

PICNICKING FOR POVERTY

COURTESY PHOTO

The Men's Club and Ladies' Guild of St. William Church in Murphy hosted a "Swing into Summer for Somotillo" picnic July 10. About 125 parishioners enjoyed a barbecue, music, games and a raffle.

All profits from the picnic will be used to support two schools in the church's sister community of Somotillo, Nicaragua. Somotillo is a community of more than 20,000 people, most of whom live in poverty.

Many of St. William Church's parishioners and organizations provide scholarships for individual students in Somotillo. St. Ignatius School educates elementary-age street children who cannot afford to attend the city's public school. The other school is an agricultural school to teach older children skills for raising crops and animals.

For the past three years, St. William parishioners have traveled to Somotillo semiannually to meet the students and teachers and to assess their progress as well as their needs.

Outdoor Mass brings Eucharist to migrants

Dueweke unpacks the box Erlinda Rogers has brought from Immaculate Conception Church in Canton. There are two silver chalices, a paten, unconsecrated hosts, a bottle of sacramental wine, an alb, green stole and a chasuble.

The Mass and the party afterward will welcome migrant farmworkers, who come each year to harvest crops in this rural area near Canton. It's also a Mass of thanksgiving for blessings received.

This is an appropriate place for a Mass, Father Dueweke will note in his homily: Bethel means "house of God."

Surrounded by mountains, Bethel "looks like Peru," says Father Dueweke, who spent 15 years there as a missionary. Now, through the sponsorship of the Augustinian Province of St. Thomas of Villanova and grants from the Catholic Extension Service and the Diocese of Charlotte, Father Dueweke will spend the next two years ministering to Hispanic people in the Smoky Mountain Vicariate.

As Father Dueweke vests for Mass, people fill the brown metal chairs placed in rows before the altar. More gather under an equipment shelter across the dirt driveway that leads to the workers' singlewide trailers. Some 120 people, mostly Hispanic, are there to welcome the 30 migrants.

A Hispanic choir of voices and guitars opens with an upbeat hymn. People are still arriving with food for the post-Mass meal.

In his homily, Father Dueweke speaks of his ministry and his aim to establish lay leadership in the vicariate's various Hispanic communities.

"We want to live our faith, embrace the mission to live as brothers and sisters," he says.

Weaving the Gospel's agricultural imagery into the congregation's experience, Father Dueweke notes that, "People connected to the soil are connected to God. People so closely connected to God are our teachers. We need to cultivate the ground of our hearts with the pick and shovel of the Gospel, watered with the grace of baptism."

Children and adults bring up the gifts: the bread and wine, four baskets containing the offertory collection, and two baskets of large cucumbers, just picked in the nearby fields.

During Communion, worshipers come forward to receive the precious body and blood of Jesus and the blessing of the priest for their children.

With a final hymn, it is time to set up the tables for a feast of tamales, chicken, pork ribs, salads, tinga (a fiery concoction that includes chicken and is served on flat, crispy tortillas), watermelon and pastries.

As he gives the final blessing, Father Dueweke tells the parents never to lose the custom of blessing their children with the sign of the cross on their foreheads at bedtime and whenever they leave home.

"Our community is walking with Jesus," said Xavier Ramirez. "The farmworkers are important, and they need to realize that the church treasures and appreciates them."

Having a priest come to the camp to celebrate Mass tells them that, he says.

In his homily, Father Dueweke told the people that Hispanics are in America to renew the Catholic Church.

"I believe that that's part of God's plan," he said later. "Their hospitality, their value of celebrating, of caring for others — these challenge our individualistic culture."

Homemade foods that the people spent hours preparing are spread out on the tables. Father Dueweke moves among the crowd, chatting with everyone, kidding around with the children.

"Just being together outside, a celebration of community," he says. "That's what it's all about."

LAUGHTER FOR THE SOUL

Retired deacon's new joke book provides humor for clergy

BY SHARON ROULIER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

CHESHIRE, Conn. — "Did you wake up grumpy this morning?" "No, I just let him sleep in."

This is a favorite joke of a deacon who has compiled a book of jokes specifically designed for use by the clergy.

But the word "grumpy" is definitely a little-used word in Deacon Don Lowe's vocabulary, unless it is included in the context of a joke.

At age 91, the retired deacon from St. Bridget Church in Cheshire, Conn., in the Hartford Archdiocese, said a sense of humor has certainly contributed to his longevity.

The deacon said he was recovering from triple-bypass surgery when he decided to go through a boxful of jokes he collected over the years. At age 89, he bought a computer and used it to turn the collection into a book: "Deacon Jokes That a Pastor Can Tell — Possibly Even a Bishop."

Deacon Lowe wrote the book to give members of the clergy clean jokes and one-liners designed to raise spirits and open doors. All profits from the sales benefit the Hartford Archdiocese's diaconate program.

"We're coming along good," said the deacon. "It's taken two years and we have $4,000 so far. I hope to make it $5,000."

Since he was a youngster, humor has always played a role in the life of the deacon, who was born in Waterbury in 1914.

"It can help the heart. It can help ulcers. It can help blood pressure.

It can help pain," he said. "I know when I was in the hospital, humor really helped."

As a teen, he would go to the local theaters to watch the classic comedic antics of Laurel and Hardy, Harold Lloyd, Charlie Chaplin, the Marx Brothers, Ben Turpin, Buster Keaton and the Three Stooges.

"They were certainly some of the first dispensers of early laughter and good humor on film," writes Deacon Lowe in the introduction to his book.

The deacon suggests that using humor during a sermon is a perfect way to grab parishioners' attention.

"These people, when they come to church, they've got so many problems. Not like 90 years ago. It's a lot different," he said. "So they come into church and what they want is something to calm their stress. And if a priest or a deacon tells a story, he has their attention and then he can do whatever sermon that he can that will help them."

Deacon Lowe includes tips for becoming "a pro" at telling jokes such as:

- Keep it clean.
- Be relaxed and sensitive to Deacon Don Lowe, 91, retired deacon, laughs after sharing a punch line from his book.

your audience.

- Always smile.
- Take your time and exaggerate using body language.
- Never make any racial or sexist slurs.

— Give the punch line everything you have. Pause for anticipation and deliver it with a slightly raised voice.

Deacon Lowe met his wife, Ann, while the two were working in the big-band business. She was a singer and he played the drums.

After two years of dating, Don, who grew up Anglican, and Ann were married in the Episcopal Church. That was 64 years ago. They later joined the Catholic Church.

"We were remarried in the Catholic Church on our 25th anniversary, and Martin, our son, wanted to know if he was illegitimate all these years," quipped Deacon Lowe.

After serving as an extraordinary minister of the Eucharist for several years in his parish, Deacon Lowe was ordained to the diaconate in 1977. He retired in 1989.

"I miss it. I can't go on the altar anymore because of my knees and the possibility of falling," he said. "But I go to Mass every morning and come close to the good Lord."

For about 40 years Deacon Lowe also used his sense of humor in his mail-order bow tie business, Lowe Bow Originals.

Deacon Lowe, who has worn bow ties his whole life, says he always had a hard time finding them.

His wife, an expert seamstress, decided to make a few for her husband. Orders for the handmade originals took off when The Wall Street Journal ran a front-page story about his business in 1996.

The Lowes sold the business in 1999 and finally retired. Deacon Lowe still wears a bow tie every day.

Salvation always within our grasp

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Last summer I went on vacation with my family — including parents, siblings and all the grandchildren — to the Gulf coast of Texas for a few days of beach relaxation.

One day I was sent to gather everyone for dinner. The teenagers were out in the surf.

The noise of the waves prevented my nephews from hearing my call, but since they were standing waist deep about 50 yards away, I decided to swim out to them. About 20 yards out, the water was up to my shoulders, and soon I was in over my head, swimming for all I was worth and calling out to my nephew, who still couldn't hear me.

Several minutes of frantic paddling and shouting later I became exhausted and truly frightened. With a sandbar and visible assistance only 20 feet away, I was fighting relentless waves and my own panicked thoughts of death by drowning. Just in time my nephew turned, saw my distress and reached out an arm to drag me to the shallower water.

My relief was palpable — and I think Peter, desperately flailing about in the Sea of Galilee, must have felt the same way when the Lord came to his rescue.

Today's psalm refrain is a plea to God to "grant us your salvation," and there surely have been many theological treatises written on the meaning of that phrase. For some people, "salvation" could mean physical or mental healing, for others it could mean an assurance of eternal life, and for still others it could mean forgiveness of sin.

In Peter's particular situation as in mine, however, "salvation" was no theological idea, but an immediate intervention of God's love extended to me in a moment of extreme helplessness.

"Drowning" is a word often used to describe the very human experience of being overwhelmed by one's circumstances, whether these are of our own making or beyond our control. In such times it is not uncommon to panic. However, the Scriptures today give us hope that God's goodness and love are always within our grasp.

On-time delivery lucky for priest alone in a Belmont apartment. He became confused with the settings on his thermostat, accidentally turning on the heat instead of his air conditioner.

Deal, a UPS driver for 15 years, considers many of her regular clients to be family, including Msgr. Kovacic. That day she was nearing the end of her route and making a delivery to his apartment that required his signature.

When she knocked, he answered that he could not come to the door because he was very sick.

The door was unlocked and Deal went inside to check on him. She noticed the temperature of the apartment to be nearly 100 degrees.

Deal quickly attempted to cool down Msgr. Kovacic by washing his face with water-soaked towels from the kitchen. She wanted to call 911, but he initially refused the offer.

Deal attempted to contact other parishioners she knows from her route and from the church bulletin, but could not reach anyone. She then took him to his neighbor's apartment where the air conditioner was on. Still burning up, Msgr. Kovacic agreed to let Deal call 911.

The monsignor was transported via ambulance to Gaston Memorial Hospital in Gastonia, where he was treated and released around midnight. A doctor attending Msgr. Kovacic indicated Deal's quick response helped save his life.

While Msgr. Kovacic was being treated, parishioners from Queen of the Apostles Church and fellow Knights of Columbus from Council 11076 flooded the waiting room. Bishop Peter J. Jugis, who was attending a Catholic Social Services board meeting in Hickory, visited Msgr. Kovacic and administered the sacrament of anointing of the sick.

It was a scene reminiscent of the monsignor's 85th birthday celebration, where hundreds of parishioners and Knights gathered with him as the bishop rededicated Queen of the Apostle Church's Family Life Center as the Msgr. Anthony Kovacic Parish Center Jan. 9.

During that celebration, Carl Heil, a parishioner of Queen of the Apostles Church, noted Msgr. Kovacic's dedication to his flock.

"If he hears someone is in the hospital, sometimes he's there before the doctor," said Heil. "He's always there to help."

Although retired since 1994, Msgr. Kovacic continues to serve the Diocese of Charlotte and often travels to celebrate Mass across western North Carolina.

Editor Kevin E. Murray contributed to this story.

Tom Stocker is a parishioner of Queen of the Apostles Church in Belmont.

Discussing the Eucharist

COURTESY PHOTO BY FRANK RYDER

Thirty members of Ascension, a teen music group at St. Luke Church in Mint Hill, spent July 10-15 in the Blue Ridge Mountains at Lake Junaluska focusing on "The Eucharist: Christ Living Within Us." The retreat consisted of morning reflections, journaling and evening devotions. Father James Hawker, vicar of education and pastor of St. Luke Church, joined the teens for a roundtable discussion on church and spiritual issues, and celebrated Mass and the sacrament of reconciliation for the group. During the week, the youths had opportunities for horseback riding, rafting and swimming.

Harry Potter and the half-baked PR spell

More than sorcery at work in all the media fuss

In the days leading up to the release of the latest Harry Potter book, the news media were abuzz with stories that seemed to pit Pope Benedict XVI against Harry the apprentice wizard. But if you look closely at the incident, you will see the magic wand of public relations was stirring a cauldron of soupy public opinion.

The facts as related in some news stories are that when Pope Benedict was still Cardinal Ratzinger, he corresponded with the German author Gabriele Kuby, who'd written the book, "Harry Potter: Good or Bad." In a brief note the cardinal wrote, "It is good, that you enlighten people about Harry Potter, because those are subtle seductions, which act unnoticed and by this deeply distort Christianity in the soul, before it can grow properly."

This happened in 2003. There must have been an invisibility cloak over the information because it wasn't considered newsworthy in 2003, or 2004 for that matter. But of course in 2005, Cardinal Ratzinger became the Holy Father. A new pope coupled with the long-delayed release of the latest Potter book, "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince," and presto! A news story appears.

The Vatican probably contributed to the ensuing frenzy by refusing to make any additional comments on behalf of the pope. That allowed the news media to pursue one of their favorite angles — call it the "David and Goliath" treatment. The teenage Harry was pitted against the magisterium of the holy Catholic Church.

The timing of this particular news story tells you something about how the news media work.

Why wasn't this newsworthy in 2003 when Cardinal Ratzinger was an important figure in the Catholic Church? It is likely that this fish of a news story was floating out there in the vast sea of information that makes up the Internet. But no one was biting, most likely because no one was promoting it to news organizations.

Much of what you read in a newspaper or see on TV originated as an idea in a public relations person's mind. Press releases are written, phone calls are made and the "news" evolves into soundbites and quotes that are consumed by an audience who is very blurry about the difference between entertainment and education.

It is good for any media project, even something as popular as Harry Potter, to have controversy associated with it. No doubt there was someone associated with either the Potter phenomenon or Kuby's book who was promoting this one.

But there are a couple of things about this episode that need to be considered. First, Cardinal Ratzinger/Pope Benedict's intellect as a theologian is widely respected. His views, however brief, on the development of a young person's soul are worthy of reflection.

I've read two Harry Potter books and I found them charming and fun. But the books do glorify the dark art of sorcery. And even though Harry represents the triumph of good over evil, is it fair to ask, as the cardinal seemed to, if the ends justify the means? If you conclude that Harry's adventures at Hogwarts School are all childish fun, that's fine, too.

The other item that was only scarcely covered was what Cardinal Ratzinger did after writing to Kuby in 2003. According to the Catholic News Service, he asked Msgr. Peter Fleetwood, then an official at the Pontifical Council for Culture, to review the book "Harry Potter: Good or Bad."

Msgr. Fleetwood wrote Kuby a four-page letter in which he basically told her she was reading too much into what is essentially children's literature. Msgr. Fleetwood never heard back from the author.

"Lumos" is the word Harry Potter uses to bring light to darkness. The tidbit of information about Msgr. Fleetwood ruins the David vs. Goliath angle and, not surprisingly, was overlooked in most of the ensuing media coverage.

Too many facts, it seems, can sometimes ruin a good story.

Why do we blame only Pilate for Jesus' suffering?

Q. In the Apostles Creed, we say Christ "suffered under Pontius Pilate." Other than Mary, he is the only person mentioned by name. We don't place total blame for the suffering and death of Jesus on Judas or anyone else. Why would Pilate be pointed out in the Apostles and Nicene creeds? (New Jersey)

A. It does seem strange, but several reasons have been offered. Some have said, for example, that in the creeds the death of Jesus is explained by the oppressive cruelty and viciousness of Pilate, whose evil nature as Roman procurator of Judea was notorious even in Rome.

More likely, however, Pilate is Msgr. Allen's missionary spirit was crucial

Msgr. Richard Allen, recently deceased ("Msgr. Allen, retired priest, dies at 74," June 24), was one of the outstanding priests to serve the Catholics of North Carolina as well as many others not of the Catholic faith.

Msgr. Allen had a missionary spirit. He left his home in upstate New York to serve out his priesthood in North Carolina, which, until recently, was the least Catholic state in America. He never lost that missionary spirit, always attuned to where the need was and coming up with creative outreach to meet the needs of the people of God.

And when he reached retirement age at 70, he volunteered again to start a new ministry in far-away Alaska, where he had always dreamed of serving.

I am grateful to have served twice as his parochial vicar and have known him as both a mentor and friend. I pray to Almighty God in thanksgiving for this great priest and that our good God will raise up this life-giving missionary spirit in me and in every priest privileged to serve in North Carolina.

A different look at Harry

I read your July 22 letter to the editor ("Closer look at Harry Potter needed") with some amusement. My 13-year-old son has read and reread the Harry Potter series many times. I have read each book only once. I was concerned when he first started reading them because of the possible content. However, now I read them because I just plain enjoy them. This is saying something for a person who finds reading quite the chore.

I missed the references to urination, excrement, "private parts" and students going off "into the bushes." I'm assuming it's because they were not integral parts of the plot.

The "possible allusion to abortion and fetal tissue research — plants which look like babies are to be chopped up to make medicine" is just an illusion. I thought they looked more like the Munchkins from the Wizard of Oz. I guess when you read something with an agenda, the story takes on a whole new meaning.

Religion and science

I am a product of 12 years of Catholic education that included distinct biology and religion classes. I am also the result of growing up in a very prayerful Catholic family.

The complementary and distinct natures of science and religion were always very clear to me. Science attempts through experimentation and observation to tell us the what, when, how and where. Religion tells us the why.

Through the scientific method, I was taught to have a critical eye and offer theories through experimental evidence. Through prayer and liturgy, the universe that science exposed convinced me of God's hand everywhere. The idea that I am either a man of faith or a man of science is misguided. I am both.

I, as a Catholic, believe in Austrian Cardinal Christoph Schonborn's premise that Catholics cannot view evolution as random selection. It is an axiom of our Catholic faith, long established and believed. Religion teaches us that God's hand guided evolution, science investigates how that occurred — once again, the complementary and distinct natures of science and religion.

Where will the high court go with same-sex marriage?

DECISION MAY BE THREAT TO RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

When the U.S. Senate begins hearings on a new Supreme Court justice to replace the retiring Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, we should not forget one of the most blatant acts of judicial activism in modern time: the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court's decree that a same-sex relationship can be a marriage.

Canada is barreling toward national approval of same-sex marriage, and judicial challenges to traditional marriage populate lower courts across the United States. It is only a matter of time — likely less than two years — before the U.S. Supreme Court will be petitioned for its view.

Catholics have a well-formed theology on the underlying question. It was put nicely not long ago by Cardinal Marc Ouellet of Quebec City in testimony before Canada's Parliament. Cardinal Ouellet warned that the civil foundation of society was being undermined by "subjectivism," the idea that rights are not based on objective, external reality but upon personal desires.

Objective reality is denied by same-sex marriage, Cardinal Ouellet observed, since "a man is a man, and a woman is a woman, and their union is marriage. If you take [the conjugal or unitive aspects] out, you don't have marriage. ... You have a generic sort of union, but you don't have marriage."

These are wise, prudent words, and the cardinal reaffirmed the church's teaching that homosexual orientation itself, if not acted upon, ought never be the basis for hatred or unmindful discrimination.

But the cardinal had another important caution that should not escape notice by America's Catholic faithful: Should same-sex marriage be approved, it will marginalize Catholic belief. In the cardinal's words, "It will put religious freedom under attack in the very near future."

The threat to religious freedom is an aspect of the same-sex effort that seldom is appreciated fully. Once marriage is redefined, those who remain opposed will be labeled discriminators.

True, churches and religious bodies likely will be exempted from performing homosexual ceremonies directly, but collateral lawsuits will be filed alleging the homiletic teaching of traditional marriage to be a "hate crime."

As the cardinal reflected to Catholic News Service, in remaining faithful to church teaching, at a minimum, "I will be accused of homophobia."

Once same-sex marriage is in place, the assault against the church will not stop with chilling catechetical speech. Efforts will be made to deny Catholic and other churches maintaining the objective definition of marriage the use of public parks, participation in public contracts — such as the delivery of services to the poor or the homeless through parish-based or faith-based organizations — and ultimately the church's tax exemption.

How do we know this is the likely scenario? Because these are the measures taken against the Boy Scouts, even after the Scouts vindicated their right before the U.S. Supreme Court not to be compelled by a state "nondiscrimination" law to accept an active homosexual as a leader.

Some years ago the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the IRS' denial of a tax-exemption to Bob Jones University. The university had a policy, based on its fundamentalist reading of the Bible, to discourage interracial dating. This, said the court, was not in the public interest, whether or not the belief was religiously motivated. Analogous?

Maybe, at this moment in time, we are capable of distinguishing immoral racial discrimination from the discernment of what is and is not objectively valid marriage. But the legal sanctioning of same-sex marriage may make what is now obvious socially unacceptable.

This, as Cardinal Ouellet said, is an invitation to "juridical chaos."

Or, as the policy director of a Christian fellowship organization commented, "Christians are going to inhabit the closet so recently vacated by gays."

Coping with terrorism

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE
HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

I was chilled July 7 when I heard bombs had exploded in London. I thought: "Now we have another anguish to cope with. How much more can we take?"

At this moment of high anxiety, we need more than ever to keep our perspective on life. When the London bombings occurred, the Scripture readings in the Liturgy of the Hours were recounting the life of King David.

During his last days, David never was allowed to enjoy complete peace. His son Absalom had turned against him and eventually was killed. Then Adoniah laid claim to the throne, forcing David, who was close to dying, to step in and have his son Solomon anointed king.

Throughout the Bible and history we learn that just when peace is within a nation's grasp, something comes along to disrupt it. Humankind is never allowed to rest on its laurels.

The war on terrorism is a historical reminder that just as there is goodness and glimmers of peace, we nonetheless continue to witness evil and conflict.

To cope with terrorism we must keep reviewing the history of evil and reminding ourselves that events similar to those have happened before and will happen again as long as there is sin. Facing this fact helps to remove the fear that this sort of evil has happened only to us, that we are alone and unique in our anguish.

We must also remember that the worst defeat we confront in the face of terrorism is losing heart. The cry "Fear not!" is heard repeatedly throughout the Gospels and church history.

A perplexed Mary who hears she is to be the mother of God is comforted by the words of an angel saying, "Fear not Mary, the Holy Spirit is with you." Christ soothes frightened apostles in a storm with the assurance, "Fear not!" We read of martyrs during the early persecutions inspiring each other to take heart and trust in God.

No doubt the war on terrorism will be long and bloody, it will take the best military and technological strength to gain victory, and we will need a spirit of patriotism to keep heart.

But in all this we must never doubt the power of prayer! Prayer keeps our hearts open and our thinking clear because it overcomes hardness of heart and the blindness this causes. More than this, prayer renews our faith in God.

As Job's faith in God was his strength, so keeping faith through prayer is our strength. God has the ultimate answer for overcoming terrorism. Only an open heart can read God's mind and learn the answers.

The job chase

It happens all the time; but it now seems to be happening more frequently. Layoffs, cutbacks, downsizing, letting workers go. Where do they go? That's the job-search question that more and more work-force veterans are asking every day.

General Motors is cutting back. So is Ford. Winn-Dixie is letting 22,000 employees go and closing all stores in four states, remaining open only in Florida.

Fortune magazine gave its white-collar readers a cover story in May that used the print equivalent of a megaphone, saying on the front cover: "50 and fired ... is bad enough. But now out-of-work execs are facing a permanent vacation. How to tell if your career is at risk."

Business Week's cover Feb. 3 asked, "Is your job next?" These words appeared beneath a picture of a well-dressed executive hanging onto a pallet loaded with crates being lifted onto a ship: "A new round of globalization is sending upscale jobs offshore. They include chip design, engineering, basic research — even financial analysis. Can America lose these jobs and still prosper?"

Yes, some careers are at risk, but even so America will continue to prosper. This doesn't resolve the issue for the mid-career, middle-age woman or man who has been or may be set adrift in these times of economic uncertainty.

Looking Around

FATHER

Where do they go?

In writing about this for Catholic newspapers, I would be remiss not to suggest that job seekers first take the matter to prayer and next weave an active network of friends who, if asked, surely will help. "Network, network, network" is the advice successful job seekers always offer to others.

Praying the psalms is a daily routine that I recommend to anyone looking for work.

About 10 years ago I studied the problem of mid-career executive unemployment in America. I spoke with managers who experienced firsthand the meanings of "downsizing" and "restructuring," new words then for the old realities of layoff and unemployment.

I interviewed many displaced white-collar workers and found that they hurt in the same vulnerable places where blue-collar workers feel the pain of job loss. Not just the wallet or bank account, but in stomach knots, heavy hearts and soul-deep fears of never working again.

One reality I examined was religion's relevance in their lives. I inquired what they did or read to shore up their spirits. The psalms often were mentioned as sources of spiritual encouragement and support.

To anyone who is a believer and who has experienced mid-career unemployment, this should come as no surprise.

Simply praying is not enough. My now out-of-print book "Finding Work Without Losing Heart" offers a lot of practical advice. It can be downloaded for free from my former parish's Web site (www.trinity.org).

Not least in the order of practical importance during the search is spousal support. I was peripherally helpful to a successful job seeker who told me this:

"It would not have been possible without someone as strong as my wife. She constantly amazes me with her faith in our Lord and in me.

"I'm not a powerful person; I only work hard. One morning when I about to leave for a job search, she kissed me and said, 'John, there's nothing to fear; we've been poor before, and we had a lot of fun when we were, so who cares?'"

"I went out the door powered by rocket fuel. I tell you this because it's at the heart of what every job seeker needs."

In the 50 years since the establishment of St. Ann Church on Aug. 15, 1955, parishioners have built a church, school and activity center. In 1961, they helped establish a mission church, St. Vincent de Paul Church, which gained parish status just four years later.

FAITH AHOY

Father Jerome Dillon of South Sioux City, Neb., a U.S. Navy chaplain, celebrates Mass aboard the combat support ship USS Sacramento. The Omaha archdiocesan priest holds the rank of commander.

From ship decks to desert sands, priests serve military

OMAHA, Neb. (CNS) — Father Jerome Dillon walks the polished decks of nuclear-powered aircraft carriers and travels through the blowing sands of the desert to care for souls in need.

During his 20 years as a chaplain for the U.S. Navy, these remote locations have become his home away from home, where he serves his parishioners with love.

"I feel it is a great responsibility to provide for the sacramental and spiritual needs (of sailors and Marines) at sea and abroad, but especially when they are in harm's way," he said by phone from Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton in California.

Father Dillon, a commander, is one of the many priests making sure the spiritual needs of military men and women are being met as they work to protect and defend the Constitution.

The chaplains serve personnel and families of the Army, Air Force and Navy, with Navy chaplains also serving the Marine Corps and U.S. Coast Guard.

Catholic chaplains minister to about 1.4 million Catholics in the military, said Auxiliary Bishop John J. Kaising of the U.S. Archdiocese for the Military Services.

That figure includes 375,000 people in uniform and more than 900,000 family members of active-duty personnel; 300,000 Catholics in the Reserve and Coast Guard; and those serving in government service overseas or in Veterans Affairs hospitals.

The bishop, who is vicar of chaplains, said that 349 U.S. priests serve full-time as chaplains on loan from 147 dioceses and 37 religious communities.

A military chaplain is expected to work day and night and to visit people everywhere — on land, in the air and at sea. Many times the chaplain is the only Catholic priest in the area.

They supervise other chaplains, manage budgets and serve as pastors for Catholic parishes. They also make hospital visits, and provide worship services, sacramental rites, religious education programs and spiritual direction.

A large part of their ministry also involves counseling. Many personnel are dealing with a family crisis back home, problems within their own units, racism, spousal problems, suicide and separation from loved ones.

Military chaplains, too, face challenges, many of which are the same as for civilian priests. But priests in the military also must deal with the unique circumstances of serving thousands of parishioners, many of whom are young people from various backgrounds, cultures and religions. The parish community is constantly changing, too.

With thousands of women and men serving in the military, the need for priests who can minister to them continues to grow. This year, 10 bases in the United States will lose the priest assigned to the installations, meaning that those bases will have to depend on a part-time civilian priest from the local area.

Young people in the military "are hungering for food for their souls," Father Dillon said. "They are not faithless, but they do need shepherds to lead them."

U.S. bishop calls for more pressure to stop violence in Darfu

WASHINGTON (CNS) — International pressure must be applied to the Sudanese government and rebel forces in order to end the violence and suffering in the Darfur region, said the chairman of the U.S. bishops' international policy committee.

A larger presence of African Union troops in Darfur was needed for a sustainable peace, said the chairman, Bishop John H. Ricard of Pensacola-Tallahassee, Fla.

The bishop offered his support for a U.S. House resolution, the Darfur Peace and Accountability Act, which calls for an increase of African peacekeeping troops in Darfur and for the perpetrators of violence in Darfur to be brought before the International Court of Justice.

The act also calls for a stronger mandate for international troops and for an increase in logistical support for the troops from the international community.

"We believe this legislation will give added momentum to the search for a genuine peace in Darfur and relief for its suffering people," Bishop Ricard said Aug. 10.

Bishop Ricard, who visited Darfur in August 2004, said the United States and international community "can and must do more to end this moral and humanitarian crisis."

"We cannot stand idly by while human life is threatened," he said.

After returning from his 2004 trip to Darfur, Bishop Ricard told Catholic News Service that there was "no question" that the killings in Darfur represented ethnic cleansing.

U.N. officials say more than 180,000 people have died in the last two years because of armed conflict in Darfur. Human rights advocates place the death toll as high as 400,000.

Pope's brother released from hospital after receiving pacemaker

Msgr. Ratzinger doing 'satisfactory,' says spokesman

ROME (CNS) — Pope Benedict's older brother, Msgr. Georg Ratzinger, was released from Rome's Gemelli hospital Aug. 6, three days after receiving a pacemaker and the morning after a visit from his brother.

Msgr. Ratzinger, 81, was taken to the hospital Aug. 3 with an irregular heartbeat. He had been staying with the pope at the papal summer villa in Castel Gandolfo, south of Rome.

Doctors inserted the pacemaker that same evening.

Pope Benedict left Castel Gandolfo in an Italian air force helicopter Aug. 5 and landed at the hospital helipad about 15 minutes later.

Alerted by the erection of security barricades and an increased police presence, about 50 patients and their visitors, as well as journalists and photographers, were on hand when the pope entered the hospital.

Pope Benedict spent about 20 minutes upstairs with his brother.

Returning to the ground floor, he blessed a new statue depicting Pope John Paul II being embraced by Mary.

Before leaving the hospital, Pope Benedict shook hands with members of the waiting crowd, blessing the sick and several small children.

After his release, Msgr. Ratzinger, a musician and the retired director of the famed Regensburg boys' choir, returned to Castel Gandolfo.

Joaquin Navarro-Valls, the Vatican spokesman, said Aug. 4 that the monsignor's postoperative condition was "satisfactory" and he was expected to be released from the hospital within a few days.

Pope encourages people to make God most important part of life

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — Adoring God means recognizing his presence as creator and lord of the universe and ensuring that God is the most important part of one's life, Pope Benedict XVI said.

With about 2,000 people packed into the courtyard of his summer villa south of Rome and several thousand more people gathered in the square outside the villa Aug. 7, the pope focused his address on the upcoming celebration of World Youth Day.

The theme of the Aug. 16-21 celebration in Cologne, Germany, is: "We Have Come to Worship Him."

Pope Benedict said an attitude of worship and adoration is the attitude that has marked the lives of saints throughout Christian history. It involves recognizing the greatness of God and the gift of salvation in Jesus with gratitude that "arises from the depths of one's heart and marks one's whole being," he said.

During the Cologne gathering, the pope said, the church wants to help young people from around the world reach the "peak of love," showing them that in dedicating their lives completely to God they will discover the purpose of their existence.

The Vatican announced Aug. 8 that Catholics participating in World Youth Day events can receive a plenary indulgence if they attend any of the events or the closing Mass with prayerful devotion, receive the sacraments of reconciliation and the Eucharist and offer prayers for the intentions of the pope.

"Other faithful, wherever they are during the encounter, will receive a partial indulgence if, with a contrite spirit, they ask with fervent prayers that God strengthen young Christians in their profession of the faith, that he confirm them in love and in respect for their parents" and that he help them form holy Christian families or follow a vocation to the priesthood or religious life, the Vatican statement said.

An indulgence is a remission of the temporal punishment due for sins committed. A plenary indulgence is the remission of all punishment, while a partial indulgence applies only to part of the punishment due.

DIOCESAN REQUIREMENTS FOR REPORTING MINISTRY-RELATED SEXUAL ABUSE OF A MINOR

1. Any individual having actual knowledge of or reasonable cause to suspect an incident of ministry-related sexual abuse is to immediately report the incident to the Chancery.
2. The Chancery will then report the incident to the proper civil authorities. The individual reporting the incident to the Chancery will be notified of the particulars regarding the Chancery's filing of the incident with civil authorities.
3. This reporting requirement is not intended to supersede the right of an individual to make a report to civil authority, but is to ensure proper, complete and timely reporting. Should an individual choose to make a report to civil authority, a report is still to be made to the Chancery.

Deacon, campus minister earn pastoral care awards

BY ELLEN NEERINCX SIGMON
CORRESPONDENT

HICKORY — When Deacon Tom Rasmussen saw a need, he acted.

The permanent deacon at St. Aloysius Church in Hickory combined his years of experience in crisis response as a Special Bureau of Investigations agent and arson investigator, along with his master's degree in counseling, and then added a spiritual component to create a pastoral response team.

He proposed the pastoral response team to Paul Kotlowski, director of diocesan youth ministry, and has been helping the diocese to develop the concept. His efforts have earned him the Bishop William G. Curlin Pastoral Care Award, presented during Mass at St. Aloysius Church July 31.

The award recognizes individuals, groups and/or parishes in the Diocese of Charlotte that exemplify the principles of Christ's love in the ministry of pastoral care.

The deacon is one of two recipients this year. Gloria Schweizer, Catholic campus minister at Western Carolina University, earned the award for her care of a youth in crisis.

Pastoral response

Deacon Rasmussen first saw the need for pastoral response teams while on a parish youth mission trip when their bus driver was killed in an accident.

"I saw reactions to this up to two years afterward," he said.

He said that youths especially are vulnerable to such incidents because most deaths in this age group happen suddenly due to motor vehicle accidents, suicides or homicides.

Leaving the parish youth minister to help a youth group through a crisis is not the solution, he said.

"When tragedy happens, the youth ministers are hurting also, so we want to go into a parish and minister to the youth minister and the youth," said Deacon Rasmussen.

For his proposal, he used a model for crisis intervention with which he was familiar from his work with the SBI, but it was missing the vital spiritual aspect.

"You cannot meaningfully explain death without a belief in eternal life," he said.

Paul Kotlowski, director of diocesan youth ministry; Deacon Tom Rasmussen, permanent deacon at St. Aloysius Church in Hickory; and Father Robert Ferris, pastor, after a July 31 Mass at which Deacon Rasmussen was presented with the Bishop Curlin pastoral care award.

Kotlowski said plans are underway to train people interested in joining pastoral response teams around the diocese as early as this fall. The diocese will need trained mental health workers, lay ecclesial ministers and youth peers to comprise the teams.

"I see the potential for this type of response going far beyond the youth populations," said Kotlowski. "When one tragedy hits, it ripples throughout the whole parish."

When the diocese piloted the program during a tragedy at a parish, at least one-third of those who came for help were adults, said Kotlowski.

Care in crisis

Schweizer, who has been involved in campus ministry for 11 years, received her award from Mary Wright, director of diocesan campus ministry, during a ministry retreat in Boone May 26.

She earned the award because of her outreach to a student who had recently become a Christian and then lost his brother to homicide.

"She dropped everything and put herself at the disposal of this young man and his family," said Kotlowski. "She provided transportation and she advocated for him to teachers and the university."

"Without a doubt, Gloria ... is the epitome of the Bishop William G. Curlin Pastoral Care Award," said Mary Wright, director of diocesan campus ministry.

"Gloria went above and beyond the call of duty with this student," said Wright, "so much so, that the parents ... called Gloria for further assistance with their son."

Now in its second year, the Bishop Curlin award originated in the diocesan Office of Youth Ministry but is not exclusively a youth ministry award, said Kotlowski.

"Each year we invite parishes to nominate individuals who are deserving of the award," he said. "The hope is that potential applicants can come from any part of the church, not just the youth ministry population."

FATHER ALLEN TO SERVE AT PONTIFICAL COLLEGE JOSEPHINUM

CHARLOTTE — Father John Allen, a priest of the Diocese of Charlotte, has been appointed recently to the faculty of the Pontifical College Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio.

He will serve as dean of men for the College of Liberal Arts and director of Pastoral Formation for the seminary. The appointment was announced July 29 by Archbishop Gabriel Montalvo, apostolic nuncio to the United States.

Ordained in May 1990, Father Allen most recently served as director of vocations for the Diocese of Charlotte, rector of the Cardinal Newman House and chaplain of Charlotte Catholic High School.

"We are very thankful to Bishop (Peter J.) Jugis for granting our request to release Father Allen for service at the seminary," said Msgr. Paul Langsfeld, rector of the Josephinum.

"I am confident that he will bring to our faculty and students his great love for the priesthood and the church, his rich experience as a pastor and his example as a teacher and mentor to seminarians and young people," said Msgr. Langsfeld.

Established in 1888, the Pontifical College Josephinum is an international seminary with a four-year college and a graduate school of theology. It is a pontifical institution immediately subject to the Holy See through the apostolic nuncio.

Thirty North American dioceses and six international dioceses are currently represented in the seminary's student body.

Cancer patient found the spiritual side of suffering and a small spot were found in his right lung during a routine physical exam in January 2004.

Fuerst and his wife Kathy had wanted a brother or sister for their son Michael, now 5 years old. After more than a year of trying to conceive without success, they decided to adopt. As part of the pre-adoption screening process, each had a physical.

Fuerst was diagnosed with stage IV lung cancer. His doctors couldn't explain why an athletic, 34-year-old nonsmoker would develop lung cancer.

Three days after his diagnosis he had surgery, with no results. A course of chemotherapy had no effect except to leave him weak and sick.

The prognosis was grim: He had less than a 1 percent chance of surviving more than five years, and his doctors gave him just eight to 10 months to live.

"We were basically told, 'Pack your bags and get your things in order,'" Fuerst said.

Since medical treatments had failed to rid him of cancer, Fuerst decided to attack his tumor with prayer, a tool he had always used in his everyday life. He said countless novenas, touched first-class relics of Blessed Mother Teresa, even visited Guadalupe, Mexico. None provided the miracle cure for which he had hoped.

Ten months after his diagnosis, Fuerst was still alive and feeling well enough to walk a half marathon.

"Just because you have a terminal illness, it's not the end of the world," Fuerst said.

Graces of a terminal illness

Fuerst's doctor suggested he keep a journal to track how he felt from day to day. Soon, he began recording how he felt spiritually as well as physically.

He had always been a devout Catho-

Chris Fuerst, right, went on an extraordinary journey of faith following his diagnosis of lung cancer, including the birth of daughter Gabrielle, who was conceived while Fuerst was undergoing chemotherapy.

lic, building on the foundation his parents, Robert and Ruth Ann, provided for him as a boy. While in his 20s and early 30s, he regularly attended daily Mass, spent time in eucharistic adoration and prayed novenas throughout the week.

Fuerst said that through his illness, he was granted a number of graces, which he called his "graces of a terminal illness."

"I feel like I'm the luckiest guy around," Fuerst said. "I'm 35 years old and I have come so far in my spiritual life ... I am feeling closer and closer to God each and every day."

As his body weakened, Fuerst found his spirit strengthening. Where he had once valued quantity of prayers, he focused on the quality of his prayer time.

"My body is really going downhill fast," he wrote in his journal. "But I feel my spiritual life is doing nothing but taking off — higher and higher."

Fuerst took great comfort in the late Pope John Paul II's ideas on the value of suffering, that it is God's gift to the church and to the world.

"By suffering, I have opened myself up to dependence on God," he said. "It is always a choice. Follow God or not. If you do, you are better for it, but it does not mean that your life will be without suffering."

As expected, Fuerst's illness impacted his marriage and family. He described his eight-year marriage to Kathy at "tremendously wonderful." Even so, their love grew "a hundred fold" since his diagnosis.

"If it wasn't for him, I don't know if I'd have the strength or faith to make it through this trying time" said Kathy Fuerst. "He would never let me give up or give in."

Gone were petty arguments and rigid schedules. They enjoyed each other and their children as much as possible, as often as possible.

"(Kathy) is my advocate and my friend. She cares for me and she cares about me," Fuerst said. "I, in turn, love and care for her more deeply than ever."

Fuerst came to rely on others, rather than always being the "doer" — helping others at church and in the neighborhood. Two teenage brothers from church mowed the lawn. Neighbors and friends brought meals and baby-sat for the children.

"It is a sign of humility to accept one's offering ... because you never really know how much (it) means to the person giving it," Fuerst said.

An unexpected blessing

When Fuerst was diagnosed with cancer, he and Kathy thought they had the answer to her inability to become pregnant a second time.

"Obviously, we could not get pregnant because of me — case closed," Fuerst said. "Once again, the Lord surprised us and we got pregnant."

On March 25, 2005 — Good Friday — Gabrielle Fuerst was born.

"(Gabrielle) has taught us yet another lesson with relation to God and his plan for us," Fuerst said. "Kathy and I feel strongly that we are children of love and these two children we have, out of love, are really God's children as well."

Fuerst found a spiritual mentor and companion in his pastor at Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem, Conventual Franciscan Father William Robinson.

"Chris became a mystic because of his devotion to the cross," said Father Robinson.

By early August 2005, the cancer had spread through his lymphatic system and into his brain. His doctors gave him only a few months, perhaps even weeks, to live. Still, he lived each day as fully as possible, treasuring his newfound relationship with God and his deeper love for his family.

"Recently, I asked Chris if he was ready to walk into the arms of God," said Father Robinson. "He said, 'No, Father, I want to jump into his arms.'"

In the early morning hours of Aug. 16, 2005, Chris Fuerst passed away in his home, surrounded by his family, friends and pastor.

His will be the first memorial Mass celebrated in the new Our Lady of Mercy Church after its dedication Mass Aug. 28 — a Mass during which he was supposed to be the cross-bearer.

Novena Prayer to Saint Theresita

(To be said every day for nine days.)

O Saint Theresita to you all life was a miracle! I pray to you, Powerful Intercessor, to lighten my burdens by asking the Lord for miraculous intervention. You have promised to let a "shower of roses fall from Heaven." Please pray with me for His love to wash over me and heal me—physically, emotionally and spiritually. When I am alone, reach into my heart with peace and comfort, and when I am afraid, bring me new hope and strength in the Lord. With confidence, I place in your hands this special favor (state petition). ~ Amen.

High school and college students discuss possible callings to the priesthood with Bishop Peter J. Jugis, priests and seminarians for the Diocese of Charlotte during a vocations discernment day held at St. Barnabas Church in Arden Aug. 5.

Young men gather to explore vocations to priesthood

ARDEN — Almost 50 male high school and college students gathered with Bishop Peter J. Jugis, priests and seminarians to explore their possible callings to the priesthood.

The gathering of teenagers and young men from around the diocese for the day of discernment was held at St. Barnabas Church in Arden Aug. 5.

"A number of priests have been suggesting that we hold an event such as this for some time," said Father John Putnam, acting vocations director for the Diocese of Charlotte and pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury.

"I was very excited about the response, and we certainly plan to hold these days in the future."

The discernment day was organized by Father Putnam and hosted by Father Roger Arnsparger, pastor of St. Barnabas Church.

Bishop Jugis spoke of the nature of the priesthood — how the one priesthood of Christ is continued in time through ordination, so that the Good Shepherd might still feed his sheep through the sacraments of the church, supremely the holy Eucharist.

"Priests are for the sake of the Eucharist," Bishop Jugis said.

In addition to attending Mass celebrated by Bishop Jugis, the students spent the day in prayer, eucharistic adoration, recitation of the rosary, confession and talks on proper formation of young men and the chief principles of discernment.

The students learned that virtue and character are stressed in formation, and that they should avoid the influences of modern culture that may tempt them toward self-absorption and fear of personal sacrifice.

Those who sensed a vocation to the priesthood were challenged to come to a place in their lives where they would be willing to accept the calling.

"It is obvious that vocations are there," said Father Putnam. "We just have to encourage them and provide the means through which they can come to fruition."

The students also enjoyed recreational activities and question-and-answer sessions with the bishop, priests and seminarians.

Speakers come to congress

"The Passion of the Christ," will speak Friday evening in a program featuring sacred music by a 75-voice choir comprised of singers from around the diocese.

Caviezel frequently speaks to large audiences about his passion for his Catholic faith. Caviezel's wife, Kerri, will address the congress on Saturday.

The homilist for the Saturday morning Eucharistic Holy Hour is Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin, who retired as bishop of Charlotte in 2002. Bishop Curlin's soft-spoken, inspirational storytelling is well known throughout the diocese.

After Bishop Curlin's talk and welcoming remarks from Bishop Peter J. Jugis, the congress program will be divided into four separate "tracks," each including speakers and activities.

The Children's Track is for children in kindergarten through fifth grade. The Teen Track is for youths in sixth through 12th grade. The Hispanic Track and the General Track are for adults.

In addition to a variety of activities and a play, children will hear from Father Antoine Thomas, a member of the Congregation of St. John, who understands how teens and youths can embrace and be enriched by spending time with the Blessed Sacrament.

Father Thomas also will be a featured speaker in the Teen Track.

Also speaking to teens will be Father Leo Patalinghug, a priest from Westminster, Md., who will entertain and inspire teens with break dancing and karate; Charlie Aeschliman, a former Navy S.E.A.L. and basketball-handling champion, who will share his story of faith and showcase his basketball skills; and Father Francis Mary Stone, host of the EWTN program "Life on the Rock," who will deliver his straightforward talk "The Extreme Make-Over: Putting on the Armor of Christ."

The Hispanic and the General tracks will share speakers who will present talks in both English and Spanish. They are:

Dr. Marcellino D'Ambrosio, a specialist in the interpretation of Scripture and tradition; Franciscan Capuchin Father Raniero Cantalamessa, appointed in 1980 by Pope John Paul II as the preacher of the pontifical household; and Dr. Dora Tobar, a speaker and theologian from The Catholic University in Washington D.C.

In the General Track will be Johnette Benkovic, a Catholic evangelization apostolate with outreaches in television, radio, print and Internet communications; and popular theologian Dr. Scott Hahn, a professor at Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio.

The Eucharistic Congress ends with a vigil Mass at 4:30 p.m. on Saturday, Sept. 24.

Mysterium Fidei

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 22

Last time, we examined the sacred words of institution and consecration, which constitute the heart of the Mass. We discovered the amazing truth that these are not merely historical or biblical words used to recount the activity of the Last Supper, but in fact, in the Mass, Christ truly represents his sacrifice through his priest acting as his instrument.

Bread and wine are changed into the body and blood of Christ as the words of consecration are spoken by Christ through each individual Catholic priest throughout time and history. All the prayers of the Mass until this moment prepare for our Lord's sacramental arrival; from this moment forward, when Christ is truly present on the altar, the priest again addresses the heavenly Father on behalf of the church.

This week let us consider the four remaining parts of the Eucharistic Prayer that are now addressed to the Father.

Anamnesis

Immediately following the consecration, the celebrant announces, "Mysterium fidei," (that is, "[Let us proclaim] the mystery of faith") and we respond with one of the four options that expresses the Paschal Mystery: "Dying you destroyed our death. Rising you restored our life. Lord Jesus, come in glory."

This acclamation leads us into the next part of the Eucharistic Prayer, called by its Greek name, anamnesis, or "memorial." The anamnesis is a prayer of remembrance in which the church calls to mind the Lord's passion, resurrection and ascension into heaven.

We are reminded that the church is acting in memory of our Lord and obeying his explicit command, "Do this in memory of me." We are mindful of our Lord's parting mandate and the church rejoices in her fidelity to Christ; we are, in fact, faithfully following the command to "Do this in memory of me."

Oblation

The oblation or offering follows the memorial in the Eucharistic Prayer. Prior to the consecration, the priest asks the Lord to accept the gifts of bread and wine as a token of ourselves. But now, following the consecration, the bread and wine no longer exist; they have been changed into the body and blood of Christ. Christ is now offered to the Father.

In the Roman canon, three Old Testament persons are mentioned whose offerings were acceptable to the Father: 1) Abel, who offered the firstborn lamb of his flock; 2) Melchisedech, who offered bread and wine as a priest of God; and 3) Abraham, who was willing to offer his own son.

Each of these three biblical sacrifices foreshadows the perfect sacrifice of Jesus Christ, which fulfilled all others. Christ is the high priest offering the Mass, but in the oblation, we discover that he is also the victim being offered.

Intercessions

Because Christ is the high priest and mediator between God and man, intercessory prayers form the next part of the Eucharistic Prayer. The intercessions make clear that each Mass is offered for the salvation of the whole world in union with the entire church on earth, as well as in heaven. All members of Christ's mystical body are included in the benefits of the Mass: we seek the intercession of those in heaven, the Blessed Virgin Mary and all the angels and saints; we pray for the living and we intercede on behalf of the dead.

The pope, the bishop of the diocese and the clergy are always mentioned, since union with the pope and the local bishop establishes our unity with the Catholic Church throughout the world.

Doxology

With the close of the intercessions comes the conclusion of the Eucharistic Prayer. The formula, known as the Doxology, is common to all eucharistic prayers. The Greek word doxology simply means "a word of glory or praise."

The priest raises the chalice and paten in a final word of praise to the Father as he prays, "...all glory and honor is yours Almighty Father, forever and ever." The faithful conclude the Eucharistic Prayer with the "Amen," which may be recited or sung.

St. Jerome wrote in the fifth century that the "amen" at the conclusion of the canon "resounded in heaven, as a celestial thunderclap in the Roman basilicas." Let us pray that our assent, that our "amen," will proceed from the same ardent faith, hope and love.

We will continue next time by examining the Communion Rite.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Understanding Jesus' presence

Local Scouts first in North Carolina to earn Eucharist patches

MOORESVILLE — Seven Catholic Boy Scouts and three adult leaders from Troop 171, all members of St. Therese Church in Mooresville, recently received their Year of the Eucharist Scout patch.

The Scouts are the first in North Carolina to receive the patch, created by Catholic Committee on Scouting in the Diocese of Dodge City, Kan., and believed to be the only religious emblem program of this type in the country.

With the Year of the Eucharist, proclaimed by Pope John Paul II, running from October 2004 to October of this year, the purpose of the religious activity patch program is to assist Scouts in better understanding Jesus' presence in the Eucharist, the Mass as his sacrifice and the importance of eucharistic adoration.

"I see Scouts earning this patch as a tribute to Pope John Paul II," said Tim Wenzl, religious emblems coordinator for the Diocese of Dodge City's Catholic Committee on Scouting.

"The Holy Father proclaimed this special year to draw emphasis on the Eucharist. Scouts meeting the requirements and earning this patch will long remember that the pope died during the Year of the Eucharist," he said. "They are responding to the Holy Father's call to understand the importance of the Eucharist in our Catholic faith."

There were different requirements for Scouts in first through fifth grades, for those in sixth through 12th grades, and for adult leaders.

To earn their patches, the Scouts from Troop 171 read the apostolic letter "Mane Noviscum Domine," recited the rosary and meditated on the Luminous Mysteries, discussed the meaning of Corpus Christi and identified terms associated with the Eucharist.

Catholic News Service contributed to this story.

Sisters of Mercy foundation awards grant to City of Charlotte

Funds will assist families in Wingate Community

CHARLOTTE — Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina Foundation awarded a three-year $987,389 grant to the City of Charlotte Neighborhood Development Department June 22 for the Vision: Charlotte Initiative.

The initiative will deliver an innovative model of neighborhood-based integrated services, including case management, in the Wingate Community, a neighborhood in the western corridor of Charlotte.

The neighborhood is troubled by a school drop-out rate nearly three times the city average, high rates of teen pregnancy, unemployment and other conditions that contribute to its fragile status as reported in the City of Charlotte's 2004 Quality of Life Study.

The initiative effort is a collaboration between a number of Charlotte-based organizations and departments. Each of the collaborating partners will provide on-site services and resources in an integrated model to assist the educational and economic advancement of individuals and families in Wingate.

Charlotte City Council recognized the foundation at its July 25 meeting, during which Mercy Sister Mary Jerome Spradley, foundation president, and Edward Schlinkup Jr., executive director, made a formal presentation of the check to Mayor Patrick McCrory.

Program services are expected to begin in August.

"The Vision: Charlotte Initiative could become a new paradigm for service delivery to other communities," said Sister Spradley.

"The approach is holistic, focused on developing the strengths of individuals and families and reflects our desire as a foundation to promote systemic change and invest in helping people to empower themselves and improve the quality of their lives," she said.

The foundation is the charitable arm of the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina and provides grants to selected tax exempt health care, educational and social service organizations, which assist women, children, the elderly and the poor.

Since it began receiving grant applications in October 1996, the foundation has awarded 582 grants totaling more than $26 million to organizations serving underserved populations. The award to the City of Charlotte is a special initiative outside of the foundation's regular programs of grantmaking.

The city has made significant investments in the improvement of Wingate housing, infrastructure and crime rates over the past 10 years. When the foundation approached the city with an interest in funding an intensive, supportive services program that would circumvent barriers to accessibility by bringing services to the neighborhood and empowering residents to take ownership of the program and their community, the revitalization efforts already underway made Wingate a ready candidate.

"The availability of affordable housing alone cannot eliminate the effects of generations of poverty," said Sister Spradley. "Accessibility of supportive social and human services and education can make a lasting difference in revitalized communities."

"We are pleased to assist the expanded efforts by the City of Charlotte to improve this neighborhood and the lives of the people who live there," she said.

It is hoped that the long-term impact of the program will be reflected in a growing number of Wingate residents being employed and earning living wages, continuing their educations, and owning homes, said Sister Spradley.

GRANTING HELP

Funds will assist residents at House of Mercy

BELMONT — House of Mercy, a nonprofit residence for persons living with advanced AIDS, recently received a $5,000 grant from the Carrie E. and Lena V. Glenn Foundation.

The funds will be used for direct care services for House of Mercy residents.

"We depend on the generous contributions of our community for more than 80 percent of our budget," said Stan Patterson, House of Mercy president.

House of Mercy, the only facility of its type in the region, has housed more than 200 men and women since its founding by the Sisters of Mercy in 1991. Physical, psychological and spiritual support are provided to residents without concern for race, religion or sexual orientation.

"House of Mercy offers 24-hour compassionate care and housing for economically disadvantaged men and women living with advanced AIDS," said Patterson. "We provide clinical treatments and therapies designed to provide the best in medical services, as well as a variety of supplemental services to enhance the lives of our residents."

On average, 72 percent of residents at House of Mercy have been minorities and almost 30 percent have been female.

The Glenn Foundation was established by two Gastonia sisters whose advice was that the contribution was to go "where it is needed most and will do the most good."

The Glenn Foundation's funding priorities include Gaston County nonprofit agencies in the areas of human services, children and youth, arts, community improvement, education, environment, health/science and religion.

Generous in spirit

Businesswoman leaves more than $1.4 million to Catholic Church

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

GREENSBORO — Aurelia Isle Guffey was known as a judicious, respected and successful businesswoman.

But she is also remembered for her devotion to her church and community.

"Catholicism wasn't something she practiced only on Sundays. She incorporated it into her daily life," said Bryan Guffey, her grandson.

"She was always generous in her own quiet way," said Deacon Timothy Rohan, a permanent deacon at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro. "Her whole life was giving until the day she died."

Upon her death on Dec. 19, 2004, at the age of 96, Guffey found a way to continue her quiet way of giving to her church and community. She left $1.4 million to the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, Catholic Social Services and two parishes.

The foundation is a non-profit organization established to provide endowments for the diocese and its parishes, schools, agencies and organizations.

An endowment is a permanent fund placed in the foundation and earns income over time. The principal amount is not spent, but the income can be used in a manner stipulated in an estate plan or in an endowment agreement.

Through Guffey's gift, $1 million went to establish an endowment in the foundation, $412,000 went toward Catholic Social Services, and $26,000 each went to Our Lady of Grace Church and St. Benedict Church in Greensboro.

A portion of the gifts to CSS and the parishes went into endowments in the foundation.

"By leaving her very generous gift to the church, Mrs. Guffey is leaving a legacy in perpetuity to the things she valued when she was alive — her Catholic Church," said Jim Kelley, foundation and development director for the diocese.

Guffey, with the help of her husband, Ed, of 35 years, owned and operated one of the largest poultry hatchery operations in the Southeast. She was honored with many industry awards and citations, including being named the poultry industry's "Woman of the Year."

Born in 1908 in Westphalia, Mo., she later relocated to Greensboro, living across the street from the future Our Lady of Grace Church.

"She sat on the porch and watched them build the church," said Deacon Rohan.

"When they set the final stone in 1952, she became a parishioner and remained so until her passing," said Bryan Guffey. "Likely one of the church's oldest neighbors, she walked to Mass every Sunday morning for nearly 50 years."

Aurelia Guffey was a regular participant in and supporter of church social functions and ministries, and became a good neighbor to the clergy who passed through Our Lady of Grace Church's rectory and the women religious at the convent.

"She got to know them in a way many parishioners don't — as neighbors, as regular people," said Bryan Guffey.

"She brought eggs to the convent every week," said Deacon Rohan, who considered Aurelia Guffey a good friend for the 30 years he has been at the parish. "I thought the world of her," he said.

In 1997, she joined the Catholic Heritage Society, whose members have committed to make a planned gift to the foundation, the Diocese of Charlotte, or any of its parishes, schools, agencies or organizations.

"Mrs. Guffey's gift has come at a most opportune moment. It will provide CSS the funds to establish needed new programs and, just as importantly, to maintain them until other long term funding can be put in place," said Elizabeth Thurbee, executive director of Catholic Social Services.

"It is not often that such a substantial and generous gift comes our way. We are most grateful," she said.

"More people are doing what Mrs. Guffey did — taking another step in stewardship by leaving a gift to the church in a will or an estate plan after their deaths," said Kelley.

Established in 1994, the foundation now has more than 125 endowments, 10 of which were added during the past fiscal year. Almost $1.5 million has been distributed in 11 years to parishes, schools and agencies to carry out the continuous wishes of many people who were devoted to the church.

The society is open to individuals who make any of the following planned gifts: a bequest in their will; an annuity; a life estate gift; a gift of life insurance or real estate; a gift through a retirement plan; a remainder trust.

Estate gifts can be made either to the diocesan foundation or directly to a parish, school or agency.

Perpetuity is a long time

Planned giving can help sustain dream, church

"Perpetuity" is one of those words you don't run across every day. Chances are, you'll never hear it on the six o'clock news or read it in the evening paper. It's not something you'll see on a theater marquee.

But perpetuity is a word we relish at the Foundation for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte. We use it often because it describes our endowments.

According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, perpetuity is "the state or quality of being perpetual." The phrase "in perpetuity" means "forever or for an indefinite period."

It is said that every noise produced on earth creates sound waves that expand outward toward the infinite reaches of space. The waves extend unendingly. Or we might say, the sound waves travel in perpetuity.

Creating your own endowment at the foundation is similar to blowing a trumpet into the air. Like the far-reaching waves of the notes, the effects of your endowment will carry unendingly to future generations.

A couple from the Diocese of Charlotte established an endowment to ensure that their annual giving to their parish would continue in perpetuity. They started the fund rather modestly, but plan to enlarge it with a bequest from their estate.

For now, at least they can see how their endowment works and what they can expect from it when they are gone.

We currently have more than 125 endowments at the foundation, and they are all managed prudently by investment professionals. These endowments provide support for a number of parishes, schools and programs in the diocese. The goal is to obtain both annual income and long-term growth.

It is the policy of the foundation to preserve endowment principal, with some portion of the earnings available to be used on an annual basis. This means our endowment funds will last. They will continue in perpetuity. And every name associated with every endowment will endure as well.

Would you like to do something lasting for your parish, school or another Catholic entity? You need look no further than our endowment program. This is the ideal way to add to one of our existing endowments or create a new endowment.

You will have the satisfaction of knowing that your gift will give in perpetuity, providing income for one of your dreams for years to come.

Twenty-two students, parents and faculty from Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School in Kernersville stand at an old city square in Stockholm, Sweden, July 14 as part of a tour of European cities. Led by Mike Streich, history department chair; Tara Porter, English department chair; and her husband, Dr. Tom Porter, a professor of Russian history, the students and parents experienced a high level of commentary and experience on their visits to cities including Hamburg and Leubeck, Germany; Stockholm; and Copenhagen, Denmark. The high school's summer foreign trips focus on both educational value and fun, and provide out-of-classroom experiences, such as touring a Holocaust memorial, a concentration camp and museums. Several of the students completed two semesters of Western Civilization for college credit.

Abbey professor selected for AP program reading

Dr. Coté assists with college board's AP Exams

BELMONT — Belmont Abbey College's Dr. Nathalie Coté was selected this summer to participate in the annual reading and scoring of the College Board's Advanced Placement Examinations in Psychology.

"It was wonderful to spend a week with people who love teaching psychology as much as I do," said Coté, an associate professor and current chair of the college's psychology department.

"The opportunity for college professors to mingle with high school teachers is rare, and I found it valuable," she said. "By scoring AP essays myself, I reassure myself that high-scoring Advanced Placement students do in fact understand psychology as well as college students who have taken my Introductory Psychology course, and I can assure colleagues of the validity of the AP program."

According to Coté, the group of readers included textbook authors, teaching-award winners, and even one of her college professors from 20 years ago. For a week, the group spent every day grading essays and every evening in professional development or meeting new friends and sharing teaching tips.

The AP Program, sponsored by the College Board, each year gives more than one million capable high school students an opportunity to take rigorous college-level courses and examinations and, based on their exam performances, they can receive credit and/or advanced placement when entering college.

Approximately 2.1 million examinations in 19 disciplines were evaluated by more than 7,500 readers from universities and high schools. Representing many of the finest academic institutions in the world, these men and women are some of the best high school and college educators in the United States and abroad.

Catholics come together for annual tent revival

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — On a hot, humid August night, a few hundred Catholics gathered at Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte, eager to have their spirits revived and their eyes opened to the wondrous love of Jesus Christ.

The sixth annual "Revival of the Spirit" tent revival, sponsored by the diocesan African American Affairs Ministry, was once again an uplifting experience for those who attended the week-end-long celebration Aug. 12-14.

The revival, this year themed "Christ in my life, all the days of my life," was designed to be reminiscent of the early days of outdoor preaching and was an opportunity to publicly worship in the spirit of the black church.

Franciscan Father James Goode preached fiery sermons during the Friday and Saturday evening services. He is a member of the Franciscan Province of the Immaculate Conception and the president of the National Black Catholic Apostolate for Life. When Father Goode was ordained in May 1972, he was the first black priest from the city of Roanoke, Va.

Msgr. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte, was the celebrant and homilist of the closing Mass on Sunday.

The gospel reading for the Saturday service was the parable from the Gospel of John in which Jesus heals the blind man. After he was healed, the man not only regained his vision, he also "saw" who Jesus was — the Son of Man.

The man's blindness was not the result of his parents' sin, nor his own, but rather he had been born blind "so that the works of God might be made visible through him" when he was healed, Father Goode said.

"All of us were born with some kind of affliction, some kind of setback ... so that God's work will be revealed in us," he said.

Father Goode said Jesus teaches us there are many ways we can be blind, such as spiritually or morally. Through God's healing power, we can regain our "sight."

As part of the healing service, Father Goode invited anyone in need of healing — physical, emotional or spiritual — to come forward for a special prayer. The front of the church and middle aisle quickly filled with revivalists.

"As a people of faith ... we must pick each other up if we are fallen, and we must comfort one another," said Father Goode. "We must care for one another and carry one another, because this is a part of our sacred tradition."

Catholic Scripture Study's (CSS) latest offering

THE BOOK OF REVELATION (THE APOCALYPSE)

Join Catholics around the world and delve into the newest Bible study from CSS. Dr. Scott Hahn and Mark Shea take us back to the ancient teaching of the early Church Fathers - that the Book of Revelation is key to understanding the Mass! The authors will help us understand the book's peculiar imagery and visions in light of Church teachings on the Holy Eucharist.

Plus, the Revelation study includes a five-lesson supplement series on Carl E. Olson's book "Will Catholics Be 'Left Behind'?" This study will examine the false notion of a secret "rapture" promoted in the best-selling "Left Behind" books. Join us as we learn what the Church teaches about the end times. This supplement series recently aired on EWTN.

Classes are open to all and begin September 14 (going through May) at Charlotte's St. Vincent de Paul Church on Park Road. Both morning and evening classes are available:

Wednesdays 10 - 11:30 a.m.*

OR

Thursdays 7 - 8:30 p.m.

*(Gospel of John morning class also offered)

Cost is $59.99 (approx. $2 per week) and includes all study materials. For information or a registration form, call Gail Buckley at (704) 965-0953 or visit www.catholicscripturestudy.com. Register by September 1 to receive materials prior to the first class.

Many diocesan parishes are hosting CSS classes this fall. To find one near you, visit www.catholicscripturestudy.com, click on "Find a Class" and search NC.

St. Ann Church still worship there and form the foundation of the parish family, serving in many of the church's ministries.

What St. Ann Church may have lacked in size over the years, it has more than made up for in prestige. Its founding pastor, Msgr. Michael J. Begley, became the first bishop for the Diocese of Charlotte in 1972. Another former pastor, Msgr. John McSweeney, is now pastor for St. Matthew Church, the largest in the diocese.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis was baptized by then-Msgr. Begley at St. Ann Church in 1957 and served as priest-in-residence during the summer of 1983.

"We are privileged to be part of a parish which has been at the center of the life of the Diocese of Charlotte since its beginning," said Father Conrad Hoover, pastor. "We are no longer among the largest, but we are filled with the spirit of compassion and hope."

At the conclusion of the Saturday evening Mass, Judeth Crowley, the late Bishop Begley's niece, told the congregation how her family had visited Charlotte during the construction of St. Ann Church. Crowley came to Charlotte from her home in Warwick, R.I., for the anniversary celebration.

"I'm delighted to see how the church has flourished in 50 years," she said.

Soon, St. Ann Church will flourish even more. A capital campaign is underway for a long-awaited renovation of the existing church building. The parish hopes to have a new façade and greatly refurbished interior completed in time for Christmas 2006.

A roundup of Scripture, readings, films and more

In sixth book, Harry Potter is growing up

REVIEWED BY JEAN GONZALEZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Harry Potter is growing up.

While his personal experiences continue to shape his moral judgment, Harry greatly appreciates the values of trust, loyalty, friendship, free will and, above all, love in his life. And judging by the outcome of J.K. Rowling's latest (and sixth) book, "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince," he will need those values to continue his fight against the Dark Lord, Voldemort.

In Rowling's 2003 installment of the magical series — Book 5, "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" — Harry was 15 and an angry young man, a typical teenager who seemed a little gawky, a little self-absorbed and full of angst. But by the end of the book readers saw a glimmer of change within Potter's attitude — a loving and generous spark that carried over to Book 6.

Now 16, Potter displays his budding maturity in his insights about his life, his friendships and his loyalty to his mentors.

Early in the book he ponders how his life would be different if Voldemort had gone after another family and not his own. In the middle of the book, he considers how dating can change friendships.

And throughout the novel he weighs his physical, mental and emotional strength and his need for a loved one to protect him.

There are critics of the Potter series who believe Rowling's novels and characters offer an invitation to study and participate in magic. There are others who recognize Christian values, and even biblical symbolism.

The Potter books are devoid of any religious references, much like J.R.R. Tolkien's "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy. But that is not to say there is no respect for Judeo-Christian values.

The prominent lesson Professor Dumbledore, headmaster of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, tries to impart to his pupil, Harry, is simply: Love makes all the difference in the world. Respect, understanding, compassion, loyalty, courage, strength and sacrifice — all should be rooted in love.

Book 6 also concentrates on promises and the issue of free will versus fulfillment of a prophecy (particularly the prophecy revealed in Book 5). Dumbledore reminds Harry that his own moral judgment, again rooted in love, should guide his life decisions.

That could be a powerful life lesson for teens in which peer pressure or indecent media messages might serve as their own "prophecy" or "destiny."

Rowling has a gifted way of writing for Harry, as each book's structure truly reflects Harry's age. While Book 1, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone," is a good fit for 11-year-old readers, this book fits best for older teen readers.

Adults will enjoy this book as well. Although it lags a bit in the middle where there is a lot of "snogging" — or, as Americans would say, "smooching" — among the teens, it is a tight and enjoyable read and a standout in the series.

And what about the half-blood prince? Adults, teens and preteens who were waiting for the midnight release of the book at a local Barnes and Noble had many theories about the prince and the book's plot. Of the many I overheard, none of them — including my own — were correct.

God's love, compassion knows no end

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

One of the most compelling scenes from "A Man for All Seasons," a movie about the life and death of St. Thomas More, focuses on an encounter between More and his protegee, Richard Rich.

The young lawyer has just betrayed his mentor in exchange for appointment as attorney general of Wales. Largely on the basis of his ambitious friend's false testimony, More is hauled off to prison in preparation for beheading.

When they meet face to face, More looks on his accuser and, with Christ's question from this Sunday's Gospel in mind, says sadly, "Why Richard, it profits a man nothing to give his soul for the whole world. But for Wales?"

When viewers watch this scene, we shake our heads in dismay at the folly of the compromise Rich has made. It seems so clearly to have been a fool's bargain: his integrity and the life of a loving friend in exchange for a relatively minor post in provincial government.

While most of us will never be put into such dramatic circumstances as these, the questions rise up from this Gospel: For what are we spending our lives? An acquisitive, image-driven culture? A "might-makes-right" approach to family life or patriotism? An overdeveloped need to be well thought of by others?

These and other manifestations of our tragic human gullibility about what's really important make clear how powerfully we are attracted to the illusion of control; how much, like Peter in the Gospel, we prefer our version of reality to God's. The bad news is that we fall for it over and over and over again.

The good news is that God's desire to draw us into communion with him — to give us blessings and happiness far deeper, more satisfying and more lasting than even our wildest imaginings — never runs out.

From tragedy, triumph

Singer feels his career success has been guided by faith

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Daniel Rodriguez, the classical singer who gained fame for singing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at New York Yankees games after the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks on New York City, is enjoying a successful career.

But that career, in his view, "has been guided more than anything I've ever done."

Rodriguez has released a new album of sacred and spiritual songs, called "In the Presence." It includes hymns he sang at church such as "Joyful, Joyful," "Amazing Grace" and both English and Spanish versions of "Nearer My God to Thee."

The Spanish-language version, he said, is "the one I've sung the most" over the years in church.

It also includes such classical pieces as "Ave Maria" plus "Panis Angelicus" and "Pie Jesu," duets with fellow Catholic singer Lea Salonga, and the contemporary classic "On Eagle's Wings."

"My life has always been based on my faith," hence the choice of sacred music for a new collection, Rodriguez told Catholic News Service in a telephone interview from New York.

"My life has always been a series of happy coincidences, being at the right place at the right time," he added, "and having the faith to say, 'This is where I'm supposed to be.'"

Out of the tragedy of the terror attacks on New York, he noted, came the opportunity to sing the national anthem while a nationwide audience was watching the Yankees in the 2001 baseball playoffs and World Series. From that exposure came the chance to record a CD, "The Spirit of America," and the opportunity to study with famed tenor Placido Domingo.

Because of the comparisons made between Rodriguez and another classical balladeer, Mario Lanza, Rodriguez was able to record a CD, "From the Heart," that evoked Lanza's memory, if not quite his style. And the riches that came with fame permitted Rodriguez to leave his job as a New York City police officer and buy a house in Florida for his mother.

"In the Presence," as he sees it, is a chance to make a return for the gifts bestowed upon him. Still, it was not the easiest task.

The arranger for three songs on the album, Johnnie Carl, committed suicide a week before Christmas inside the Crystal Cathedral in Anaheim, Calif., where he worked as one of its music directors. Rodriguez's aunt, Concepcion Padilla, "who was central to my religious upbringing," he said, also died during the recording of the album.

Rodriguez dedicated "In the Presence" to them.

"She was a devout Christian," Rodriguez said of his aunt. "She got to hear the album, the rough mixes, the day before she passed."

During his studies with Domingo, Rodriguez said he learned that "singing with an operatic voice does not necessarily make you an opera singer."

He told the story of an opera singer who sang a piece at a recital, and the audience jumped up and cried, "Sing it again! Sing it again!" The singer sang the song a second time, after which the crowd pleaded once more, "Sing it again! Sing it again!"

Taken aback, the singer asked in astonishment, "How many times do you want me to sing this?" The crowd replied, "Until you get it right!"

Prior to his singing at Yankees games, Rodriguez said he considered himself "an equal opportunity New York fan," partial to both the Yankees and the Mets. He recounted what he called "a 'Seinfeld' episode moment" when he sang before a Yankees-Mets interleague game at Yankee Stadium in early 2001. His mother, "a huge Mets fan," was watching her son perform.

After his rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner," Rodriguez and his mother went to their assigned seats only to find others sitting there. Rather than roust them, Rodriguez asked to be shown some unoccupied seats. Instead, he and his mother were taken to Yankees owner George Steinbrenner's suite.

"We got to Steinbrenner's box, and my mom takes off her jacket, and she's got on this big Mets T-shirt," Rodriguez recalled. "Thank God Steinbrenner wasn't there."

"Whenever the Mets would score or have a rally, my mom would stand up and wave her arms and yell, 'Go Mets!'" he said. "I'd have to get up and tell her, 'Mom, please, there are other people trying to enjoy the game.'"

A GROWING ORDER

Two profess to Secular Franciscan Order

CHARLOTTE — The St. Maximilian Kolbe Fraternity recently received the profession of two candidates in the Secular Franciscan Order.

Marie Cordero and Kathleen Zuckerman, both parishioners of St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte, completed two-and-a-half years of discernment and study through the order's formation program before making their rite of profession during a Mass at Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte Aug. 6.

Capuchin Franciscan Father Jude Duffy, pastor and the fraternity's spiritual director, celebrated the Mass.

The Secular Franciscan Order, formerly known as the Third Order of St. Francis, is an official order within the Catholic Church, and was established by St. Francis of Assisi early in the 13th century.

Members do not live in community; however, members gather together in fraternity on a regular basis. By profession, they promise to follow a rule of life approved and confirmed by Pope Paul VI in June of 1978.

Currently, there are five inquirers in formation for the fraternity, which gathers the first Sunday of each month, 2-4 p.m., at Our Lady of Consolation Church for prayer, socials, ongoing formation and business.

Hibernians gather for convention in Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — Hibernians from across the Southeast recently gathered in Charlotte for their third biannual convention.

Around 125 members of Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians from divisions in North and South Carolina, Virginia and Florida attended the event held at the Hilton Charlotte University Place hotel July 23-25.

The AOH, founded in New York in 1836, describes itself as the oldest lay Catholic organization in the United States and is comprised of Catholic men of Irish birth or descent. The LAOH, comprised of Catholic women of Irish decent, was founded in Omaha, Neb., in 1884 as the Daughters of Erin. The group officially became the LAOH in 1984.

During the Charlotte convention, members elected new state officers to two-year terms and celebrated their Irish-American and Catholic heritage with live Irish music, Irish dancing and Mass celebrated by Oratorian Father Joe Pearse, a member of the Rock Hill Oratory in Rock Hill, S.C., and chaplain of the AOH and LAOH in North Carolina.

The AOH has divisions in Charlotte, Greensboro and Raleigh. The LAOH has divisions in Charlotte, Greensboro, Wilmington and Raleigh.

The Hibernians are active throughout the Diocese of Charlotte, providing assistance to Catholic schools, parishes and other Catholic organizations.

We don't know Roe

Most Americans don't understand details of case

The Supreme Court confirmation battle is underway, and the nominee's views about Roe v. Wade have already been the subject of controversy.

The strategy of abortion supporters in the Senate and among interest groups will be to present Roe as mainstream and to label those who oppose it as extreme. Some will assert that a Supreme Court justice who opposes Roe is not qualified to serve on the court.

Of course, this conveniently ignores the fact that the current chief justice of the United States was one of the two dissenting votes in the 7-2 Roe v. Wade decision in 1973. Moreover, the plaintiff, "Jane Roe" (Norma McCorvey) now rejects the decision and works to reverse it. (I received her into the Catholic Church in 1998.)

Another significant fact is that the American people have never supported the Roe v. Wade policy of legal abortion throughout all nine months of pregnancy. Polling on abortion consistently reveals that the majority of Americans support the legality of the procedure in cases of rape, incest or threats to the mother's life and physical health, but that support quickly declines below the majority when other reasons are brought forward. (Several years ago, Gallup did an excellent overview of multiple polls of Americans on abortion since Roe.)

Because abortions for physical health, rape and incest constitute a minuscule fraction of the procedures, it is true to say that most Americans oppose most abortions.

An analysis of polling questions done by Professor Raymond Adamek shows that most questions about Roe v. Wade misrepresent the decision. The questions state that Roe allowed abortion during the first three months of pregnancy. This is the truth, but not the whole truth.

Here are the words of the Roe vs. Wade decision:

"(a) For the stage prior to approximately the end of the first trimester, the abortion decision and its effectuation must be left to the medical judgment of the pregnant woman's attending physician.

"(b) For the stage subsequent to approximately the end of the first trimester, the State, in promoting its interest in the health of the mother, may, if it chooses, regulate the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health.

"(c) For the stage subsequent to viability the State, in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life, may, if it chooses, regulate, and even proscribe, abortion except where necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother" [410 U.S. 113, 114].

As the University of Detroit Law Review pointed out, "The Supreme Court's decisions ... allowed abortion on demand throughout the entire nine months of pregnancy" (Paul B. Linton, Enforcement of State Abortion Statutes after Roe: A State-by-State Analysis, Vol. 67, Issue 2, Winter 1990).

Now is a perfect moment for educating the public about what Roe v. Wade really said. When they find out, they will have a new understanding about who the real "extremists" are in the Supreme Court battle.

Pope says Christians must acknowledge dependence on God

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Like a small child still totally dependent on his mother, but old enough to recognize his need, Christians must acknowledge their dependence on God, Pope Benedict XVI said.

Holding his weekly general audience Aug. 10 at the Vatican, the pope offered reflections on Psalm 131's opening verses, which reject pride in one's self-sufficiency.

Instead, the psalm presents a proper attitude toward God as being "like a weaned child," still and quiet on the mother's lap.

The image of the mother and child, the pope said, is a "sign of the tender and maternal love of God."

The child in the psalm "is tied to his mother with a very personal and intimate relationship, not merely one of physical contact or because of the need for food," the pope said. "It is a more conscious bond, even though it is immediate and spontaneous.

"This is the ideal parable of true spiritual childhood, of abandoning oneself to God, not in a blind or automatic way, but serenely and with responsibility," he said.

The psalmist contrasts his dependence with the pride and conceit of those who busy themselves with the "great things" of this world, the pope said.

Humble trust in God, Pope Benedict said, leads to "security, life and peace, and it extends from the present to the future, now and forever."

The Vatican estimated about 6,000 people attended the audience. Many were youths, sporting World Youth Day shirts or hats, who stopped at the Vatican on their way to Cologne, Germany, for the celebration of World Youth Day Aug. 16-21.

Making good marriages great

Maybe I've just watched too many MGM musicals in my life, but I think most marriages are good.

I believe that most people enter marriage wanting the best for their spouses and themselves. They want their love to last forever. They hope life won't be too hard and that they too can have the American dream of children, a home and a happy life.

These are good things to which to aspire. The Catholic Church has similar desires for married couples but it goes further — the church wants good marriages to become great marriages.

How can a good marriage become great? Our faith suggests how — by knowing and loving God, and by living in a way that reflects that relationship. As Christians, the starting point for all human relationships is our relationship with God. It is only in light of that love that we can love the other person fully.

As members of the body of Christ, we are called to love as Christ loves — faithfully, generously and permanently. That's a huge calling, but grace makes it possible.

This common Christian vocation to love God and neighbor takes on a unique focus in the lives of married couples. Its uniqueness is related to God's original gift to humanity: God blessed man and woman to be "no longer two but one flesh," and said, "Be fruitful and multiply."

The couple's shared vocation is embodied in the unitive and procreative nature of marital sexuality. To make a good Christian marriage great, these two aspects of marital sexuality must be understood, nurtured and lived.

The marriage bond is formed by a free act of the will, and nurtured by selfless love. That means putting your spouse's needs before your own. If both spouses strive to be mindful of each other, a real communion of persons can be built. Not "me," but "we" can become second nature and their bond will become strong enough to blossom into a greater love for all human life.

The church teaches that marriage involves a radical act of giving. This is nowhere more clear than in the marital embrace. Husband and wife give all of themselves to each other — body, mind and soul.

Pope John Paul II has said that "nothing that is part of themselves can be excluded from this gift." Their fertility, their power to create a new person to love in union with each other, is part of that gift.

Here lies the reason why contraception is wrong — it breaks that "inseparable connection" between the two meanings of the conjugal act, the unitive and the procreative (Humanae Vitae, No. 12). Doing something that is against what God designed us for can only harm us.

Living your marriage according to God's design can only make you happy. It can make your good marriage great.

Protect human life at all stages

Embryonic stem-cell research immoral, deadly

Support for the practice of destroying human embryos for stem cell research received an endorsement recently from The Charlotte Observer, as it congratulated Sen. Bill Frist of Tennessee on his recent change of mind: "Right Move by Frist," Aug. 2. The editorial, however, overlooked an important moral dimension of this critical issue, which must be addressed.

The subhead of the editorial captured the essence of Sen. Frist's reasoning: "It's better for embryos to go to research, not down the drain." The truth is that neither option is better: neither discarding the embryos, nor consigning them to research. Both options are equally immoral. In both instances, an innocent human life is destroyed.

Every human life starts out as an embryo. The genetic makeup of the person is already given at conception. What remains is a continuum of development between the embryo stage and a fully formed adult.

All along the way, however, it is the same human person who is in the process of maturing. Whether the human being is called an embryo, fetus, child, teenager or adult — depending on his stage of development — each is the same creation of God, and therefore enjoys an inviolable right to life.

The human embryo is not an object of experimentation, but a living human being. Pope John Paul II, in his 1995 encyclical on "The Value and Inviolability of Human Life," saw, in the familiar question that God put to Cain after he killed his brother Abel, an appropriate question for today's society: "What have you done? The voice of your brother's blood is crying to me from the ground." (Genesis 4:10)

John Paul II wrote: "The use of human embryos or fetuses as objects of experimentation constitutes a crime against their dignity as human beings who have a right to the same respect owed to a child once born, just as to every person." (n. 63).

The Observer editorial concludes with a call to action: "Science and government must work together to create ethical and legal guidelines for this research." Yes, our society will have a dialogue on the important topic of stem cell research. But the viewpoint of science and the viewpoint of government are not enough. The moral question of the illicitness of taking innocent human life must also be addressed. No discussion will be valid or acceptable without a consideration of this moral perspective.

Some polls may indicate that most Americans are in favor of embryonic stem cell research. But the moral question remains: Is there ever any justifiable reason to destroy an innocent human life, at any stage of that individual's life?

Accepting our new immigrant brothers and sisters

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE
HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

Bishop William Houck, president of the Catholic Church Extension Society, which serves mission dioceses, wrote in the July edition of Extension Magazine:

"Do you ever wonder why Jesus did not tell his disciples to go and make disciples of some nations rather than go and make disciples of all nations? Do you think we sometimes have the mentality or even act as though Jesus said, 'Go and take care of your own group of folks'?"

"We are challenged in our time with the unprecedented influx of newcomers from various Hispanic countries. Some of us still find it difficult to accept these new cultures genuinely into our lives."

As I read this I wondered how many of us ever ponder the profound meaning of the word "accept." The word's Latin root means "to take to yourself," which creates the image of drawing a person into your arms as in an embrace.

Along this same line of thinking, accepting a person creates a solidarity with that person, which Pope John Paul II described as being one with another because we share the same humanity. To be human is to feel the humanity of another as our own.

To understand the ramifications of the pope's idea of "solidarity," allow me to use a personal example.

"Acceptance" and "solidarity": They imply having a heart that can easily be crushed upon seeing something inhuman happen to another person.

If, as Bishop Houck suggests, we are to accept the new influx of Hispanics to the United States, the first place to start is with our heart.

Many of our grandparents and great-grandparents came from other countries and sacrificed their lives for us. Most of those grandparents were laborers, much like the many Hispanic laborers we see today.

"Acceptance" means seeing these Hispanic laborers as our own sacrificing grandparents, who were responsible for the quality of life and moral principles we enjoy.

In the same magazine, Msgr. Virgil Elizondo, a noted writer on social justice, gave yet another profound insight into "acceptance." He wrote: "There's a beauty in seeing differences not as divisive, but as enriching and life-giving. ... If we do that I think we can give an example to the world."

To paraphrase Msgr. Elizondo, Hispanic immigrants possess rich gifts of humanity that add to our own humanity. The more we embrace and accept these people, the more we become a newer and fuller humanity.

How to encourage prayers and Masses for the dead

Q. I am a priest, 76 years old, and would like your comment on what I see as a decline in giving offerings for Masses for the dead. The one funeral Mass, of course, has eternal and infinite value, but my personal opinion is that souls can give merits of additional Masses to whomever he or she wishes. Is that bad theology?

Some, instead of Masses, just give a few bucks to their favorite charity. Certainly missionaries could use the Mass stipends for deceased family members and friends. Or is that idea outdated?

How can we encourage continued prayers and Masses for the dead? (Maryland)

A. I've heard other priests make similar comments, but I have to say that hasn't been my usual pastoral experience. In the past, some people have held what are, in my opinion, rather dubious attitudes about this.

One man asked me years ago how to bequeath $5,000 for Masses for himself after he died. I suggested he might leave part of that for education of a priest, who would remember him at Mass for years; the man obviously didn't buy the idea.

I have seen a more balanced Catholic approach to leaving or giving money for Masses, recognizing that other corporal and spiritual works of mercy are also important and valid, and perhaps less self-centered forms of prayer for the living and dead. Maybe that explains in part the "favorite charity" idea you mention.

A valuable insight for us Catholics is the centuries-old practice of the church, which prays constantly and in many ways for those who have died. The Eucharistic Prayer in every Mass is a good example.

At least two excellent reasons exist for this Christian tradition that relate to your concerns. First, prayers for the dead, as all our prayers, go to a God who has no beginning or end; for God there is no past or future. All, from the beginning of time to the end of the world, is one eternally present moment for him.

Whenever we pray, therefore, recognizing the eternal and universal reach of God's providence, our prayers are not limited by time; they extend back to the beginning of an individual's life, through to the end and into eternity.

This is not speculation. It follows from what we believe about God. Prayers we offer years after a person's death can be "applied" by God to when that person was still alive. This understanding, clumsy as human words always are when dealing with things of God, is reflected often in the church's liturgies and prayers for the deceased.

Second, and more important, our prayers for loved ones who have died are also, in fact primarily, prayers of thanks, praising God for his unfailing goodness, particularly to that person and to all others who were blessed by his or her life. It is a wonderful and reverent way of acknowledging God's graciousness and wisdom, shown in our care and service of one another.

For both these reasons, and there are more, our continued prayers for and with those who have gone before us make excellent psychological and spiritual common sense. In my experience, people of faith easily pick up on them if we help them understand what they are doing.

SPRUCE PINE — A small church in the mountains recently celebrated a big achievement.

With months of renovation to the interior and exterior finally complete, Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated the rededication Mass at St. Lucien Church in Spruce Pine Aug. 19. The event drew Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin, former pastors and other priests of the diocese.

"We've had a lot of changes over the years, but never a complete transformation of the church," said Christiane Buchanan, a parishioner of 59 years and native of France. "This is a beautiful experience for us."

"We had a very nice church before Father (Christopher) Gober showed up," said parishioner Jeff Hofschulz. "Now we have a small church in the mountains capable of being a cathedral."

A new altar was installed and the sanctuary raised, walls were knocked out, the flat ceiling became vaulted with wooden beams added and the entrance of the church was redesigned.

"The rite for rededication of a church says that in order to qualify for rededication there has to be a complete restoration of the interior of the church," said Bishop Jugis during his homily.

"Father Gober, with the help of your parishioners, you have accomplished ... a marvelous, complete restoration and enlargement of the inside

Bob Hope Memorial Garden opens at San Fernando Mission

MISSION HILLS, Calif. (CNS) — Two years to the day after legendary entertainer Bob Hope died, family members and friends attended a dedication July 27 of the Bob Hope Memorial Garden at the San Fernando Mission in Mission Hills, created as an inspirational final resting place for the beloved comedian.

Adjacent to the mission chapel and overlooking the cemetery, the English-style flower garden decorated with religious statues and meditation benches opened to the public two days later.

"For most of his hundred years on old planet Earth and for all of his public life, Bob lived in the San Fernando Valley," said San Fernando Mission director Msgr. Francis Weber during the dedication ceremony.

"On his many travels to the far corners of the world to entertain the nation's troops, his returning plane banked over the Old Mission as it made its way to Hollywood-Burbank (Airport)," Msgr. Weber added. "We welcome him home and rejoice that he will henceforth share his many memories with his friends and his fellow travelers."

The dedication ceremony and Mass, with Los Angeles Cardinal Roger M. Mahony presiding, was the culmination of months of planning and construction at the historic San Fernando Mission.

Hope's wife, Dolores, chose the mission for her husband's burial place because of his abiding love for the San Fernando Valley, where the couple raised four children and attended St. Charles Borromeo Church in North Hollywood.

The event drew two cardinals (including Cardinal Theodore E. McCarrick of Washington), Bishop Michael J. Bransfield of Wheeling-Charleston, W.Va., and priests from across the country. Other guests included actor Mickey Rooney and Kathryn Crosby, Bing Crosby's widow.

Before entering the garden, visitors pass by the Our Lady of Hope statue, a replica of a famous 17th-century sculpture of Mary at the Basilica of Our Lady of Hope in Pontmain, France, which was a family favorite.

"The statue was very meaningful to my mother — our dad did bring a little bit of hope to many," said Linda Hope. To the right of the entrance gate is a work-in-progress memorial wall with bas-reliefs depicting important milestones in Bob Hope's life.

Dolores Hope's mother, Teresa Kelly DeFina, and the Hopes' deceased son, Anthony J. Hope, are currently interred in the garden, with additional places for other family members.

USCCB official lauds FDA decision on emergency contraception

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration's decision Aug. 26 to keep Plan B, an emergency contraceptive also known as the morning-after pill, as a prescription-only drug was called "welcome news" by a U.S. bishops' pro-life official.

Barr Laboratories, the maker of Plan B, had petitioned the FDA to let the drug be sold over the counter (OTC).

"It is welcome news that the FDA seems to be taking seriously concerns about the impact on adolescents of making Plan B available over the counter," said Gail Quinn, executive director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

"Recent studies in California and Scotland had clear results; pregnancy and abortion rates were no different among women with immediate access to emergency contraceptives (ECs) and a control group who had to request a prescription from a doctor," she said Aug. 29.

"Clearly claims of ECs' benefits to women are overstated at best, while their potentially lethal risk to human life at its earliest stages remains a grave concern," Quinn said.

In announcing the decision, FDA Commissioner Lester Crawford said the FDA had to wrestle with, among other things, whether the prescription and OTC versions of the same drug could be marketed in a single package, whether age could be used as the only criterion to sell a drug over the counter, and how an age restriction would be enforced.

Crawford announced the start of a 60-day comment period on the matter.

"These regulatory and policy questions are too profound and cut across too many different products to be made behind closed doors," he said.

Pope meets with Iraqi foreign minister, discusses constitution

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI met with Iraq's foreign minister on the day of the deadline for Iraqi political leaders to agree on a new constitution.

Foreign Minister Hoshiyar Zebari met with Pope Benedict Aug. 25 at the papal summer residence in Castel Gandolfo, and with the Vatican's secretary of state, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, in the Vatican.

Discussions centered on the current situation in Iraq, including how the draft constitution, which was still awaiting approval by Iraq's National Assembly, would guarantee the freedom of religion.

Passionist Father Ciro Benedettini, Vatican spokesman, said talks with the pope and at the Vatican "made particular reference to the text of the constitution" and "to the important subject of religious freedom."

Some church leaders in Iraq are concerned the draft constitution's reference to Islam as the source of all laws for the country might translate into discrimination against Christians and other religious groups.

Father Benedettini said the talks among the pope, Cardinal Sodano and Zebari underlined the idea that the rebuilding of Iraq "must come about in an atmosphere of dialogue that involves all religious groups and various segments of society."

The same day, political leaders in Iraq were due to submit the final draft of a new constitution that would be voted on by the country's National Assembly and in a national referendum by mid-October.

Shiite and Kurd negotiators had agreed on a final draft, while Sunni representatives criticized provisions on federalism, which the Sunnis fear would lead to too much control by the Shiites in the South and the Kurds in the North.

Pope offers concern for Katrina's victims, prayers for relief workers

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI expressed his spiritual closeness and concern for all those affected by Hurricane Katrina in the United States, and he offered special prayers for those engaged in relief efforts.

He assured all those affected by what was considered the most destructive storm to hit the country in decades of "his closeness in prayer" and "divine blessings of strength and consolation."

In a telegram sent by the Vatican's secretary of state, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the pope said he was "deeply saddened by the tragic consequences of the recent hurricane."

"The Holy Father commends the deceased to the loving mercy of almighty God, and upon their grieving families he invokes divine blessings of strength and consolation," the telegram said.

Pope Benedict also offered special prayers for rescue workers "and all those involved in providing assistance to the victims of the disaster."

He "encouraged them to persevere in their efforts to bring relief and support," said the text.

While hundreds were feared dead, millions of people were in need of assistance — including some who remained stranded on rooftops — as widespread flooding and storms rendered homes uninhabitable, downed power lines and blocked major roads. Food and clean water were running low in the hardest hit areas of New Orleans, where 80 percent of the city remained under water, and in Mississippi and Alabama.

Fiesta con Jesus

Renewal day celebrates Hispanic faith, culture in Diocese of Charlotte

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — Hispanic Catholics recently were made to feel more a part of the spirit of the Catholic Church in North Carolina, thanks to the hard work of the diocese's Hispanic Ministry.

An estimated 4,000 Hispanic Catholics gathered at the Charlotte Merchandise Mart Aug. 13 for Fiesta con Jesus, the first such "renewal day" for Spanish-speaking Catholics.

"We wanted to reach out to the Hispanic community and lift up their morale," said Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott, director for diocesan Hispanic ministry. "There was a real spirit of celebration."

The components for the fiesta came from its name: faith, intercession, evangelization, sacraments, transformation and amor (love).

In addition to several presentations on spiritual themes, vendors sold handmade goods and Latin music was performed throughout the day by a variety of local talent.

The day's events concluded with a Mass featuring Bishop Emeritus Agustín Alejo Román Rodríguez of Miami as homilist.

Sister Inkrott said many of the participants took advantage of the opportunity to go to confession with priests who spoke Spanish. Bishop Román, a native of Cuba, also participated in hearing confessions.

One participant said she was thankful to have Bishop Peter J. Jugis participate in the fiesta, because it was "like a statement of being accepted."

"It was a wonderful gathering of Hispanics," said Sister Inkrott. "They felt welcome, having Spanish-speaking priests and bishops involved with the event."

Parishioners of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville celebrate the Aug. 10 feast day of St. Lawrence after Mass Aug. 15. Dinner and dessert was served. St. Lawrence was a deacon under Pope St. Sixtus II. Four days after the pope was put to death, St. Lawrence and four clerics suffered martyrdom, probably during the persecution of Emperor Valerian. The church built over St. Lawrence's tomb became one of the seven principal churches in Rome and a favorite place for Roman pilgrimages.

Church rededicated in Spruce Pine of this church," he said. "I am grateful to you, and to all the parishioners of St. Lucien, for this marvelous church, this gift to our Lord."

It was the liturgical guidelines in the Roman Missal as well as the Year of the Eucharist that inspired the renovations, said Father Gober, who became administrator in July 2003 and pastor in July 2004.

"I wanted to see what we could do as a parish to center ourselves around the Eucharist. That really drove the renovations," said Father Gober. "To have a proper sanctuary with the Blessed Sacrament at the center of the church invites people to have Christ at the center of their lives."

The overall beauty of the new church draws people deeper into the mystery of the Eucharist, said Father Gober.

"For many years this church has enjoyed the presence of Christ," said Bishop Jugis. "But now being completely restored and made new, we are welcoming Jesus Christ once again into this new sacred space."

"The celebration of the Mass, the celebration of the holy Eucharist, is what has and will continue to consecrate this place and make it holy," he said.

"The greatest comment I heard from a parishioner was that the new church made it easier to pray and she didn't want to leave," said Father Gober.

Family spirit

The parishioners were very active in the refurbishing of the church.

"All of them made their own contributions," said Father Gober.

There is a spirit, he said, that is evident in the 85-household parish.

"I like the smallness of it (the church). You know everybody," said Greg Woody, a parishioner for 20 years.

"We're the friendliest little parish," said Hofschulz. "We help one another. We watch out for one another."

"The first time I came to Mass (59 years ago), there were six people," said Buchanan. "Since then we've gained a lot of new parishioners, but the sense of family hasn't changed."

After the dedication, parishioners and clergy gathered to share an outdoor dinner and memories. Bishop Jugis mingled with parishioners who remembered him from when he celebrated Mass in 1989 while the parish awaited a new pastor.

"Coming back to the church, it is certainly different today," said Bishop Jugis. "Not only are there many new faces, but the interior design is new."

Growing in faith

It was in March 1935 that Bishop

Father Christopher Gober, pastor of St. Lucien Church in Spruce Pine, incenses the church during the rededication Mass Aug. 19.

William J. Hafey of North Carolina first received a gift of property on which the present church stands. Originally named St. Bernadette, it became the first Catholic church to serve Mitchell, Avery and Yancey counties. The first Mass was celebrated June 28, 1935.

Construction to build a new church and rectory began in November 1939, and the church was completed in April of the next year. At the order of the bishop, the church was renamed St. Lucien because the principal donors placed as a condition that the church be named in memory of their daughter, Lucien Price. The new church and rectory were dedicated and blessed Aug. 17, 1940.

Glenmary priests took responsibility for the church in 1956, with an energetic period of evangelization following, including the church's first renovation.

"We gained a lot of new people, and the social hall became part of the church," said Buchanan.

The Glenmary priests remained until 1968. Diocesan priests have served the Spruce Pine parish since.

The church was again remodeled in the late 1960s. Increasingly larger crowds at Mass — both residents and visitors — led the parish to plan a building program in 1985, which involved the construction of a new rectory and an expansion of the church.

Ground was broken for the rectory in 1987 and the house was completed within six months. The former rectory was transformed into the parish social hall, complete with offices and classrooms.

St. Lucien Church experienced continued growth over the next decade. Expansion and renovations to the church more than doubled its seating capacity and improved the facility. Also, a house adjacent to the property was purchased and the parking lot was paved.

"I don't know what we'll do if we grow some more," said Buchanan. "I guess the church will have to grow some more."

"We went from a small church of 10 seats to 120 seats," said Bernice Trzpis, a parishioner of 20 years. "It's been a lot of hard work, but we've come a long way and look what we have today. We've been blessed by God."

WORLD YOUTH DAY

'We Have Come to Worship Him'

Tribulation and triumph unites world's youth

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — What happened when 1 million Catholics converged on Cologne, Germany for World Youth Day 2005?

Hundreds of thousands of young people camped out in sleeping bags in Marienfeld, a former open-cast mining area 15 miles west of Cologne. Mass transit trains were delayed and stations were shut down due to a lack of oxygen.

During the opening Mass Aug. 14, some pilgrims who were standing in the overflow section were unable to receive Communion.

"Instead we began shaking hands, hugging and giving high fives to the hundreds of other pilgrims that passed by," said Corein Brown, assistant director of campus ministry for Belmont Abbey College.

Brown was part of a group of pilgrims that included 15 young people, the director and associate director for youth ministry from the Diocese of Charlotte; six members of the Belmont Abbey community; and three young people from the Diocese of Evansville, Ind. and chaperones.

"World Youth Day was very faith-filled," said Peg Ruble, associate director for youth ministry for the Diocese of Charlotte. "The pope was a distant experience, but the encounter with Jesus in the faces of other pilgrims was constant and clear."

The young pilgrims at World Youth Day, themed "We Have Come to Worship Him," were amazed at the different ways Catholics celebrate the same Mass.

"(In Germany) they take Communion in the hand, while we always take it in the mouth, and our women always wear head coverings," said Fitzgerald Umah, president of the Catholic student association at the University of Lagos, Nigeria.

Mass is much livelier in Nigeria, said

Pilgrims from the Diocese of Charlotte proudly display the diocesan flag during the World Youth Day 2005 celebrations in Cologne, Germany. Twenty-one young people, ages 18-24, and their chaperones attended the six-day event, along with an estimated 1 million young Catholics from 193 nations.

"We walked side by side as a small group of 18 in a sea of a million and we realized that (we) were now sharing ... in Christ's love."

Amaka Ogbuenu.

"Young people in our host parishes have come up to us and said that we have brought them back to their faith by showing that Mass can be youthful," said Ogbuenu. "They sang and danced with us and they liked it, telling us that German Mass is traditionally more conservative and thus has less to offer for young people."

Many pilgrims were eager to bring the customs they witnessed back to their own parishes.

"When we pray, we are very spiritual," said Shirley Fernandes of Pune, India. "We always close our eyes, fold our hands and pray, but here I think the way of praying is very different. It's more through singing, more lively, and that's what I'd like to take back to India."

Franziska Broich helped host Polish pilgrims in a village near Cologne.

"They have a such a strong faith," she said. "I think we can learn from it. We were so impressed when they came on the first evening, and they prayed for a half an hour before their dinner. We said, 'How can that be, they are praying and singing and that it is so much fun for them?' So we want to learn from them."

Despite the crowds and inconvenience, Jim Arnold of St. Patrick Church in Milford, Pa., said he left with "a stronger feeling that Catholicism is right, that it crosses boundaries, that there is a common belief, and it's a wonderful feeling to take all of this and bring it back home to that small part of the world, and to share it with the people that we live with and are closest with."

"One thing that especially impacted me was the way the German people took our antics in stride," said Ruble. "They were stuck on the trains, in the streets, in restaurants and shops with these throngs of enthusiastic, sweaty, singing youth ... and they smiled. God bless them."

The group from North Carolina walked with pilgrims from Italy, Kosovo, Nigeria and Ireland. They danced with drummers from Ecuador, Guatemala and Madagascar.

"We walked side by side as a small group of 18 in a sea of a million and we realized that (we) were now sharing in the history of Germany, sharing in the celebration of our Catholic unity and sharing in Christ's love," Brown said.

church history and feature classical composers including Bach, Mozart, Schubert and (Thomas) Tallis," said Dr. Larry Stratemeyer, director of music at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte.

Stratemeyer and Tiffany Gallozzi, music director at St. Barnabas Church in Arden, are preparing the choir comprised of about 75 parishioners from churches around the Diocese of Charlotte.

"More than likely, you will know someone in the choir. And they have put in an exorbitant amount of preparation," said Gallozzi.

"We've been rehearsing all month," said Stratemeyer Aug. 29. "It's a remarkable effort on their behalf to sing music that is beautiful and challenging. Their enthusiasm has been high."

Gallozzi will lead her choir in performing the same music at the opening of the fourth annual Triumph of the Cross, to be held at St. Barnabas Church Sept. 9-10. Andrew Davis, director of music at the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, is serving as the organ accompanist.

"It will be traditional Catholic music from various time periods put in a contemporary format," said Gallozzi. "It really shows the beauty of music that God has given us."

The free concert at the Eucharistic Congress, expected to run 60-90 minutes, is "an opportunity to experience live choral music, which is a treat," said Stratemeyer.

"The selections are all wonderful, very likable music," he said, adding that some pieces specifically honor the Eucharist.

The Eucharistic Congress will be "a time of celebration, adoration and teaching centered on the mystery of the Eucharist," according to Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

In addition to the program of sacred music, Friday evening will feature eucharistic adoration and a talk by actor Jim Caviezel, who portrayed Jesus in last year's film "The Passion of the Christ."

Saturday will begin with a eucharistic procession from St. Peter Church in Charlotte to the convention center. The procession will feature choirs, Catholic organizations, youth groups and parishioners from all 92 parishes and missions in the diocese. The monstration carried by Bishop Jugis through uptown Charlotte was blessed by Pope John Paul II.

The congress will feature seminars, speakers and activities for adults, children and youths, and conclude with a Mass Saturday afternoon.

Several shorter pieces of music will be extracted from the Friday concert for use during the closing Mass.

Third Movement: Communion

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 23

As we began our discussion of the Liturgy of the Eucharist a few weeks ago, we discovered that the drama of our redemption is unfolded in three movements during the holy sacrifice of the Mass: the offertory, the consecration and the reception of holy Communion.

In the offertory, not only are bread and wine presented and offered, but more importantly, we offer ourselves to the Father along with Christ who offers himself. In the offertory we present ourselves for sacrifice with Christ; in the consecration we die with him. We apply his death to ourselves that we may share his resurrection and glory.

And in holy Communion, we find that we have not died, but that we have come to life. In a certain sense, the substance of bread and wine must be sacrificed, must cease to exist, so that it may become the body and blood of Christ. In the same way, our old habits of sin must also be sacrificed so that we might have new life in Christ.

Let us now turn to the Communion Rite to inspect this third movement of the Liturgy of the Eucharist.

The Communion Rite begins at the conclusion of the Eucharistic Prayer. The faithful now stand and, at the invitation of the celebrant, sing or recite the Lord's Prayer.

It is important to note that there is no instruction in the Roman Missal to join hands during this prayer or during any prayer of the Mass. However, if you wish to hold hands with your neighbor, please keep in mind that: your neighbor may not wish to hold your hand (many are uncomfortable holding hands) and, since there is no universal instruction to do so, this gesture is not universally practiced in all Catholic churches.

So if you visit another Catholic church, do not be surprised if they do not hold hands during the Lord's Prayer.

From the most ancient historical documents and records of theologians and saints, the Lord's Prayer was included in the Mass prior to receiving holy Communion. It is fitting that this prayer is placed between the Eucharistic Prayer and reception of holy Communion since: 1) the seven petitions of the Lord's Prayer summarize the petitions offered in the Eucharistic Prayer and 2) the Lord's Prayer is the proper prayer of the whole Catholic Church, uniting and preparing the faithful for divine communion (Cf. CCC #2770).

In the Mass, the celebrant invites us to pray to our heavenly Father with filial boldness, since it was Jesus, the Son of God, who taught us to call God "our Father."

Guest Column

FATHER MATTHEW BUETTNER
GUEST COLUMNIST

Through the sacrament of baptism, we truly have become adopted children of the heavenly Father through his Son.

Therefore, when "we pray to the Father, we are in communion with him and with his Son, Jesus Christ" (CCC #2781). But this communion is a spiritual communion, one that prepares us for the sacramental Communion that will occur when we receive the holy Eucharist.

From early on, reciting the Lord's Prayer in the Mass contained a unique conclusion. The "Didache" and the apostolic constitutions added a doxology to the end of the Lord's Prayer. This practice is retained in the Mass, but the final doxology follows a prayer recited by the celebrant, known as the embolism.

Developing the final petition of the Lord's Prayer, the celebrant prays for deliverance from evil for the entire community of the faithful and ends with the hope of the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The short ritual known as the Rite of Peace follows the Lord's Prayer and is introduced by the celebrant with a prayer directed to Jesus Christ, who is truly present on the altar. This prayer recalls the gift of the risen Christ to his apostles on the day of his glorious resurrection and expresses ecclesial communion and mutual charity before receiving holy Communion.

The deacon or priest may invite us to exchange the sign of peace with those nearest to us. The priest and ministers are not normally allowed to leave the sanctuary to exchange the sign of peace, since the priest has already exchanged peace with the faithful.

Ultimately, what we discover as we approach holy Communion is that our communion with another (in faith, as well as charity) is to be established before it is to be expressed by receiving Communion.

Next time, we will finish our examination of the rites that prepare and dispose us to receive holy Communion.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Collection will benefit retired priests

diocese,” said Barbara Gaddy, associate director of development for the Diocese of Charlotte. “No matter where our retired priests are, they are still celebrating their priesthood in a variety of ministries.”

Many of the dedicated retired priests of the Diocese of Charlotte fill in for priests who are on vacation, retreat or sick. Others spend their time praying for the intentions of parishioners or visiting the sick or imprisoned.

Catholics in the Diocese of Charlotte soon will have the opportunity to show they care about these priests who have faithfully served the Diocese of Charlotte, many for more than 40 years of their lives.

The annual Priests’ Retirement and Benefits Collection, this year themed “Business as Usual,” will be taken up in every parish the weekend of Sept. 10-11.

The collection helps provide monthly benefits for the 25 retired diocesan priests, including Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin.

“There is no real retirement for priests,” said Bishop Curlin. “But we are now able to devote all our time to the spiritual and pastoral work for which we were ordained, free from the administrative tasks of a pastor or bishop.”

Bishop Curlin is as busy, if not busier these days than he was before his retirement in 2002. Much of his time is spent leading priests’ retreats and parish missions throughout the United States. He is also in demand to celebrate weddings, baptisms and funerals, and visits the hospitalized almost daily.

In the four years since he retired, Father Joseph Waters has continued to serve many of the Hispanic Catholics of the diocese.

“I celebrate Mass in Spanish in Eden (at St. Joseph of the Hills Church) Saturday evenings and in Mooresville (at St. Therese Church) on Sunday afternoons,” Father Waters said.

He also hears confessions every other Sunday at Divine Redeemer Church in Booneville and often celebrates daily Mass at Our Lady of Grace Church.

Father Waters does find time to play golf about once a week, he said.

Contributions also help provide for the future retirements of the 86 diocesan priests currently involved in active ministry, as well as the retirement funds of the 49 religious order priests serving in the diocese.

Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin gives the homily during a Mass celebrating the 100-year anniversary of a Knights of Columbus council at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro Nov. 13, 2004. Bishop Curlin is one of 25 retired priests in the diocese, many of whom remain active in a variety of ministries.

The campaign’s goal is to collect $1,175,000 — $812,300 to fund the diocesan priests’ retirement and benefits plans; $335,700 to support the retirement funds of religious order priests currently serving in our diocese; and $27,000 to cover campaign expenses.

Each parish is assessed 3.5 percent of its annual offertory collection to raise funds needed to support the Priests’ Retirement and Benefits Collection. In most parishes, that amount is slightly less than two times the regular Sunday offertory.

Proportionate contributions on the weekend of Sept. 10-11 will help parishes pay the assessment.

Jesuit's prayer book for military personnel in its third edition

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. (CNS) — A Boston College Jesuit, Father Daniel Sweeney, has compiled a pocket-size book of prayers and catechism lessons specifically for men and women serving in the military.

The 64-page waterproof booklet, designed to fit in the pocket of a battle dress uniform, is actually in its third edition. It is being distributed free of charge by the Knights of Columbus in conjunction with the U.S. Archdiocese for the Military Services.

Based in Washington, the military archdiocese is responsible for the pastoral care of more than 1.4 million Catholics, including people in uniform and family members of active-duty personnel; and those serving in government service overseas or in Veterans Affairs hospitals.

Regarding the prayer book, "Armed With the Faith: A Catholic Handbook for Military Personnel," Father Sweeney said he hoped it will meet demand among military personnel to better understand the teachings and traditions of the Catholic faith in a manner that directly addresses the realities of military life.

The book includes prayers, devotions, sacramental theology, catechetical information and hymns, and a brief outline of just-war theory in the Catholic tradition. It also includes information on duties battlefield chaplains.

SUNDAY SCRIPTURE READINGS: SEPT. 11, 2005

Sept. 11, Twenty-fourth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Cycle A Readings:

- 1) Sirach 27:30-28:9

Forgiveness is infinite through God

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

We know down to the split second what we were doing and remember the fear, anger and overwhelming sadness we felt when we witnessed the unbelievable on Sept. 11, 2001. My own son-in-law narrowly missed being in the very spot in the Pentagon where the plane exploded in a fireball.

When I consider 9/11 and the horrifying days and months that followed, I thank God for the extraordinary efforts of our parish priest, Father Joe Scantlin, who confirmed for all time that the word "pastor" is truly a verb.

Father Joe crafted his homilies to help us grapple with the sorrow, rage and brutal sense of uncertainty we were experiencing. He encouraged us to pray and to depend on the Lord for guidance. If he happened to shake your hand before or after Mass, the handshake came with the sense that all will be well.

An almost ironic thread runs through the readings for this Sunday. They are so pertinent for life in 2005 that they could have been written yesterday.

The ancient wisdom writer Sirach warns about the devastation that anger and vengeance cause when a person continues to "hug" wrath rather than let it go.

Peter asks for us a question about forgiveness in today's Gospel reading. "Lord ... how often must I forgive?" Notice that Peter also gives Jesus a suggested answer: "As many as seven times?"

However, Peter receives an unexpected answer and a parable to illustrate the point so there will be no doubt about the importance Jesus places on forgiveness. When Jesus uses the number 77, he means our ability to forgive can be infinite only with God's assistance.

We have to remember what the servant in the parable forgot: Forgiveness is a process. When we are forgiven, the Lord expects us to forgive in return. We cannot cling to hatred and vengeance; we must cling to God instead.

The challenge of the readings in the context of today's anniversary is immense. However, St. Paul reminds us that "whether we live or die, we are the Lord's. For this is why Christ died and came to life."

Catholic TV, film actor says faith helps him navigate career, life

BY PAULA DOYLE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Filming a wedding scene in his own parish church was a bit jarring for actor Nestor Carbonell, who plays wealthy entrepreneur Jonas Ray on the drama series "Strong Medicine," airing on the Lifetime cable television network.

"It was bizarre to film in a church where I worship every Sunday," said Carbonell, 37, a native of New York who attends St. Brendan Church in Los Angeles.

The busy television and film actor, who spent three lean years in Hollywood before landing his 1996-2000 breakout role as ladies' man Luis Rivera in the sitcom "Suddenly Susan" starring Brooke Shields, "married" his television fiancée, Dr. Lu Delgado, in the Aug. 21 episode of "Strong Medicine."

Like his Jonas TV character, Carbonell comes from a large Cuban-American family. In spite of the fact that his family moved 13 times for his dad's corporate position, his Catholic parents made sure Carbonell and his brother and sister attended Mass and received the sacraments.

"Catholicism was what I was raised in," he said. "To me, it's a map on how to lead your life. I'm glad I had it. I found it very important in my life to guide me."

After getting bitten by the acting bug at Harvard, Carbonell performed in off-Broadway plays before moving west in his mid-20s to try his luck in Hollywood. To support himself, he made fruit drinks at a juice bar and later taught English at night to students in Los Angeles' Koreatown.

"I turned to my faith to find strength," said Carbonell, who would often go to St. Ambrose Church in West Hollywood to sit and meditate during those struggling-actor days.

In 1995, Carbonell was cast in the short-lived television series, "Muscle," where he met his Australian-born Catholic wife, Shannon Kenny.

Currently a stay-at-home mother to their two boys, Nestor Rafael, 3, and newborn Marco, Kenny has had a recurring role as a neighborhood mom on the WB series "7th Heaven."

She and the children visited Carbonell on the St. Brendan "set" during the episode's taping in July.

When not acting or helping with the children, Carbonell works on a screenplay adaptation of a book, "Against All Hope," by Armando Valladares, who spent more than 20 years in a Cuban prison because he objected to Fidel Castro's communist revolution and refused to renounce his faith.

In 2000, Carbonell wrote and starred in "Attention Shoppers," a film about an actor who learns about life and love on his way to host a store opening.

'Gardener' grows suspenseful story

Ralph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz star in "The Constant Gardener," a complex political thriller about an African-based British diplomat who sets out to uncover the mystery behind the murder of his apparently unfaithful activist wife and uncovers a web of intrigue involving conspiracies, government corruption and betrayal at the highest levels of power and the pharmaceutical industry. The adaptation of a novel is a long, but generally absorbing, suspense story and a condemnation of drug testing on unsuspecting Third World people, with solid performances and flavorful location shooting in Kenya. Brief rear and partial nudity, scattered profanity, rough language and crude expressions, a restrained premarital bedroom scene, quick blurry shots of violence including lynching, and a gruesome description of death. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

day was held for new-to-teaching teachers. Additionally, new teachers attended a religious in-service day with Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan, director of religious education in schools.

"Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools' enrollment is up dramatically, especially with an increase at Charlotte Catholic High School of almost 100 students," said Linda Cherry, superintendent of diocesan Catholic schools.

"The Catholic community continues to grow in the diocese and that is reflected in a growing interest in our Catholic schools," said Cherry.

Renovations, both inside and outside, have taken place at many of the schools, noted Cherry.

The new school year also features three new principals: Linda Kenzik at Immaculata School in Hendersonville, Mary Leva at Our Lady of the Assumption School in Charlotte and Gary Gelo at Our Lady of Grace School in Greensboro.

"What a privilege it is for our community to ensure that Catholic schools continue to flourish as centers of faith, hope and love within the diocese," said Father James Hawker, vicar of education in the Diocese of Charlotte and pastor of St. Luke Church in Mint Hill.

Remembering the rights of workers

Labor Day statements recall teachings of Pope John Paul II

Each year as Labor Day approaches, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) issues a statement focusing on a particular aspect of work, worker's rights and the condition of labor, offered in the light of the church's social doctrine.

Past statements have visited global trade, farm worker justice, the rights of workers to organize and the importance of the family when analyzing working conditions. These statements seek to be timely and relevant to the existing economic conditions of the day; they serve as a reminder that issues of workplace justice are also issues of concern for communities of faith.

"Labor Day 2005: Work, Pope John Paul II, and Catholic Teaching," issued Aug. 25 by the USCCB's Domestic Policy Committee, can be read in its entirety (in English and Spanish) at www.usccb.org. The statement focuses less on a particular labor issue and more on offering a general summary of the church's teachings on work, worker rights and a framework for economic life.

It emphasizes the tremendous contribution of Pope John Paul II to the development and promulgation of Catholic social doctrine on work and workers' rights.

Pope John Paul II struggled side by side with the workers of Poland facing Communist repression as they sought a voice to improve their working conditions and shape the Polish economy. His profound concern for worker rights was manifested in his third encyclical, "Laborem Exercens" ("On Human Work"), published in 1981.

In this encyclical, the pope challenged materialistic or utilitarian views of labor as an affront to human dignity. Such views of labor lead to economic systems that stifle the desire of workers "to share in the responsibility and creativity of the work process," and leave workers to "feel themselves to be cogs in a huge machine moved from above."

The Catholic Church's social doctrine considers the human person as the measure of the dignity of work: "In fact there is no doubt that human work has an ethical value of its own, which

Guest Column

DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF

clearly and directly remains linked to the fact that the one who carries it out is a person" ("Laborem Exercens").

Pope John Paul II saw work as "the key to the solution of the whole social question."

Work is never an end in and of itself or the means by which one profits at the expense of another. Work is a noble means by which one "maintains and develops humanity" in which "we must work out of regard for others, especially our own families."

Pope John Paul II saw work as a continuation of the contributions made by those who went before us, and our way of sharing "in the building of the future of all those who will come after us."

On Labor Day, we celebrate the American worker — past, present and future. We celebrate not only current workers, but also those who, through innovation, hard work and sacrifice (often under unjust conditions), contributed to the making of our diverse economy that provides so many with sustenance.

We also consider the future of labor and ask how our work provides for future generations an economy where workers' rights and dignity are more fully respected.

Millions of workers in health care, public safety, retail, food and other service industries work on Labor Day to make the holiday enjoyable and safe. Those of us who do not have to work on Labor Day might consider showing special appreciation for those workers we encounter that day (e.g., a word of thanks; a particularly generous tip; a prayer offered for their safety).

The USCCB Labor Day statements are a call to the Catholic community to apply the principles of the church's social doctrine to our economic system. Please consider visiting www.usccb.org to read this year's Labor Day statement.

Let us ask also St. Joseph, patron of workers, to pray for us.

Back to school

Learning how to love project

The school buildings were willing and ready to welcome students and teachers of the new academic year. I presume the students and teachers were anxious and excited to start another year, and they could not wait for it.

Going to school, as we know, is more than learning math and science; it's about learning how to live, rather than simply how to make a living.

We are called to be the image of God, the Scripture tells us, and to the extent that we learn how to reflect a clear image of the Divine Model, we draw ourselves into real life and love. Learning how to love is what life is all about. That's why we get up each morning. That's why we bring children into the world. That's why we are here today.

In a "Peanuts" comic strip, Charlie Brown is busy with a woodworking project. His friend Lucy comes along and asks, "How's the birdhouse coming along, Charlie Brown?"

He replies, "Well, I'm a lousy carpenter, I can't nail straight, I can't saw straight and I always split the wood. I'm nervous, I lack confidence, I'm stupid, I have poor taste, and absolutely no sense of design."

Then, in the last frame, he concludes, "So, all things considered, it's coming along OK."

Our life is a "learning how to love project" and, if someone should ask how our project is coming along, in truth we would have to acknowledge our shortcomings as builders of loving relationships in the image of God. If, by accident, we see ourselves as perfect, we do have a real problem.

We are beginners, apprentices, we develop our skills, and after all is said and done, we agree with Charlie Brown: "All things considered, it's coming along OK."

When you look into the mirror of your own soul, what do you see reflected? Do you see a perfect image of God and love? If you are inclined to say yes, then I would urge you to look again.

Hopefully, a closer look will reflect an image of you as a dedicated apprentice in the school of learning how to love, an image of one who can say in all honesty: "I need to do more, I need to practice more, I need to try harder but, all things considered, It's coming along OK."

A certain pastor was becoming disheartened by the attitude of many parishioners. "This church is lifeless," they were saying. Sunday attendance began dropping sharply and the spiritual life of the church was at such a low ebb that the pastor proposed a course of action to improve the situation.

Since the church was considered "dead," he announced he would conduct its funeral the following Sunday. When Sunday came, the church was crowded. From their pews, the people stared curiously at the coffin that had been placed in front of the pulpit.

The pastor climbed onto the pulpit and eulogized "the deceased." He spoke of how much the church had accomplished in the past and he expressed sorrow over its untimely demise. Then he invited the congregation to come forward and view the "corpse."

One by one the people looked into the casket, and each was amazed to see his or her own face reflected from a mirror laying in the bottom of the coffin. Most were shocked, some were indignant. They slowly but surely began to realize that the church's lifelessness of which they complained was due largely to their own spiritual indifference.

As you begin the new academic year, remember that you make the difference in a world that may be indifferent at times. A good school teaches us science and math, but more important, how to love and live.

Helping hands in a hurricane

MEDIA, CHRISTIANS CAN WORK TOGETHER TO ASSIST THOSE IN NEED

News coverage of hurricanes, like what we saw as Katrina made landfall in Louisiana, brings out the best and the dumbest in the media.

The dumbest are those foolhardy reporters who unthinkingly stand on the seashore telling us that it's a dangerous place that should be evacuated. Duh!

This double standard of "you go, me stay" is as clichéd as the shots of wind-blown palm trees. I was once one of those television reporters who perched on a sand dune and contemptuously looked Mother Nature in the eye. Fortunately, God seems to have a special love for fools, and I survived.

I've lived to say, many times, that the dumbest thing I ever did was to greet Hurricane Hugo when it clobbered Charleston in 1989. The 135 m.p.h. winds of that storm created monster-movie sounds that I can still hear. I spent the night hunkered down in a Market Street hotel alternately praying for deliverance and cursing my foolish self for accepting the assignment.

Watching rain-soaked reporters might be riveting television, but it's dumb for the reporters to be in the path of a force of nature that is like a runaway train. And it is completely irresponsible for news organizations and The Weather

DAVID HAINS
GUEST COLUMNIST

Channel, which should know better, to routinely put people in harm's way when the most important news of a storm, its direction, can be safely seen on radar.

The rain was still pummeling New Orleans when I received my first call from a Charlotte reporter wanting to know how the Diocese of Charlotte was going to help the people of Louisiana. This is what the media does best — sharing news of a need to thousands, even millions, of people.

It is reassuring to know the Catholic Church is one of the first places the media contacts when a disaster strikes. In addition to the offering of prayers for everyone who was affected by the winds and rising waters, our church can quickly marshal resources to address the needs of people across the country or across the planet, as was the case when the tsunami struck Southeast Asia in December.

Gerry Carter, associate director of Catholic Social Services in the Diocese of Charlotte, helps the diocese respond to disasters.

"We are a secondary responder," he said. "We respond to a call from a bishop or from the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops when a need arises."

The response to the tsunami need in January was generous. Nationally, $150 million was pledged by Catholic Relief Services for the victims. In the Diocese of Charlotte, $520,078 was raised and forwarded to CRS for distribution.

When the surging waters recede, the media stories will follow a predictable pattern. First are the scenes of destruction combined with stories of miraculous survival. These are followed by stories about the efforts of relief organizations and, finally, how the survivors are coping. Inherent in all of these stories are messages of thanks and messages of need that pull at our heart and often our purse strings.

Disasters represent a curious intersection of the media and the people of faith who offer the prayers and write many of the checks that restore the lives of the devastated. Unfortunately for all of us, the good that the media does after a storm like Katrina is short lived. News organizations are compelled to move on to the next disaster.

There will always be another disaster, just as there will always be a need for those of us on the high ground to offer a helping hand.

Pope, at audience, says children are gifts from God

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Children are gifts from God, and they offer joy and support for parents and society, Pope Benedict XVI said in his weekly general audience.

Nations with declining birthrates are missing "the freshness, the energy, the future" brought by children, he added.

In his Aug. 31 audience in St. Peter's Square, the pope reflected on Psalm 127, which celebrates the Lord's gift of children "who are seen as a blessing and a grace" and as a source of support for parents in their old age.

The pope flew by helicopter from his papal summer residence in Castel Gandolfo, 20 miles away, to hold his weekly general audience in St. Peter's Square to accommodate the large number of pilgrims in attendance.

Some 11,000 people gathered in the square to hear the pope and receive his blessing.

"Whatever we do or undertake can only bear fruit if it has God's blessing," he said.

"A strong society is, of course, built out of the labor of its members, but it also needs the blessing and support of God who, unfortunately, is instead often excluded or ignored," said the pope.

A person's efforts also need divine grace in order to be fruitful, he said.

"The peaceful and faithful relinquishment of our freedom to God renders our activity to be solidly based and capable of long-lasting fruit," he said.

End of life issues, Part 1

A Catholic look at North Carolina advance directives

On March 20, 2004, Pope John Paul II gave a concluding address to the Vatican-sponsored International Congress On Life-Sustaining Treatments and Vegetative State. He had some wonderful words on the topic of end-of-life (and perhaps "not-so-end-of-life") decision making, especially in the context of a "persistent vegetative state."

The words were immediately misquoted and misunderstood. The address certainly rankled many who did not understand what he had to say, including Catholic physicians.

In fact, any Catholic with an understanding of the Catholic Church's teaching on the subject (particularly the teaching of our late pope) will understand the immediate need carefully to prepare and execute advance directives that comply with secular law. These directives, also misunderstood, can be used to enforce death and to enforce life.

I will summarize the state of North Carolina law in view of the church's teaching and what you can do to ensure that you have a set of advance directives that complies with both secular law and church teaching.

An in-depth treatment of the church's position on the topic is impossible in this column. In a nutshell: Euthanasia is the intentional killing of another for the purpose of eliminating all suffering. It is never acceptable.

It is, on the other hand, morally permitted to forego aggressive medical treatment that will be disproportionate to the expected results and impose an excessive burden in view of the patient's real situation when death is clearly imminent and inevitable.

"Disproportionate" means that there will be a cost-benefit analysis; if the pain and intrusiveness of the treatment clearly outweigh any expected benefit to the patient, the intervention will be "disproportionate." Whether the termination of medical treatment amounts to euthanasia involves an examination of the will behind the omission and the means used.

Interestingly, the foregoing standards might be considered a base moral norm. Pope John Paul II wrote in "Evangelium Vitae" that the voluntary acceptance of suffering, while a heroic measure perhaps not meant for everyone, might be worthy of praise.

Nevertheless, a Catholic may forgo aggressive medical treatment with a clear conscience if death is neither willed nor sought, and if that decision to forgo treatments will not prevent the discharge of important moral and religious duties.

Also in a nutshell: Furnishing nutrition and hydration is never a medical act; it is an ordinary act. As an "ordinary act," it is usually morally obligatory.

Guest Column

BOB MASON
GUEST COLUMNIST

When might it not be morally obligatory? Pope John Paul II, in his address to the International Congress, provided an answer: when hydration and nutrition have reached their "proper finality," when they provide neither nourishment nor the relief of pain.

And finally: vegetative state. A patient in a vegetative state is not a "vegetable." He or she retains all of the dignity of a human being created by, and in the image of, God.

The consideration of whether a patient is in what some physicians may determine to be a technical vegetative state is never appropriate when making end-of-life decisions. The North Carolina statutory definition of "persistent vegetative state" must be considered carefully. More on that will follow.

These are difficult teachings to understand thoroughly. When in doubt talk to your priest, inform yourself and pray. Then set out to understand North Carolina law.

Next time, I will discuss North Carolina law regarding advance directives.

Bob Mason is an elder law attorney and a parishioner at St. Joseph Church in Asheboro.

CHARLOTTE — Hurricane Katrina left in her Category 4 wake as many as 1 million people without homes, jobs or schools.

As great as the need is, Americans, including many in the Diocese of Charlotte, have responded with overwhelming swiftness and generosity.

As of Sept. 6, more than 145,000 evacuees were being housed by the American Red Cross in 580 shelters in 17 states. Hundreds of evacuees have arrived over the past several days in North Carolina.

New Our Lady of Mercy Church dedicated

WINSTON-SALEM — There's a saying that is often heard around Our Lady of Mercy Church: "Many hands make mercy." With the unveiling of the parish's new church, that phrase is certainly true.

Not only did the parish commit to raising the $9.7 million needed for construction of a new church and renovation of Our Lady of Mercy School, much of the church's adornments were donated or made by its parishioners.

"This is a parish where people like to get involved ... not sitting back and letting others do things," said Conventual Franciscan Father William Robinson, pastor.

When Bishop Peter J. Jugis led a procession of nearly 1,000 parishioners into the new 750-seat church Aug. 28, the work of Our Lady of Mercy's devoted parishioners could be seen throughout the church.

BEADING FAITH

John Rapp, a parishioner of St. John of Rochester Church in Fairport, N.Y., repairs rosaries in the basement workshop of his Perinton home July 13. Rapp has been volunteering to repair and restore rosaries for five Rochester-area parishes over the last three years.

Rochester man is unofficial rosary repairman for five parishes

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (CNS) — Members of St. Patrick's Church in Victor occasionally leave their old, broken rosaries at the parish office. Although these rosaries may be tarnished and missing links or crucifixes, they are treasured nonetheless and often have a great deal of sentimental value and memories attached to them.

John Rapp will stop by, pick up the rosaries and bring them to his home. There he'll fix whatever is wrong with them before returning them to the parish office, where their owners reclaim them.

"This is something I do because I feel it should be done," said Rapp, who belongs to St. John of Rochester Church in Fairport. "I felt there was a need for it, and I want to encourage people to use and say the rosary as requested by Our Lady of Fatima."

Many Catholics cherish their rosaries because they were a gift from a loved one or handed down from previous generations, Rapp said.

For this reason, Rapp began repairing rosaries for Rochester-area Catholics in September 2002. He is now the unofficial rosary repairman for his own parish and four others.

Every so often — especially around May and October — these parishes will run small announcements letting parishioners know they can bring broken rosaries to the parish offices. The announcement also asks parishioners to donate rosaries to be used for parts.

Although Rapp has heard about a number of parish groups that make new rosaries, he's not aware of anyone else in the diocese who repairs them, a fact he'd like to change. In fact, Rapp said he's willing to teach his craft to anyone who's interested and committed to repairing rosaries at his or her parish.

"This is not a hobby; it's a commitment. They're taking on the job of repairing all the broken rosaries of their parish, not this week and next week, but on and on and on," he said.

Rapp has repaired between 150 and 200 rosaries since he took on this commitment nearly three years ago. There have been instances where he's had six rosaries to work on in his house at one time.

In the past three years Rapp has picked up several helpful techniques.

"If all else fails then I go to the bead store," he said.

Catholic official calls number of uninsured a 'moral injustice'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The number of people without health insurance is "a moral injustice that must end," said Michael Rodgers, interim president and CEO of the Catholic Health Association, commenting on newly released U.S. Census Bureau figures.

The bureau's annual report on income, poverty and health insurance coverage, released Aug. 30, showed that the nation's poverty rate increased for the fourth year in a row, from 35.9 million people in 2003 to 37 million people in 2004.

Last year, the number of people without health insurance was 45.8 million, an increase of 800,000 from the previous year, but the percentage of people without health insurance remained at 15.7 percent.

Rodgers said the overall increase in the uninsured is particularly "unconscionable" because he said many of the newly uninsured are infants and toddlers.

According to the report, poverty rates increased for non-Hispanic whites but not for any other ethnic group. The percentage of whites in poverty rose from 8.2 percent in 2003 to 8.6 percent. African-Americans, with a 24.7 percent poverty rate, and Hispanics, with a 21.9 percent poverty rate, saw no change. Poverty levels for Asian-Americans dropped by two percentage points to 9.8 percent.

The report also showed the median household income for last year was $44,389, down slightly from the 2003 level of $44,482.

Thomas Chabolla, associate director of programs for the U.S. bishops' Catholic Campaign for Human Development, said the Census Bureau's data "demonstrates the many dimensions of poverty," not just wages and income.

The CCHD has invested more than $270 million in about 4,000 organizations in the past 35 years.

Pope to send envoy to U.S. to show solidarity with Katrina's victims

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — As a sign of his personal solidarity, Pope Benedict XVI is sending the Vatican's top humanitarian aid official to visit the populations stricken by Hurricane Katrina.

Archbishop Paul Cordes, president of the Pontifical Council "Cor Unum," was to travel to the Gulf Coast region Sept. 10 or 11, his office said. Details of his mission were not immediately available.

"Cor Unum" is responsible for promoting and coordinating Catholic charitable projects around the world, and Archbishop Cordes was expected to meet with church-run agencies involved in the Gulf Coast region.

The pope announced the move at a Sunday blessing Sept. 4 at his residence outside Rome. For the second time in a week, he expressed his deep concern at the tragedy and asked for prayers for the victims.

"In a special way our hearts turn to all those suffering the devastating consequences of Hurricane Katrina in the United States," the pope said, speaking in English.

"As the extent of this tragedy unfolds, I ask you to join me in praying for the victims, their loved ones and all those affected. May the grieving families experience the consolation of God's presence and rescue workers be assured of our deep concern and support," he said.

The pope said he was praying for all those affected by the hurricane and its aftermath: the dead and their families, the injured, the homeless, the sick, children and the elderly. He offered a special blessing to all those involved in relief and rebuilding efforts.

Neumann Church, 8451 Idlewild Rd., meets the second Wednesday of each month at 11 a.m. with a program and lunch in the parish hall. For reservations and more information, call Lucille at (704) 537-2189.

More than 400 experts to attend Vatican conference on Scripture

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — More than 400 biblical experts from 98 countries are expected to attend a Vatican-sponsored conference in September to commemorate the Second Vatican Council's document on Scripture and revelation.

The Sept. 14-18 encounter in Rome will feature formal presentations and discussions on the theme, "Sacred Scripture in the Life of the Church." In addition to Catholic experts, representatives of other Christian churches and other religions also have been invited, the Vatican said Sept. 1.

Participants will attend an audience with Pope Benedict XVI, who attended the council as a theological expert and had a key role in the preparatory discussions on the revelation document.

Published in November 1965, the Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation ("Dei Verbum") said the church depends on both Scripture and tradition as the one deposit of the faith. It encouraged biblical reading for all members of the church as an essential spiritual resource.

The purpose of the conference is not retrospective, but will instead aim to trace a "critical panorama" of the current situation, identifying current challenges and problems, the Vatican said. The overall goal is to promote awareness of the importance of the Bible and biblical studies in the modern church.

Participants will include cardinals and bishops, scholars and other experts, as well as members of church organizations that focus on the Bible and biblical studies in their work.

Among the topics for discussion are biblical exegesis, the Bible in catechesis and liturgy, ecumenical dialogue, relations with Judaism and interreligious dialogue, new religious movements and the challenge of fundamentalism, and justice and peace in a globalized world.

The conference was being co-sponsored by the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity and the Catholic Bible Federation.

Among those addressing the encounter will be Cardinal Walter Kasper, head of the Christian unity council; Cardinal Carlo Maria Martini, retired archbishop of Milan, Italy, and a noted biblicalist; and Archbishop John Olorunfemi Olayinka of Abuja, Nigeria, president of the Symposium of Episcopal Conferences of Africa and Madagascar.

Priests and seminarians gather for cookout

CHARLOTTE — Msgr. Joseph Kerin, a retired priest of the Diocese of Charlotte, chats with seminarians for the diocese.

Approximately 50 priests and seminarians gathered with Bishop Peter J. Jugis for a cookout and social in Charlotte Aug. 15.

The gathering was a result of the Presbyteral Council's interest in getting to know the 18 seminarians currently studying to serve in the Diocese of Charlotte. Sixteen seminarians were able to attend the event, planned by Father John Putnam, then-acting director of vocations.

After evening prayer at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte, the priests and seminarians went to Bishop Jugis' residence for the cookout. Knights of Columbus from St. Mark Church in Huntersville prepared the food.

A NEW JOURNEY

Five men begin seminary studies for diocese

CHARLOTTE — The Diocese of Charlotte has accepted five young men to begin seminary studies this fall.

Two of the candidates, Jason Christian and Carson Wilkie, will enter the college seminary program at the Pontifical College Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio.

Richard Worthington and Benjamin Roberts will begin pre-theology and theology studies at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary in Philadelphia, Pa., and Tri Vinh Truong will study theology at Mt. St. Mary's Seminary in Emmitsburg, Md.

Christian, 22, is a parishioner of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte. Prior to being accepted for seminary formation, he studied at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte and worked as a computer technician.

Wilkie, 20, is a member of St. Philip the Apostle Church in Statesville and began considering a priestly vocation through Catholic campus ministry at Western Carolina University in Cullowhee, where he has been studying history for the past two years.

Worthington, 28, is a member of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte. Prior to being accepted for seminary formation, he graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., and served in the U.S. Navy.

Roberts, 28, is a parishioner of St. Philip the Apostle Church in Statesville. Prior to being accepted for seminary formation, he studied at Lenoir-Rhyne College in Hickory and was a novice for the Oblates of Mary Immaculate.

Truong, 31, is a member of St. Joseph's Vietnamese Church in Charlotte. A native of Vietnam, he studied at St. John's University in New York and St. Xavier University in Chicago. He is transferring to the Diocese from the Archdiocese of Atlanta.

Help from the home front

Parishes and schools in the Diocese of Charlotte have jumped into action to help thousands of displaced Gulf Coast residents.

Just one week after the devastating storm, more than $10,300 had been raised by the students of St. Pius X, St. Patrick, St. Matthew, St. Gabriel and Charlotte Catholic High schools.

"We will be assisting at Habitat for Humanity to pre-build homes at their local warehouse, which will be shipped to the disaster areas after clean-up is finished," said Mary Jane Dawson, campus minister at Charlotte Catholic High School.

At St. Leo the Great School in Winston-Salem, students and families raised $11,000 for the Red Cross and collected items for the Second Harvest Food Bank.

Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro has collected $12,000.

"Our St. Vincent de Paul Society and Knights of Columbus have offered their assistance to any family who has relocated to the area to fill whatever needs they have," said Father James Ebright, parochial vicar at Our Lady of Grace Church.

An anonymous donor presented a check for $10,000 to Msgr. Anthony Marcaccio, pastor of St. Pius X Church.

A family of four children has already been enrolled at St. Pius X School tuition-free. Their father, a contractor, stayed behind in Gulfport, Miss. to assist in the recovery effort, while they came to Greensboro with their mother, whose sister is a parishioner of St. Pius X.

During the opening-of-school Mass at Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School in Kernersville, the campus ministry program organized a collection to assist the hurricane victims. Also, the Peer Ministers distributed collection jars at the first home football game and will implement the "Child to Child" campaign to support efforts from the diocese.

According to Father Joseph Zuschmidt, pastor of Queen of the Apostles Church in Belmont, $9,000 has been collected for the Red Cross.

Nancy Churchill and Shawn Finley sort and pack donations bound for Hattiesburg, Miss. Several parishioners at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte helped address the needs of Hurricane Katrina victims by collecting essentials. Parishes and individuals wishing to donate essential items are asked to partner with disaster relief agencies to determine how best to help.

More than $21,000 has been collected at St. Therese Church in Mooresville for Catholic Charities USA.

"In the Asheville Vicariate we, as a vicariate, have cooperated with the Western Regional Office of Catholic Social Services to coordinate the relief efforts," said Father Wilbur Thomas, pastor of Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville. "Housing, food distribution and counseling are being coordinated."

The students of Asheville Catholic School have been collecting goods for Hearts With Hands, a Christian humanitarian organization that aids victims of poverty, natural disaster or famine.

Several parishioners at St. Patrick Cathedral helped collect supplies for victims in Hattiesburg, Miss.

Back to class for displaced students

Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools are offering places to children displaced by Katrina. Families can register children at any MACS school. Application and tuition fees will be waived, and students will be given books and uniforms.

Displaced students have already been enrolled at Our Lady of Grace, St. Matthew and Holy Trinity Middle schools.

Starting over in Charlotte

Jane Katner-Grass, her husband Glenn and their three children, Trey, 14; Phoebe, 12; and Adam, 10; took refuge in Charlotte last week. The New Orleans home that they had moved into less than a month ago was under water. Their possessions are either inaccessible or ruined. Although somber at their loss, Katner-Grass looked on the bright side.

"We are just glad to be alive, and we are thankful that our families are safe," she said.

The children were enrolled in Catholic schools on Sept. 6. The Katner-Grass family plans to stay in the Charlotte area until the end of the school year.

HOW TO HELP

During the early stages of disasters, money is typically the most valuable resource needed by response and relief professionals. Cash donations allow agencies to buy what is needed and avoid the complicated, costly and time-consuming process of collecting, sorting, transporting and distributing material goods.

For this reason, the Catholic community of the Diocese of Charlotte is responding to this need by collecting funds to be used in short- and long-term recovery efforts in the affected areas. If you wish to donate, please respond to parish initiatives, making checks payable to your parish (clearly marking the check "Disaster Relief"). Alternatively, you may mail your donation to:

Catholic Diocese of Charlotte Disaster Relief
1123 South Church Street
Charlotte, North Carolina 28203-4003

In many cities throughout the Diocese of Charlotte, local agencies experienced in disaster response such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army are working hard to meet the immediate needs of evacuees. Parishes and individuals wishing to donate essential items such as food, water, medical supplies and clothing are asked to partner with disaster agencies, news media outlets and community groups. The long-term housing solutions for evacuees are currently being evaluated by civic and community leaders throughout the Diocese. Individuals wishing to respond to these needs are asked to be attentive to lead relief agencies to determine how best to help.

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 24

In the past few weeks, we have discussed several short rites that compose the Communion Rite. Thus far we have inspected the Lord's Prayer and the Rite of Peace. This time, let us finish our examination of these rites that prepare and dispose us to receive holy Communion.

Following the Rite of Peace is a subtle yet highly significant act called the Fraction Rite. The celebrant, following the example of our Lord, now takes up the consecrated host and reverently fractures it. Although this action is accomplished without drama or commentary, it bears great significance in the history and tradition of the Mass.

All of the sacred writers of the New Testament affirm that Christ took bread and broke it when he offered the sacrifice of the Last Supper. After his resurrection, he was recognized by his disciples "in the breaking of the bread" (Luke 24:35). And the Acts of the Apostles testifies that the early church continued "the breaking of the bread" faithfully each day (Acts 2:46).

To the present day, the church continues "the breaking of the bread" precisely because Christ instructed his Apostles to, "Do this in memory of me." But why does Christ break the bread?

Certainly it was Jewish custom to break bread with one's relatives and friends as an act of charity. And ancient custom dictated that breaking bread was appropriate, rather than slicing it with a knife.

But perhaps more important is the spiritual significance of breaking the bread that not only represented Christ's body, but sacramentally becomes his body, which was pierced and nailed to the cross.

A fragment of the broken host is then placed into the chalice, a gesture called "the commingling." The origin of this custom is not certain, but there are a number of possible explanations.

Centuries ago there was the custom of taking pieces of the consecrated host from the Mass offered by the bishop of a diocese and distributing them to the various parishes in his diocese. The priest would then place the fragment into his chalice signifying unity with the local bishop.

It is also probable that this commingling of the body and blood of Christ has a more spiritual explanation. The consecration of the Mass occurs in two separate consecrations: first the bread, then the wine. Since this separate consecration symbolically represents death, as our Lord's blood was separated from his body, uniting and commingling the body and blood of Christ in the chalice would symbolically represent the resurrection, the re-union of Christ's body and blood.

The celebrant recites a prayer in silence during this commingling: "May this mingling of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ bring eternal life to us who receive it."

Meanwhile, the Agnus Dei is recited or sung. At first, the breaking of the bread was done in silence. But in the seventh century, Pope St. Sergius established the chanting of this hymn, which had been familiar to him since his childhood.

The Agnus Dei, or "Lamb of God" as a title of our Lord, is most appropriate at this point in the Mass. In the Old Testament, the "lamb of God" was slaughtered for the Passover feast and saved the Israelites from the angel of death. St. John the Baptist saw Jesus walking toward him on the banks of the river Jordan and said, "Behold, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world!" (John 1:29).

And the evangelist, St. John, recorded his visions in the Book of Revelation of the slain Lamb, Jesus Christ, who was glorious and victorious in heaven.

After the priest has completed his private preparatory prayers, he genuflects and raises the host above the paten or chalice and recites the words of St. John the Baptist, "Ecce Agnus Dei..." that is (according to our current translation), "This is the Lamb of God...."

We must pause for a moment, look, adore and behold him, who alone takes away the sins of the world. It is not mere bread or a symbol, but the same Lord who once walked along the banks of the river Jordan.

Indeed, "Happy are those who are called to his supper" (Revelation 19:9).

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

blessed by the late Pope John Paul II to encourage vocations to the priesthood and religious life.

Speakers at the congress include Jim Caviezel, the actor who portrayed Jesus in "The Passion of the Christ"; Scott Hahn, a professor of theology and Scripture; and Father Leo Patalinghug, a priest who uses martial arts to convey his spiritual message.

In addition to four tracks of speakers — for adults in both English and Spanish and for children and teens — eucharistic adoration and confession will be available at the Charlotte Convention Center throughout the congress.

Vendors will sell rosaries and other religious materials. Religious orders and diocesan Catholic schools will offer information.

Stewardship opportunities

To help coordinate and assist many of the activities, volunteers from the Diocese of Charlotte are needed. Volunteer positions include ushers, catechists and hospitality coordinators.

"As Christian stewards we are asked to look at the many ways God has blessed us and respond with a proportionate gift of our time and financial resources," said Jim Kelley, development director for the Diocese of Charlotte and a member of the Eucharistic Congress committee.

"The Eucharistic Congress provides a wonderful means of giving of our time through volunteer opportunities and of our treasure through a financial contribution," said Kelley.

Collections will be taken during the congress to help defray the costs of renting the Charlotte Convention Center, honorariums and travel arrangements for the speakers and providing printed materials.

EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS

Pope John Paul II proclaimed October 2004 through October 2005 as the Year of the Eucharist, and the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte is hosting a Eucharistic Congress in Charlotte Friday, Sept. 23, through Saturday, Sept. 24.

This historic event, a first for the Diocese of Charlotte, will be a wonderful celebration of engaging speakers, heartfelt prayer and exultant rejoicing at the Charlotte Convention Center.

This four-page guide contains an itinerary of speakers and activities, a map detailing the route of the eucharistic procession and other useful information.

In his December 2004 letter to the Catholics of the Diocese of Charlotte, Bishop Peter J. Jugis announced that the Eucharistic Congress would take place in Charlotte and asked the faithful to put aside the dates to attend.

"This will be a time of celebration, adoration and teaching centered on the mystery of the Eucharist," said Bishop Jugis.

Eucharist is the body and blood of Jesus Christ that is transubstantiated from bread and wine at the celebration of Mass.

On Friday, Sept. 23, the Congress will feature a concert of sacred choral music, Eucharistic adoration and a talk by actor

Jim Caviezel, who portrayed Jesus in the film "The Passion of the Christ."

On Saturday, Sept. 24, a procession of clergy, youths, Catholic organizations and members from every parish and mission in the diocese will walk behind the Eucharist as it is carried through the streets of uptown Charlotte. Everyone attending the congress is invited to participate in the procession.

A monstrance blessed by Pope John Paul II will be carried by Bishop Jugis during the procession.

After the procession, a program of seminars, speakers and activities for adults, children and youth is planned for the Charlotte Convention Center. Programs celebrating the diversity of cultures present in the diocese will also be presented. The Eucharistic Congress concludes with a Mass on Saturday afternoon.

Bishop Jugis' letter urges Catholics to give primary importance to participation each Sunday in the celebration of Mass and to consider spending some time in eucharistic adoration outside Mass.

To watch and participate in the Eucharistic Procession

THE PROCESSION ROUTE

The eucharistic procession, led by Bishop Peter J. Jugis, will begin at 8 a.m. on Saturday, Sept. 24, at St. Peter Church, 507 South Tryon Street.

The procession will head north on Tryon Street for two blocks, then turn east onto Third Street for one block.

The procession will then turn south onto College Street for one block, then turn east onto Second Street to the Charlotte Convention Center entrance.

People of the Diocese of Charlotte are encouraged to line the procession route to watch the eucharistic procession.

TO PARTICIPATE IN THE PROCESSION

As the Blessed Sacrament comes near, it is the custom to become quiet and kneel until the monstrance passes.

After the Blessed Sacrament passes by, look for your parish's banner. When your parish banner passes by, you may fall in along with your parish to join in the procession. Once you have connected with your parish group, simply join in the communal prayers or just pray silently as the procession moves along.

Once the procession arrives at the Charlotte Convention Center, move to any open door, as directed by the ushers, and enter the main hall. Proceed to the seating area and fill in as best as possible, joining in the singing until the beginning of the Holy Hour.

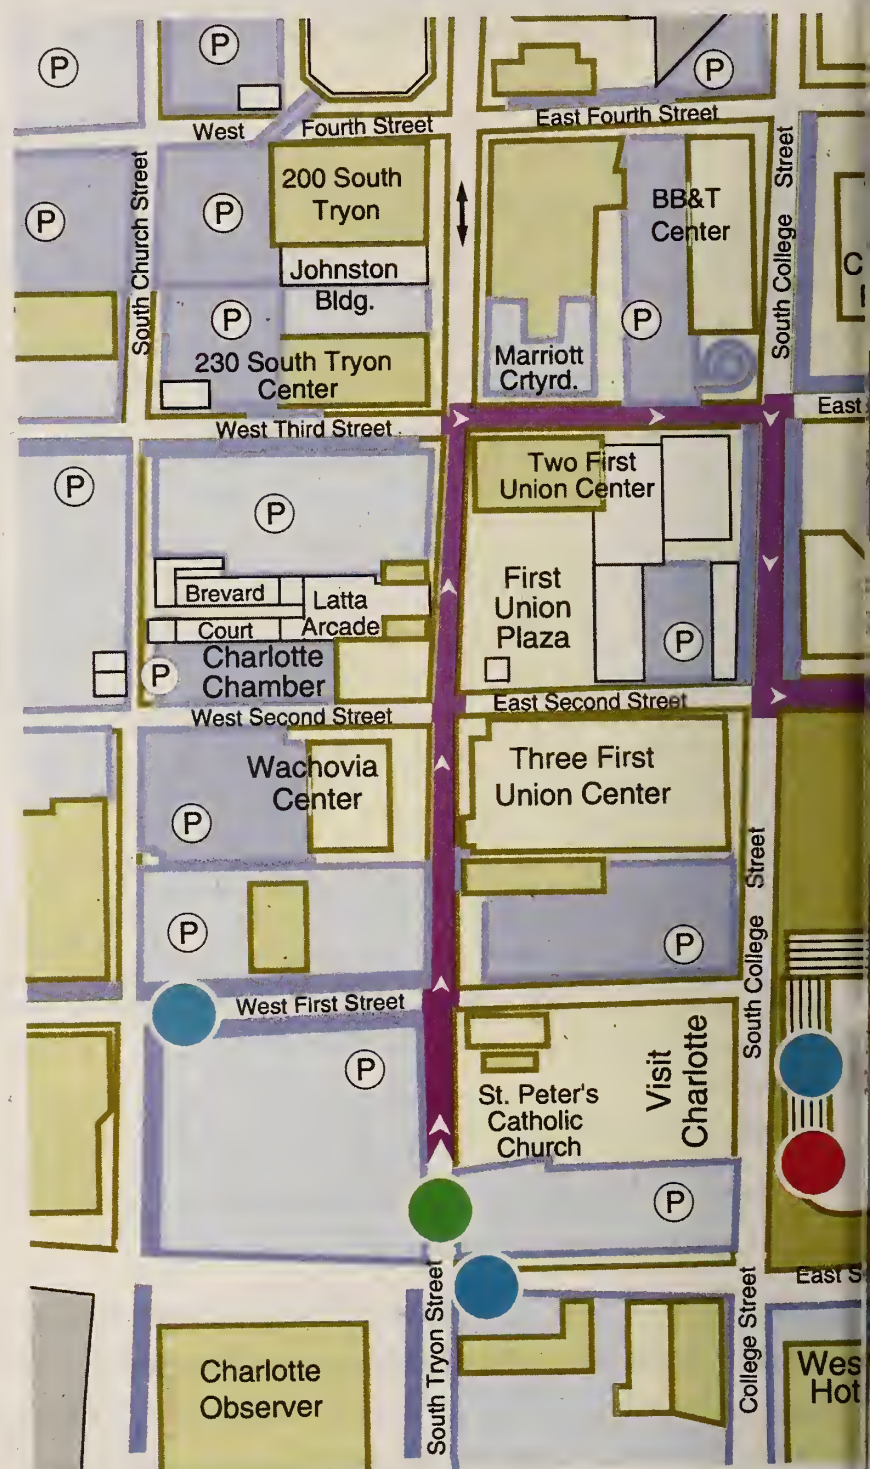

BANNER CARRIERS IN THE PROCESSION

The eucharistic procession will begin lining up in front of St. Peter Church at 7:15 a.m. on Saturday, Sept. 24.

Banner stands can be dropped off at the Charlotte Convention Center on Friday afternoon from 5-7 p.m. and Saturday morning before 7:30 a.m.

Parishes are asked to have their banners, along with 10 representatives from the parish, line up along Tryon Street south of the altar that will be placed in front of St. Peter Church (Procession Staging Area). Other members of the parishes are asked to line the procession route (see above).

Frequently Asked Questions about the Eucharistic Congress

What is the Eucharistic Congress?

The Eucharistic Congress is a teaching and worship event that is centered on the Eucharist, the source and summit of Catholic life. The Congress begins Friday evening, Sept. 23, with a concert of sacred choral music and a talk by actor Jim Caviezel at the Charlotte Convention Center. After the program, the Eucharist will be available for adoration throughout the night at St. Patrick Cathedral, 1621 Dilworth Rd. East.

The events on Saturday, Sept. 24, begin at 8 a.m. with a procession of the Eucharist from St. Peter Church on S. Tryon Street to the Charlotte Convention Center. After adoration and a homily, participants in the Congress will have the opportunity to hear a variety of inspiring speakers. Programs, or "tracks," are designed for different audiences: General, Hispanic, Children and Teens.

During the day, the Eucharist will be available for adoration in a special chapel in the Charlotte Convention Center. Priests will be available for confessions all day and there will be an area for vendors selling religious merchandise and offering information about Catholic schools, vocations, etc.

The Congress concludes with a Vigil Mass that begins at 4:30 p.m.

Where does the idea for a Eucharistic Congress come from?

The first Eucharistic Congress was held in Lille, France in 1881 under the direction of Msgr. Gaston De Se'gue. In time, Eucharistic Congresses developed to their present international character. The Congress of 1908, which met in London, was the first occasion on which a representative of the pope had entered England since the Protestant Reformation. Two international Eucharistic Congresses were held in the United States — Chicago in 1926 and Philadelphia in 1976.

Who is allowed to take part in the procession?

Everyone. Leading the procession will be altar servers, organized societies including the Knights of Columbus, clergy and most importantly, the Eucharist. Following the Eucharist will be banner carriers representing churches, schools and organizations in the Diocese of Charlotte. The faithful are invited to join the procession as the banner for their church or organization passes by.

What if it rains?

The Congress will be held rain or shine. The procession may be moved into the Charlotte Convention Center depending on the weather.

Where can I park?

There is ample parking around the Charlotte Convention Center and in uptown Charlotte. Since the Congress takes place on a weekend, traffic will be minimal.

What age children will be able to participate in the Children's Track?

Children from kindergarten through fifth grade are welcome to participate in the Children's Track. All children in the Children's Track must be registered. Registration forms are available online at www.goeucharist.com, through individual parishes or can be filled out at the Convention Center.

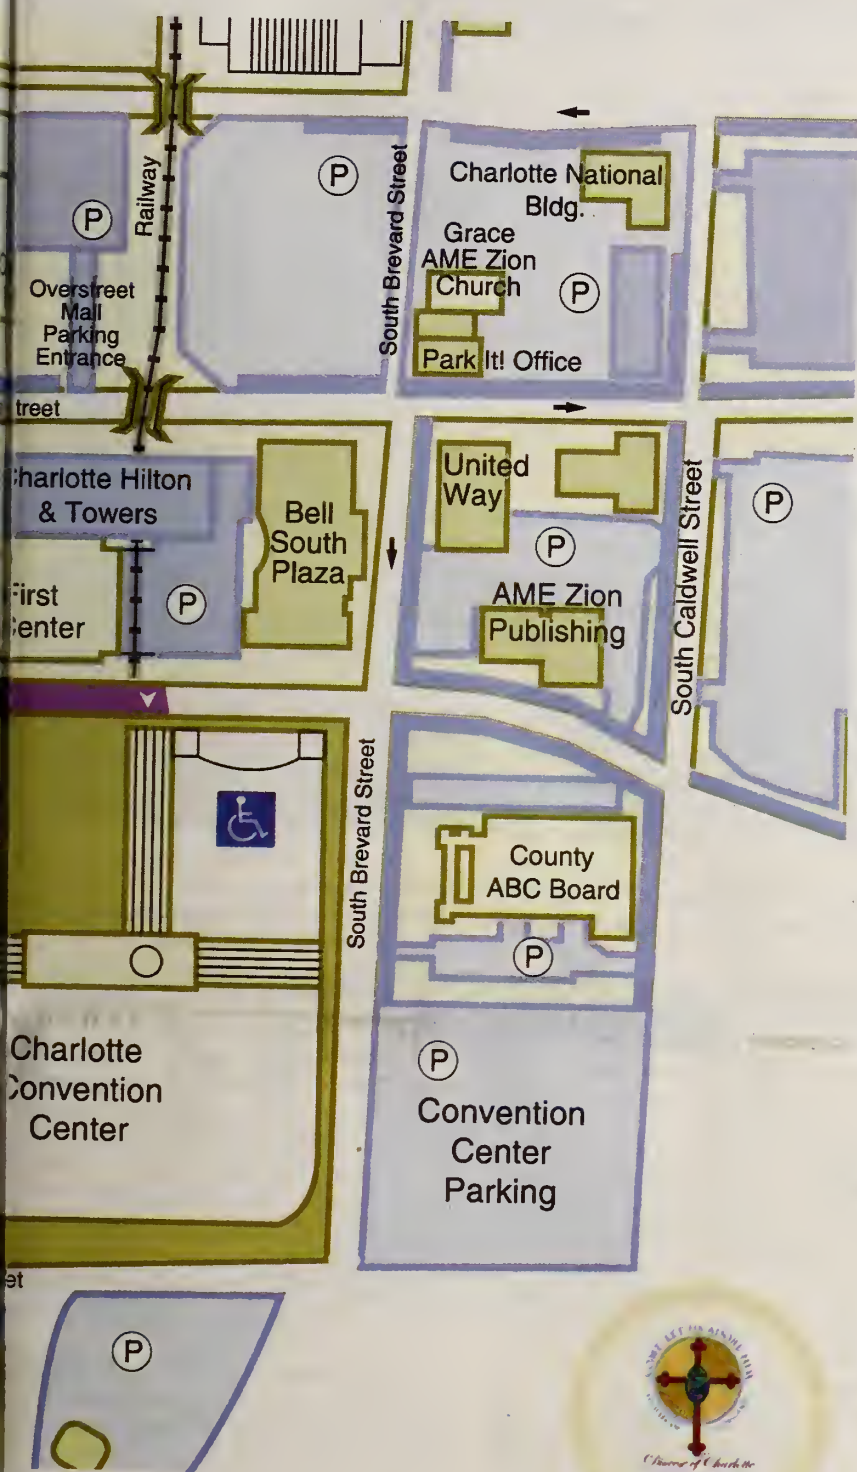

Seating in the Children's Track will be limited. Children in the Children's Track will be involved in age-appropriate activities and will be served lunch.

What is being done to provide a secure environment for the children?

The Diocese of Charlotte is committed to "The Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People" as adopted by the U.S. bishops.

Background checks also will be performed on any adult having supervisory contact with children.

Who is speaking at the Children's Track?

Ken Doran will present "Stories of Hope: How God Works Wonders!"

A dynamic and creative teacher, Doran's 26 years in catechetical ministry reflects broad experience on diocesan, school, and parish levels. His approach is age-appropriate and fun for all children ages kindergarten through fifth grade.

A sign of unity and a bond of charity

The Diocese of Charlotte is about to be blessed with the celebration of its first Eucharistic Congress.

In the years after the close of the Second Vatican Council, two documents from the Holy See addressed the concept of a Eucharistic Congress. In May 1967, the Sacred Congregation of Rites gave us an "Instruction on the Worship of the Eucharistic Mystery."

This instruction covered the sacrifice of the Mass, as well as the various ways in which the faithful express their worship of the holy Eucharist and "extend the grace of the sacrifice" outside of Mass: through adoration of Christ in the Blessed Sacrament reserved in the tabernacle; processions of the Sacrament through the streets; exposition and benediction of the Blessed Sacrament; and Eucharistic Congresses.

In June 1973 the Sacred Congregation for Divine Worship gave us an "Instruction on Holy Communion and the Worship of the Eucharistic Mystery Outside of Mass." In this instruction the congregation outlined the criteria that guide the celebration of a Eucharistic Congress: the celebration of the Eucharist is the center and high point of the congress; conferences and catechetical talks are held on the theme of the Eucharist; there is time for prayer and extended adoration during exposition of the Blessed Sacrament; and the Blessed Sacrament is carried in procession through the streets of the city.

All of these elements and more will be present at our own Eucharistic Congress as our diocese comes together to celebrate our faith in Christ and our love for the Lord.

Why did I, as bishop, call for a Eucharistic Congress? The idea for this pastoral initiative first presented itself late in the spring of 2004.

On June 12, 2004, two very successful conferences on the holy Eucharist were held in our diocese. These two events drew almost 1,000 people between them. The popularity of these two eucharistic conferences led to a desire to broaden the scope in order to embrace all the parishes of the diocese in a single Eucharistic Congress to celebrate the Year of the Eucharist.

The Congress will have the effect of strengthening the unity and the bond of charity of our growing local church.

The Second Vatican Council, in its Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy (n. 47), called the eucharistic sacrifice "a sign of unity" and "a bond of charity." The Eucharistic Congress will foster the unity and the bond of charity of our local church. Every celebration of the Eucharist fosters our unity in Christ. Every Mass spiritually unites us to each other across the length and breadth of our diocese.

The Eucharistic Congress, however, will demonstrate in a very visible way the unity of our diocesan family, as parishioners and clergy and religious from every parish of the diocese come together in one place for a eucharistic procession, a Holy Hour of Exposition and Benediction, talks on various eucharistic themes and the celebration of Mass.

The holy Eucharist brings us together and makes us one body. The Eucharist renews and consolidates our incorporation into Christ and our belonging to one another, which began at our baptism.

The Eucharistic Congress will also foster the bond of charity within our local church. At the Last Supper, our Lord instituted the holy Eucharist as the living memorial of his sacrifice, the great love he showed us in laying down his life for his friends: "No one has greater love than this, to lay down one's life for one's friends" (Jn 15:13).

He also told his disciples, "As the Father loves me, so I also love you. Remain in my love" (Jn 15:9).

The love of Christ that is present in the sacrament of love, the Eucharist, flows from the altar and transforms us, and as a result we remain in his love as he said. It is this eucharistic love of Christ that we carry with us into the world to the poor, the sick, the heavily burdened and to everyone.

In this way we fulfill his command to "love one another as I love you" (Jn 15:12). The holy Eucharist strengthens the bond of charity in the church.

I look forward to seeing you at our Eucharistic Congress. These two days will produce abundant fruit of unity, charity and holiness for building up the body of Christ throughout our diocese.

May Jesus Christ in the holy Eucharist be praised, adored and loved with grateful affection at every moment!

Our Lady of Mercy dedicated

by parish members. All the sanctuary furnishings — from the altar to the lectern — were donated or made by the people of Our Lady of Mercy Church.

Entering the church, parishioners were astonished at the 9-foot crucifix hanging on the wall behind the sanctuary. The 7-foot corpus weighs 250 pounds and the cross, which was carved in Germany and shipped to Winston-Salem, weighs 200 pounds.

Perhaps more remarkable than the size of the crucifix is the fact that it was hand-carved by an anonymous parishioner, who spent 600 hours at the task. Assembling and hanging the crucifix took four hours.

This same dedicated parishioner spent 500 hours carving a representation of the Last Supper and is currently working on statues of Mary, Joseph and St. Francis, which are expected to be completed by Christmas.

The church's new Stations of the Cross were hand-carved from linden wood in a small town in Poland and donated by a pair of Our Lady of Mercy parishioners, who had emigrated years ago from that same town. A light mounted behind each station illuminates the head of Jesus, and a carved vine of thorns connects one station to the next along the church's walls.

"It almost would have been a shame if we had had the money to just pay for everything to be done by professionals," said Dave Bowe, building committee chair.

The interior of a 70-seat chapel that is a scale replica of the original Our Lady of Mercy Church is being completed by volunteers and should be ready by mid-October.

"This has really been the unfolding of a dream that has been shaping for a while," said Father Robinson. "In dedicating this church, we are taking an important step in the growth of our community. We will continue our commitment to education. We are also committed to serving the growing Hispanic community."

Our Lady of Mercy Church was founded in 1954 at Banner Road and Cascade Street in Winston-Salem. The parish also includes our Lady of Fatima Chapel on Third Street in downtown Winston-Salem.

In 1995, a weekly Mass in Spanish began, and the parish has continued outreach to the Spanish-speaking community. An estimated 500 Hispanics attend the Spanish Mass each week.

Father Robinson stressed that Our Lady of Mercy Church continued to support outreach efforts while building and paying for a new church.

"I hope (Our Lady of Mercy) continues to have its spirit of being warm and welcoming, of being concerned about those who are, in fact, forgotten," said Father Robinson.

"We cannot build this church in a dormant (environment) and forget our afflicted brothers and sisters," he said. "Worship and justice go together hand in hand."

Nun leads protest against filming of 'The Da Vinci Code'

LINCOLN, England (CNS) — A Catholic nun led a protest against the filming of "The Da Vinci Code" at a cathedral in Lincoln, saying the movie based on the best-seller is "an offense against God."

Sister Mary Michael, dressed in a habit with a veil, knelt in prayer in front of the doors of Lincoln Cathedral for 12 hours Aug. 15, the first of two days of filming in the city.

The cathedral, built by the Catholic Church in the 12th century but taken over by the Church of England during the Reformation, is serving as a double in the film for London's Westminster Abbey.

The 61-year-old nun, a former Discalced Carmelite who now belongs to Our Lady's Community of Peace and Mercy in Lincoln, also led a small group of protesters who greeted star Tom Hanks when he arrived at the medieval Gothic church.

Hanks waved briefly to fans before quickly walking into the cathedral with director Ron Howard.

Hanks and the film crew are said to have witnessed the protest.

Sister Mary Michael described Dan Brown's book, "The Da Vinci Code," as "blasphemous" for its story line that claims Jesus married Mary Magdalene and started a family.

She also said cathedral authorities were wrong to allow Sony Pictures to use the cathedral in exchange for a fee of about $180,000. The nun accused them of "simony," a sin defined by the "Catechism of the Catholic Church" as "the buying or selling of spiritual things."

"The church should not be accepting money for something that is not a true story," she said. "They (church leaders) really should be praying more, and then the money would come in."

Westminster Abbey authorities turned down Sony's request to film because they considered the story to be "theologically unsound."

Filming is also scheduled to take place at Rosslyn Chapel in Scotland, and Winchester Cathedral in Winchester, England.

Generosity is essential to Christian living

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

During a high school band-booster meeting, the introduction of an audacious program of fundraising activities set off a conflict. Some families said they could not make such a large time commitment. Others wanted a close accounting of hours worked by each band member or parent in all fundraising events.

The unspoken accusation was that some band members might shirk their fair share of the fundraising work but still get to enjoy full benefits of the trip. The atmosphere was tense with power struggle and resentment.

Remembering that past experience, I felt blessed by the recent attitude of our church youth as they raised funds for a mission trip. Some of them participated in only one fundraising project, some in all. Sometimes a youth came late or left early.

Not one teen questioned who had participated or how many times. A few youths joined the group late, but no one complained that they hadn't participated in fundraising. In fact, they were excited to have more people on the mission.

The difference in the two experiences?

The first was based on fairness — a laudable human convention created to offset our sinful tendency to injustice. But the latter experience was based on a higher value: generosity.

The second group learned their attitude through the generosity modeled by a Christian community.

They offered a parish breakfast and saw young families pay twice the ticket price. They witnessed a minister write a $25 check for a $5 car wash. They accepted donations from grandmothers and elderly parishioners who wanted to encourage their missionary spirit.

In this weekend's Gospel parable, Jesus emphasizes generosity over the human convention of equal pay for equal work. The latter is so ingrained in our culture that this parable is understandably hard for most of us to take on first reading.

But Jesus' teaching is that God's ways are even better than our ways, and we must stretch to imitate them.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis greets parishioners at the luncheon following the Mass commemorating St. Mary Church's 50th anniversary in Sylva Aug. 30.

Parish anniversary celebrated

In his homily Bishop Jugis said this was his first visit to St. Mary Church.

"What an appropriate day to come, on the anniversary of the dedication of this church," he said.

The approximately 130 attendees at the celebration included Knights of Columbus, Catholic Daughters of the Americas and lay Carmelites.

Concelebrating the Mass were a number of diocesan priests and two Polish priests visiting St. Barnabas Church in Arden. The Mass concluded with benediction and exposition of the Eucharist.

Father Ray Williams, pastor of St. Mary Church, was ill and unable to attend the celebration.

"What I stressed with the people and what I felt myself is that we're building on the past," he said later.

Until the mid-1950s, there were just two churches in far-western North Carolina: St. John the Evangelist Church in Waynesville and St. Joseph Church in Bryson City. Father Lawrence Newman pastored the seven western counties that now comprise the Smoky Mountain Vicariate.

Michael William Murphy, who later would build St. Margaret of Scotland Church in Maggie Valley and be ordained to the priesthood there at the age of 80, had wanted to build a church in Murphy in honor of his parents.

However, Jackson County did not have a Catholic church; Murphy agreed to provide the funds. Father Newman chose Sylva, where Masses were already being offered in the American Legion hall, a furniture store and other locations.

The church was dedicated in 1955, the same year that Bishop Waters agreed to let Glenmary Home Missioners staff parishes in the six counties west of Haywood.

Glenmary priests pastored St. Mary Church until diocesan priests took over in July 1988. Father William Evans became administrator.

Over the years, building programs added the parish hall and classroom facility, the church was enlarged and a rectory was built. Parishioners did much of the work. At the request of Father James Cahill, who preceded Father Williams as pastor, parishioners dedicated a memorial to the unborn.

Within the last few years, the church has been remodeled and confessionals have been constructed of local black walnut. This year, a new baptismal font was installed in the new baptistry.

"There are some wonderfully dedicated people here," said Judy Ross, who has attended Mass there for 25 years. "Father Williams is a beautiful pastor."

"We love the peacefulness of it, the solemnity," said Jean Murcym: she and her husband, Joe, have been seasonal parishioners for 11 years.

"I love the small parish, where you know people's names. I love the spirituality," said Larry Schaad, a parishioner since 1982. "I'm blessed. God brought me here for a reason."

Some 25 to 30 people attend daily Mass.

"And they really do like and enjoy the rosary and exposition of the Blessed Sacrament," Father Williams said. "Traditional devotions are very popular."

"This church is living up to the purpose for which it was dedicated," Bishop Jugis said in his homily. "This building is set aside for one single purpose: the celebration of the sacred rites so that the people of God can be formed into a living temple."

Although Sylva sits in a valley, it's at a higher elevation than Charlotte, the bishop said, adding that, "a city set on a hill cannot be hidden. The light from this altar flows through you to the people of Jackson County."

"Every time we come to this altar to celebrate the Eucharist, the structure of the living temple of the church is made more firm, because when we come here our incorporation into Christ becomes stronger," Bishop Jugis said.

"The opposite would be true if you never came to church after your baptism; the structure of the living temple of the church would be weak," he said. "It is faith that creates a bond of unity in all the people who come to this living temple, of which Christ is the cornerstone."

"You also have the bond of grace and the bond of charity to strengthen the body of the church," said the bishop.

End-of-life issues, Part 2

A Catholic look at North Carolina advance directives

Guest Column

BOB MASON
GUEST COLUMNIST

In my previous column, I discussed the Catholic Church's position on end-of-life issues. Below, I summarize North Carolina law in view of the church's teachings and what you can do to ensure that you have a set of advance directives that complies with both secular law and church teaching.

The term "advance directives" is a general term covering both living wills and health care powers of attorney. In North Carolina, a living will is known also as a declaration of desire for a natural death ("DDND"). The terms are synonymous.

— Health Care Power of Attorney (HCPA): It is a document used to designate one or more persons to make health care decisions for you if you are unable to do so. If you do not have a Health Care Power of Attorney, the situation will be ripe for confusion and discord over who will be the appropriate decision maker.

You may or may not agree with the person who ultimately prevails as your decision maker. For example, one adult child who may be appropriate to make health care decisions for a parent or an infirm spouse may not be a good decision maker.

If you do not have a living will (DDND), but you do have a Health Care Power of Attorney, the agent named under the Health Care Power of Attorney likely will be able to make the same end-of-life decisions that you could have directed under a DDND.

Talk to your health care agent carefully and make sure that person both knows and understands your wishes and is familiar with (and will rely on) church teaching. You must trust the person appointed and be able to rely upon that person to "do the right thing."

North Carolina law provides an approved Health Care Power of Attorney form. The form is readily available and, in its statutory form, provides very broad powers to the health care agent, both in routine medical situations and more dire situations.

Unless you thoroughly and explicitly trust your agent in all situations, you should limit the agent's powers.

Item 4 of the Statutory Form provides a bit of space to do this. I know of very few individuals, lacking legal or medical training, who could do an adequate job of completing the "blank space."

The North Carolina statute provides that the form supplied is not the only way to comply with the statute. I have told clients they can write a valid advance directive on the back of a grocery bag, as long as they know what they are doing.

National Right to Life has valid forms online for all states. Go to www.nrlc.org and click on "Will To Live." The North Carolina version is the statutory form, stripped of some provisions and with more structure given for Item 4.

Health Care Powers of Attorney allow you to appoint someone else to make decisions for you. Not all individuals have the luxury of a trusted, solid and available person to fill the role.

Further, the person chosen may not always be available. Or you may simply want to insure that your wishes are carried out.

A Declaration of a Desire for a Natural Death will override a Health Care Power of Attorney to the extent of any inconsistencies. All Catholics should carefully consider completing one. As I will explain, the statutory form is not the only way to go.

Declaration of a Desire for a Natural Death ("DDND"): That North Carolina Catholics understand how the state's Right to Natural Death Act works is vitally important. The act will apply to you whether you like it or not and regardless of whether you complete a DDND.

First, the act defines "persistent vegetative state" as "a medical condition whereby in the judgment of the attending physician [and one other physician] the patient suffers from a sustained complete loss of self-aware cognition and, without the use of extraordinary means or artificial nutrition or hydration, will succumb to death within a short period of time."

The definition is almost laughable if one analyzes it carefully: Two physicians need only agree that the patient (1) suffers from a "sustained" loss of self cognition, and (2) without ... artificial hydration or nutrition the patient will die. If the two physicians can agree to what ever "sustained" means, they can certainly agree that the patient will die if not given nutrition and hydration.

Second, the statutory form contains provisions that, if improperly completed, render the document self-negating.

Third (perhaps the most disturbing part), the act provides that, if some sort

Pope says people called to model lives on Jesus

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — People are called to model their lives on Jesus, since he has the redeeming power that lifts humanity out of the darkness of sin, Pope Benedict XVI said in his weekly general audience.

Idolaters "exchanged the glory of the immortal God for the likeness of the image of mortal man" and became more and more like the lifeless objects they worshipped, he said.

To free themselves from this trap, the pope said people must continuously model their lives after the image of "the Son of God, since we have been freed from the power of darkness and transferred to the kingdom of his beloved Son," who offers redemption and the forgiveness of sins.

The pope flew to the Vatican by helicopter from his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo Sept. 7 to deliver his weekly catechesis to the faithful gathered in St. Peter's Square.

He focused his talk on the canticle in Chapter 1 of St. Paul's Letter to the Colossians, which highlights how Jesus possesses full redemptive power.

In order to model one's life after the "image of the Son of God," one must enter into Christ's "feelings, his will and his thoughts," the pope said in remarks apart from his prepared text.

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

Jesus is "before all things," and it is in him that "all things hold together," the pope said in his text.

"Christ is our principle of cohesion, our mediator and all of creation's final destination," he said.

Pope Benedict said Christ became man in order to become part of the human community so he could "support and guide it" into a "harmonious and fertile" body.

The well-being and growth of humanity depend on Christ, who represents the foundation, "the root and the living hub" of mankind, he said.

To some 20,000 of the faithful from all over the world the pope offered greetings in 10 different languages, as well as his apostolic blessing.

Waving to the crowds, he left in his open-air jeep to hold private audiences in the Vatican with Irish President Mary McAleese and the prime minister of Madagascar, Jacques Sylla.

of advance directive that complies with the act has not been completed, and if two physicians determine that the patient is either "terminable and incurable" or in a "persistent vegetative state," then a decision to withhold extraordinary medical treatment or artificial hydration and nutrition may be taken by (in order): the healthcare agent appointed under a HCPA, the guardian, the spouse and then "a majority of the relatives of the first degree."

If none of the foregoing is available, then the attending physician may decide.

In other words, there is not a "substituted judgment standard" here ("what would Terri Schiavo have wanted" as proved — supposedly — by clear and convincing evidence; in Florida, at least the courts went through the motions of attempting to determine what Terri's subjective intent was).

Because of this rather disturbing situation, I believe it is important for all Catholics to complete a directive that agrees with both church teaching and the North Carolina statute.

Life is Christ

Catechists connect people to intimacy with Jesus

Oh, how good is the good God!

That simple statement summarizes so succinctly the conviction of St. Paul. Throughout his letters, St. Paul proclaims his gratitude for the Lord for being his savior and redeemer, model and guide.

Even in moments of persecution and suffering, Paul never fails to express the joy in his heart as he acknowledges with enthusiasm, "I live now not I, but Christ lives in me."

As we celebrate Catechetical Sunday throughout the United States on Sunday, Sept. 18, united to St. Paul we believe that Jesus Christ is the way, the truth and the life. Like St. Paul, we are convinced that we can do all things in Christ, who strengthens us.

How blessed we are in this diocese that so many men and women, committed to Christ, participate in the catechetical, teaching mission of the Catholic Church. They respond personally and publicly to the invitation shared by the risen Christ on the mount of the Ascension, "Teach them everything I have commanded you and know that I am with you."

Pope John Paul II reminded the catechist of his or her primary responsibility when he wrote, "The definitive aim of catechesis is to put people not only in touch but in communion, in intimacy with Jesus Christ" (On Catechesis in Our Time, No. 5).

Guest Column

It follows then that an essential aim of catechesis is to enable the hearer to appreciate, appropriate and assimilate the vision, values and virtues taught and lived by Jesus himself. Achieving that purpose is no easy task in a society that too often propagates the primacy of individualism, relativism, materialism and personal rights to the exclusion of personal responsibility.

In fidelity to the risen Christ, the catechist is to proclaim, "Choose life, not death. Choose love, not hatred. Choose peace, not violence."

The devoted, dedicated catechists who participate in the teaching mission of the church commit themselves to both sharing information and cultivating spiritual information. They minister to total persons who are on the way. They are to be attentive to minds and hearts, attitudes and behavior. They are sent to assist maturing believers to be rooted in Christ, growing in his grace and responsive to the needs of others.

Catechists, if they are to be faithful in service, must recognize the centrality of the Eucharist in life and ministry. The Eucharist, the bread of life, enables each of us to grow in intimacy with Jesus. The Eucharist, the bread for life, strengthens us as we strive to be friends, disciples and witnesses of the risen Lord. As catechists become what they eat, they witness most effectively to their commitment to teach as Jesus did.

St. Paul, writing to the Philippians from a prison cell, proclaimed, "For to me life is Christ." The words spoken by Jesus, "I came that you may have life and have it more abundantly," surely touched and transformed St. Paul to the core of his being.

May the catechists, called to continuing conversion, to life in Christ, invite those whom they serve to open their minds, hearts and souls to the risen Christ.

Dreams and our spiritual life

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

Q. Our question is about dreams. Do they have any significance in our spiritual lives? Is it wrong to believe in them? Some dreams seem to hit close to home. (New Jersey)

A. I'm not sure what you mean by believing in dreams. But to think about them, reflect on what happens in our dreams, even to learn something from them is not wrong. We have ample proof even in the Bible that God can use dreams to help people better understand their lives and what God's will is for them.

Psychological sciences still cannot tell us very much for sure about where dreams come from or what makes them happen. It is now widely agreed, however, that reflection on one's dreams, trying to enter into their images and moods, and to understand them can contribute much to one's self-knowledge, emotions and what is going on in his or her life.

One author who has studied and written extensively about psychological and spiritual influences on our lives suggests we "befriend our dreams," mull them over a bit, especially if they are particularly vivid. Even sharing them simply and nonjudgmentally with someone else may be helpful, sometimes to both persons.

It is true that dreams might be used wrongly, for example if one pretends to tell fortunes from them or allows oneself to become obsessed with a fantasy world. But it could be just as wrong not to accept dreams as a natural, if puzzling, part of life or to assume there is something magical, even diabolical, about them.

Unborn pain

Compassion for animals; why not babies?

"It is therefore declared to be the policy of the United States that the slaughtering of livestock and the handling of livestock in connection with slaughter shall be carried out only by humane methods."

Those words come from the "Humane Methods of Slaughter Act," a law that expresses our concern for the pain experienced by animals, but that more fundamentally expresses a dimension of our own humanity. In Australia, the national Health and Medical Research Council requires painkillers to be used on the fetuses of animals!

So what about human fetuses?

On April 6, 2004, the following testimony was given in U.S. District Court (District of Nebraska) by Dr. Kanwaljeet Anand before Judge Richard G. Kopf in the case of Leroy Carhart, M.D., et. al. v. Ashcroft.

Q. "So, Doctor, do you have an opinion as to whether the partial-birth abortion procedure causes pain to the fetus?"

A. "If the fetus is beyond 20 weeks of gestation, I would assume that there will be pain caused to the fetus. And I believe it will be severe and excruciating pain caused to the fetus."

Q. "What do you mean by severe and excruciating pain?"

A. "You see, the threshold for pain is very low. The fetus is very likely extremely sensitive to pain during the gestation of 20 to 30 weeks.

"And so the procedures associated with the partial-birth abortion that I just described would be likely to cause severe pain, right from the time the fetus is being manipulated and being handled to the time that the incision is made, and the brain or the contents, intracranial contents, are sucked out."

In 1994, an article in the prestigious British medical journal, the Lancet, revealed hormonal stress reactions in the fetus. The article concluded with the recommendation that painkillers be used when surgery is done on the fetus.

The authors wrote, "This applies not just to diagnostic and therapeutic procedures on the fetus, but possibly also to termination of pregnancy, especially by surgical techniques involving dismemberment."

In 1991, scientific advisors to the Federal Medical Council in Germany had made a similar recommendation.

In August 2001, Great Britain's Medical Research Council concluded that pain perception may be as early as 20 weeks; other studies place it as early as 10 weeks.

It should be noted that each year in the United States alone, more than 18,000 abortions take place at 21 or more weeks of pregnancy.

The Unborn Child Pain Awareness Act now has been introduced in Congress, to inform women having abortions at 20 weeks or more that their baby may feel pain. The legislation deserves our support. It would require that the mother be given the option to provide painkillers to her baby. This is not to justify abortion, but will certainly make many people think twice about it.

Many abortion supporters will, of course, continue to deny reality. As Bertrand Russell wrote, "A fisherman once told me that fish have neither sense nor sensation, but how he knew this, he could not tell me."

CHARLOTTE — Out of the devastation of Hurricane Katrina have come countless stories of death and destruction. But there are also stories of hope, recovery and renewed faith.

Even though Ali and Maddy Cuevas have lost many of their belongings, they realize those are only possessions that can be replaced.

What did survive Hurricane Katrina — their family, their friends, their church (St. John the Evangelist Church in Gulfport, Miss.) — is much more important.

THE STRUGGLE FOR LIFE

Jason Torres reaches out to his infant daughter, Susan Anne Catherine Torres, at Virginia Hospital Center in Arlington, Va. The baby's mother, Susan Michelle, was brain-dead and had been kept on life support until the baby was delivered Aug. 2. The baby died five weeks later of heart failure following surgery for a perforated intestine.

Baby delivered from brain-dead Virginia woman dies at 5 weeks old

ARLINGTON, Va. (CNS) — Susan Anne Catherine Torres, the 5-week-old baby of Jason and Susan Torres, died at 12:01 a.m. Sept. 12 of heart failure following surgery for a perforated intestine at the Children's National Medical Center in Washington, according to the hospital's statement.

The child was born Aug. 2 after a three-month struggle to keep her mother alive. Susan Torres suffered brain damage in May from melanoma cancer that had spread to her brain and was kept on life support until the baby could be born.

The mother died Aug. 3 after life support was removed.

"After the efforts of this summer to bring her into the world, this is obviously a devastating loss," said Justin Torres, the baby's uncle, in the family's statement.

"We wish to thank all the people who sustained us in prayer over the past 17 weeks," he said. "It was our fondest wish that we could have been able to share Susan's homecoming with the world."

Susan Anne Catherine was being cared for in the neonatal intensive care unit at the Virginia Hospital Center in Arlington. When first born, the premature baby was "vigorous" and many expected that she would survive despite her original due date being seven weeks away.

On Sept. 9, Susan was transferred to the Washington medical center, where she was treated for her intestinal problems.

The disorder, necrotizing enterocolitis, caused an infection that "overwhelmed her tiny body, leading to multi-system organ failure," said the center's statement. "The team initially tried to medically stabilize her, but ultimately performed two surgeries. Unfortunately, she was too sick and fragile to recover."

Parishioners at St. Rita Church in Alexandria, where Jason Torres and his family are members, heard the news at morning Mass Sept. 12 and immediately offered prayers for the child and the family.

"At this painful moment of redoubled loss, we commend Jason and the entire Torres family to the Lord in prayer," said Arlington Bishop Paul S. Loverde.

"Confident that Susan Anne Catherine Torres is already reunited with her mother, we thank the Lord for their witness and for the gift of their courageous lives," he said. "May the Lord draw close to the Torres family at this time and provide them with comfort and peace where words fail."

Pellegrino named to head president's bioethics council

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Dr. Edmund Pellegrino, a physician and longtime leader in developing bioethical standards based on Catholic values, has been named chairman of the President's Council on Bioethics.

Pellegrino, 85, said that among the topics he plans to address in his new post are greater access to health care and issues involved in end-of-life care.

Pellegrino, retired professor of medicine and medical ethics at Georgetown University's Medical Center and a former president of The Catholic University of America, will replace Dr. Leon Kass, bioethics professor at the University of Chicago, on Oct. 1. Kass, chairman since 2001, will continue as a member of the council.

The announcement was made Sept. 8 by the White House. The council was created in 2001 by President George W. Bush to advise him on bioethical issues. Previous presidents have had similar advisory boards.

"The council has set a very high bar in addressing many of the serious bioethical issues before our country," said Pellegrino.

"Many significant issues remain, ranging from the challenges of ensuring access to health care to meeting critically important needs in end-of-life care," he said.

Pellegrino is also a member of the International Bioethics Committee of the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

On Sept. 29 the council plans to issue its report on aging. It will be the seventh report prepared by the council. Other report topics have included human cloning and stem-cell research.

Positions Pellegrino has taken during his career include opposing a right for a person to commit suicide or to be assisted in dying and opposing the creation of human embryos for experimentation and the destruction of human embryos for research.

Pope challenges nations to keep commitments to U.N. goals for poor

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI challenged participants at the U.N. World Summit to fulfill their previous commitments to help the poor, sick and hungry.

The pope, speaking at his Sunday blessing Sept. 11, said he was sending Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican secretary of state, to attend the summit in New York Sept. 14-16. The summit's agenda includes world peace, human rights, development aid and U.N. internal reforms.

"I express my fervent hope that the governments united there may find appropriate solutions to reach the great goals that have been set previously, in the spirit of harmony and generous solidarity," the pope told several hundred pilgrims gathered in the courtyard of his summer villa outside Rome.

"I especially hope that effective concrete measures can be implemented to respond to the most urgent problems created by extreme poverty, sickness and hunger, which afflict so many populations," he said.

The Vatican has been a strong supporter of the Millennium Development Goals of 2000, in which world leaders laid out a timetable to cut global poverty in half by 2015. To meet the goal, richer countries would increase development aid to 0.7 percent of their gross domestic product.

The brief remarks at his Sunday blessing marked the second time in less than three months that Pope Benedict has reminded world leaders of their pledge to help the poor and urged them to meet the Millennium Development Goals.

The New York summit was expected to draw more than 170 heads of state and government to participate in discussions and plenary sessions. It was to be followed by the opening of the U.N. General Assembly's 60th session.

On Sept. 11, pope pays homage to all victims of terrorism

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — On the anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the United States, Pope Benedict XVI paid homage to all victims of terrorism around the world and appealed for an end to hatred and renewed dedication to peace.

"Today, 11 Sept., we remember the victims of terrorist violence throughout the world," he said at the end of his noontime Angelus prayer at the papal summer residence in Castel Gandolfo.

"May God inspire men and women of good will everywhere to renounce hatred and to build a world of justice, solidarity and peace," he said.

In Rome, U.S. Archbishop John P. Foley said the unpredictable attacks by terrorists and the recent Hurricane Katrina disaster in the United States remind people that "we are dependent every moment of our lives upon the Lord."

While human beings are autonomous, they are not self-sufficient, he said in his Sept. 11 homily at Rome's American parish, Santa Susanna.

Christians are called to live their lives "in that delicate balance between personal responsibility and effort and the realization that we depend totally and utterly upon God, our creator and redeemer," he said.

"How many people put their trust in money and possessions — and we see how soon it can all be lost. How many people put their trust in power — and we see how soon we find ourselves powerless in the hands of a few fanatics or in the face of a force of nature," said the archbishop.

He said being utterly dependent on God may sound like a limitation, but "in reality (it is) our strength."

"No matter what tragedy may befall, we are the Lord's. He is present to us at every moment of our lives," he said.

"If we live, we live for the Lord and, if we die, we die for the Lord," he said, quoting from that day's Mass reading from St. Paul's Letter to the Romans. The archbishop said the Lord is the one "who will receive us when we die."

Training the trainers

Susan Chesnut leads a Protecting God's Children for Facilitators training workshop at the diocesan Pastoral Center in Charlotte Aug. 19. The program is a professional training session that teaches facilitators how to present the Protecting God's Children Program to adults. It also teaches facilitators how to facilitate group discussions and to incorporate diocesan policies and procedures into the sessions.

The Protecting God's Children Program teaches staff, volunteers and parents in diocesan parishes, schools, agencies and ministries to recognize the warning signs of child sexual abuse and to respond appropriately. Over the past two years, 10,727 diocesan employees, parents and volunteers have gone through the training in compliance with the Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People, a document adopted by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops in 2002.

DIOCESAN REQUIREMENTS FOR REPORTING MINISTRY-RELATED SEXUAL ABUSE OF A MINOR

1. Any individual having actual knowledge of or reasonable cause to suspect an incident of ministry-related sexual abuse is to immediately report the incident to the Chancery.
2. The Chancery will then report the incident to the proper civil authorities. The individual reporting the incident to the Chancery will be notified of the particulars regarding the Chancery's filing of the incident with civil authorities.
3. This reporting requirement is not intended to supersede the right of an individual to make a report to civil authority, but is to ensure proper, complete and timely reporting. Should an individual choose to make a report to civil authority, a report is still to be made to the Chancery.

Animated youths

TEENS TO PERFORM AT NATIONAL CATHOLIC CONFERENCE

HICKORY — Eight youths from St. Aloysius Church in Hickory recently returned from Atlanta, Ga., where they have been training as youth animators for the upcoming National Catholic Youth Conference in October.

The biennial, four-day conference of prayer, community and empowerment for Catholic teenagers, this year themed "Yeah! — Winds of Change," is to be held at the Georgia World Congress Center and Dome in Atlanta Oct. 27-29.

This year's schedule includes general and concurrent sessions addressing a wide variety of topics including forgiveness, Catholic spirituality and prayer, global issues, sexuality and leadership.

There also will be special activities including a concert and exhibits.

The youth group from St. Aloysius Church, along with about 45 youths from other East Coast parishes, will perform onstage with contemporary Catholic musicians in front of an expected 25,000 youths and adult chaperones. They will sing solos, cantor psalms and serve as lectors.

Youths from St. Aloysius Church are Chris Beeson, Michael Gissy, Quinn Fitzgerald, Elizabeth Queen, Paige Campbell, Miriam McDonald, Jackie Leufken and Hannah Reid, all members of the parish's Life Teen Praise Team.

Boy Scout Troop 12 marks 25 years

CHARLOTTE — Boy Scout Troop 12 celebrated its 25th anniversary earlier this summer with an awards banquet at St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte.

The troop began in 1940, based at Oakhurst School on Monroe Road. It was hosted by other churches before moving to St. John Neumann Church in 1980. The troop is sponsored by Knights of Columbus St. John Neumann Council 7343.

Several of the 15 Boy Scouts from the troop who have earned Eagle Scout awards attended the anniversary celebration.

School celebrates 75th birthday with balloons — lots of them

CHARLOTTE — The blue sky above St. Patrick School temporarily turned green and white recently.

Students and teachers at St. Patrick School in Charlotte, as well as Father Paul Gary, rector of St. Patrick Cathedral, released about 300 green and white balloons Sept. 8 as part of the school's 75th anniversary.

After a special "birthday" Mass, the students formed a giant "75" on the school playground before releasing the balloons. They then enjoyed birthday cake.

The school opened as O'Donoghue School but was renamed in 1965.

Alumni are raising money to provide bells for the school's empty bell tower. The bells will be used to call students to class and for graduation and May crowning ceremonies.

The 75th Anniversary Committee is looking for all alumni for a special celebration March 17, 2006.

Hurricane builds faith

Stacey and Kevin Cuevas, in Salisbury and are attending Sacred Heart School. They and their parents, Kerwin and Peggy Cuevas, live in Long Beach, Miss., four miles west of Gulfport. Their house is only about 350 yards from the beach. During the storm, they sought refuge at Peggy Cuevas' mother's home in North Long Beach. Instead of shaking their faith, as some might expect, Katrina actually strengthened it. "(This experience) makes you lean more on God," said Ali. "It makes you realize that you really do have a great family."

"I know God will answer all our prayers and protect us," said Maddy. A few days after the hurricane, the Cuevas family was walking along the beach when they encountered Father Louis Lohan, pastor of St. Thomas the Apostle Church in Long Beach. Only the church's exterior frame survived Katrina, and officials are unsure if the frames can be saved.

When the family asked Father Lohan his opinion about the devastation, "He just said 'It's all just stuff,'" said Ali. "What you lost can be rebuilt."

"I thought we had it really bad and then we watched the New Orleans (news coverage)," said Maddy. The sisters' respite in Salisbury will likely be over soon. Their school in Mississippi is scheduled to re-open Sept. 20. Riding out Hurricane Katrina hasn't scared the girls too much. When asked whether they would evacuate for the next hurricane, Maddy replied, "It depends on what category it is."

The Grass family of New Orleans wasn't as fortunate as the Cuevas. The family left New Orleans in the early morning hours Aug. 28 and arrived in Charlotte Sept. 1 to stay with Grass' sister. As of Sept. 12, their month-old house was under at least eight feet of water. Glenn Grass, a professional watchmaker, lost all of his watching-making tools in the flooding. His wife, Jane Katner-Grass, managed a cooking school and she isn't sure if it will re-open. They don't think there will be a market for their skills in New Orleans any time soon. They've temporarily relocated to Charlotte, perhaps for two years. Still, Katner-Grass realized how lucky they are. All of their family members survived the hurricane, and they are now staying rent-free in a townhouse. "The outpouring from the community has been wonderful," she said. As reported in the Sept. 9 issue of The Catholic News & Herald, the three Grass children are enrolled tuition-free at Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools. "The diocese has been wonderful to us," Katner-Grass remarked. Katner-Grass admits the past few weeks have been difficult. She cries when she's happy; she cries when she's sad. "The kids are amazing ... they've been so positive and upbeat," she said. "They love their new schools and the kids have made them feel so welcome and at home. 'Thank you' isn't enough."

The Grasses come from long lines of devout Catholic families. Four of Katner-Grass' great aunts were women religious in Louisiana. "We feel like our ancestors are watching over us," Katner-Grass said. "(This experience) has renewed our faith."

Banding together with aid

The band-aids were among other items collected by students to be delivered to hurricane victims through Hearts with Hands, Inc., a Christian, nondenominational charitable organization that provides aid to victims of poverty, natural disaster and famine. Students and faculty gathered in the school parking lot for a prayer service for the victims.

Asheville Catholic families are providing housing for three families from the hurricane-stricken area. Some students have donated school supplies and uniforms.

The Asheville Catholic students "have really made an effort to welcome and help these students, some who still have one or both parents unaccounted for," said Alyssa Kennedy, religion teacher.

Diocesan foundation presents grant checks at Sacred Heart Church

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

SALISBURY — Jim Kelley, diocesan director of development, presented three grant checks from the Foundation for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte to Sacred Heart Church and School and the Salisbury Vicariate Hispanic Ministry during Masses Sept. 11.

Sacred Heart School received a $5,000 grant to help pay the salary of a part-time employee who will provide academic assistance to the school's Hispanic students.

The newly established Hispanic Ministry for the Salisbury Vicariate received a $4,000 grant, which will be used for evangelization materials and for spiritual formation programs for Hispanic youth, young adults and adults in the five parishes and one mission of the vicariate.

"Through the foundation, the Diocese of Charlotte serves ministries that are not independently funded," said Sister of St. Joseph Joan Pearson, diocesan coordinator of Hispanic Ministry for the Salisbury Vicariate.

The Hispanic Ministry works to fully welcome Hispanics into their parishes.

An additional $2,500 grant was given to Sacred Heart Church to be used for the parish's Hispanic ministry activities.

"These grants allow us to reach more individuals than we would normally be able to with our parish budget," said Father John Putnam, pastor of Sacred Heart Church and vicar forane for the Salisbury Vicariate.

The diocesan foundation provides endowments for the diocese and its parishes, agencies and organizations. An endowment is a permanent fund in which the principal is never touched. The income may be used in accordance with the wishes of the donor organization or individual.

Through the creation of endowments, the foundation provides a means to generate future and sustainable income for Catholic entities in the diocese.

Called and gifted

Reflecting on vocations, spiritual gifts to transform the world

BY BARBARA GADDY
SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

MOORESVILLE — Christ calls each person to a particular vocation — a unique life of work of love that transforms each one and the world.

That was the message relayed during the "Called and Gifted Workshop," hosted at St. Therese Church in Mooresville Aug. 12-13.

Bryan Dolejsi and Mary Sharon Moore, presenters from the Catherine of Siene Institute, helped 60 participants from six parishes recognize that they are called to participate in the church's mission to the world.

The participants took the Catholic Spiritual Gifts Inventory — a series of 120 statements that identify patterns in their lives and several specific spiritual gifts for more extensive discernment.

"Completing the Catholic Spiritual Gifts Inventory gave me not only insight into what God is asking me to do and be, but it also gave me an appreciation for the gifts he has bestowed on those around me — colleagues, family and friends," said Kerry Ann Tornessello, stewardship chair at St. Therese Church.

"We truly are all gifted and called," she said.

The group then explored the various charisms outlined in the inventory. Many felt it would have been easy to get caught up in the excitement of owning these charisms.

Dolejsi and Moore emphasized these spiritual gifts were given not for any one person's benefit, but for the benefit of others. It is the essence of stewardship — recognizing that God is the real source of what people have, and that people are called to use God's gifts in service to others.

"This workshop was a once-in-lifetime event for many of us," said Joe Gutekanst, a parishioner of St. Therese Church.

"It seems that we go through the days, months, years of our lives never asking ourselves what are those specific gifts that God has given us, and how that relates to our lives — what we want to be when we 'grow up,'" said Gutekanst.

"Brian and Mary Sharon have really opened eyes and energized folks — not just to better discern their life's mission, but also showing us the tremendous opportunity to use this workshop as an effective tool in stewardship efforts on a parish level," he said.

By the workshop's end, participants had an opportunity to identify five or six charisms that emerged from their inventories. They were sent forth with a challenge to further explore those charisms by spending time in prayer, speaking with others about how God uses them and getting involved in some activity that would best express their own unique gifts.

Communicants to lead procession me honor Jesus in a special way at our diocesan Eucharistic Congress," wrote Bishop Jugis.

The eucharistic procession will start at St. Peter Church and end at the convention center.

"I will be carrying the Blessed Sacrament in the monstrance, and you will be in the procession in front of me dropping rose petals to honor our Lord," wrote Bishop Jugis.

Participating communicants are asked to wear their first Communion clothing, be in front of St. Peter Church by 7:15 a.m., and to have a permission form completed by their parents or guardians, who are invited to walk along the side of the procession.

Everyone in the diocese is invited to participate in the eucharistic procession. Following the Eucharist will be banner carriers representing churches, schools and organizations in the Diocese of Charlotte. The faithful are invited to join the procession as their banner passes by.

Pope urges Catholics to rediscover cross as sign of faith

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI urged Catholics to rediscover a simple but profound symbol of their faith: the sign of the cross.

The Eucharist and the cross of Christ's crucifixion have a deep connection that deserves contemplation by the faithful, the pope said Sept. 11. A perfect occasion for reflection, he said, was the Sept. 14 feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross.

The pope said that just as every celebration of the Eucharist is a remembrance of Christ's passion, death and resurrection, the cross is the manifestation of the "act of infinite love with which the Son of God saved man and the world from sin and death."

"For this reason, the sign of the cross is the fundamental gesture of prayer for the Christian," the pope said.

"To mark oneself with the sign of the cross is to pronounce a visible and public 'yes' to the one who died for us and rose again, to the God who in the humility and weakness of his love is omnipotent, stronger than all the power and intelligence of the world," he said.

The pope said the cross is the means through which Christ "entered into his glory and reconciled all humanity, overcoming all hatred."

Domine, Non Sum Dignus

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 25

Last time, we examined the rituals that prepare and dispose us to receive holy Communion.

As a final act of preparation, the celebrant raises the host above the paten or chalice and recites the words of St. John the Baptist: "This is the Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world." All respond with the words of the Centurion soldier from the Gospel: "Domine, non sum dignus..." ["Lord, I am not worthy to receive you, but only say the word and I shall be healed" in the current English translation] (Matthew 8:8).

This final act of humility and trust is not only the most appropriate preparation for holy Communion but the best perspective to approach our discussion this week: "Lord, I am not worthy."

No one is worthy, per se, to receive the most sublime gift of the church's treasury, namely, Christ himself. It is only necessary that the priest receives holy Communion at the Mass for the sacrifice to be complete and the Mass to be offered validly.

However, the church has encouraged the faithful to receive holy Communion, so that they too might partake of the innumerable spiritual graces and benefits of the holy Eucharist. The church even mandates the faithful to receive holy Communion at least once a year during the Easter season (Canon 920). But who is allowed to receive holy Communion?

According to Canon Law, "Any baptized person not prohibited by law can and must be admitted to holy Communion" (Canon 912). Those prohibited by law would include those not in communion with the Catholic Church, children under the age of reason, those who persevere in manifest grave sin, etc.

For those who are not permitted to receive holy Communion, it should be noted that they are not excluded from the worship of God by attending Mass and they should be encouraged to make a "spiritual communion" while others are receiving Communion. A spiritual communion is the traditional practice of uniting oneself to Christ in a prayer of self-offering that seeks to receive the graces and benefits of Christ's sacrifice.

Returning to the Communion Rite of the Mass, the priest receives the consecrated host after saying silently, "May the body of Christ bring me to everlasting life." Similarly, he receives the Precious Blood after saying silently, "May the blood of Christ bring me to everlasting life."

At this point, the celebrant may be assisted by other ordinary ministers of holy Communion, such as concelebrating priests or deacons. If there are not enough ordinary ministers to distribute holy Communion, extraordinary ministers now approach the altar to receive Communion and assist the priest.

After the celebrant has received Communion, the Communion antiphon is recited or the Communion chant begins. The purpose of the hymn is to express unity of voices and joy of heart while the faithful begin the communion procession.

As the faithful approach the minister to receive holy Communion, the communicant is to make a sign of reverence before receiving. The general norm in the United States is to bow before the Blessed Sacrament and to bow again before the chalice containing the Precious Blood.

After the reception of holy Communion, the priest places the remaining hosts in the tabernacle and purifies the sacred vessels at the altar or credence table. At this time, it is highly recommended to observe a few moments of silence, since the body and blood of the Lord is truly present in the body and soul of each communicant. These are the most precious moments on earth.

"Domine, non sum dignus, Lord, I am not worthy" and yet, he continues to "welcome sinners and eat with them" (Cf. Matthew 9:11). After a few moments of silence, the celebrant stands and invites the faithful to pray: "Let us pray." The Communion Rite closes with the third proper collect or prayer of the Mass, known as the "Prayer after Communion."

Next time, we will examine the Concluding Rites of the Mass.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

Homeschooling families celebrate ministry

BY DAN AND BETH OHLHAUT
SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

CHARLOTTE — Parents are given a profound privilege to form their children in the Catholic faith and with this come many moral responsibilities, said Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

The bishop presented that message to more than 200 homeschoolers during a Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral Aug. 13. Most of the families present at the Mass participate in one of several Catholic homeschool support groups in the Charlotte area.

During the Mass, Bishop Jugis baptized two babies.

In his homily, Bishop Jugis reminded the parents of their role as "first teachers of their children in the ways of faith." He spoke of creating an environment in their homes where the "flame of faith" given to each child at his or her baptism can burn brightly and can be protected from the damaging winds of this tumultuous world.

The bishop commended all those in attendance for taking so seriously the responsibility of being the first and primary educators of their children.

"It was uplifting to have the bishop's blessing and to realize that homeschooling is a ministry," said Gayle Fitzgerald, who, with her husband Paul, homeschool three of their five children.

Sandi Winiarski will begin homeschooling her daughter this year.

"Our decision to homeschool was already made when we went to the Mass, but the bishop's words confirmed it," said Winiarski.

"I was surprised to see so many people there. I didn't realize how many Catholic homeschoolers there were in the area," she said. "It helped my daughter to see all the kids there, too."

According to figures from the Seton Home Study School of Virginia, homeschooling has become popular with many Catholic families. The decision to educate one's children at home may be motivated by a variety of reasons, but the primary concern of Catholic homeschooling parents is to give their children a Catholic education.

After Communion at the special Mass, a child from each family processed to the statue of the Blessed Mother and presented her with a flower. The home schooling families then presented Bishop Jugis with a "spiritual bouquet."

The spiritual donations are to be given during the 2005-2006 school year and include 1,779 rosaries, 127 Masses, 15 novenas, 670 chaplets and 299 holy hours and other acts of charity and sacrifice.

Dan and Beth Ohlhaut are parishioners of St. Mark Church in Huntersville.

classrooms, three offices, chapel, sacristy, kitchen, locker room and 7,128 square-foot multipurpose room.

The activity center will be used for faith formation, parish celebrations, sporting activities and fundraising activities. This summer the parish held its largest Vacation Bible School to date, with more than 100 kids participating.

"The center will allow us to fill a need for growth in the area and will help draw people already in the parish closer to the church," said Randy DeMao, a parishioner and former member of the building committee and pastoral council.

"You certainly have waited a long time for the dedication of this center," said Bishop Jugis during his homily. The bishop served as administrator of Holy Spirit Church from November 1998 until June 1999.

It was in 1999 that the pastoral council began a survey as a result of parish growth. The survey indicated a pressing need for classrooms, youth activities and programs and parish activities, as well as more space and better kitchen facilities.

Coupled with growth projections from the diocesan Office of Planning, which predicted a congregation of 375 families by 2005, plans were finalized in 2001 for the parish activity center and the capital campaign began in 2002.

The parish currently has more than 400 families, many of whom were involved in the construction efforts. Parishioners had "work parties" for about six months to paint the gym, classrooms, halls and chapel, to lay tile, stain doors and paint doorframes, to install memorial bricks at the front entrance.

"Everything was done by the people, inside and out. They worked hard," said Father Ayathupadam. "It was a big undertaking, but something great is done."

Bishop Jugis said it was important to bless the building and "ask God's blessing to come down and remain with it forever."

"It is a holy place where Catholics will gather, where young people and adults will be taught the faith and where the body of Christ, which you are, will gather for various parish activities," he said. "Therefore, this is a holy place."

Bishop Jugis said the building should not be considered a separate building from the church, but an extension of it.

"The holy Eucharist is the source and summit and it is celebrated each week here in the church," said the bishop. "What happens there in the center finds its source here in the church, where we celebrate the love of Christ. It cannot be separated from what happens here."

Years of growth

Holy Spirit Church's history includes a period of years without a structure for the congregation to call home.

Then-Bishop Michael J. Begley established a mission in Denver during the late 1970s due to the growing Catholic population. With no church building, Mass was celebrated for about 20 people at a nearby Episcopal church beginning in March 1979.

By 1987, more than 100 families were worshipping together at Mass.

In May 1988, the Diocese of Charlotte purchased a former school building that was considered a community landmark. The building was renovated to include a nave, sanctuary, offices, classrooms, living quarters and space for social events.

The new church was ready by Christmas 1988, and the first Mass was celebrated Dec. 25. Then-Bishop John F. Donoghue blessed the structure in May 1989.

By 1996, about 265 families were worshipping at Holy Spirit Church, which was by then a mission of St. Therese Church in Mooresville. On May 31, 1998, Holy Spirit Church was officially designated as a parish in a ceremony presided by then-Bishop William G. Curlin.

In July of that same year, a new rectory was purchased and furnished. Ground was broken for the activity center Dec. 7, 2003.

"We desperately needed this building," said Cathy Touchstone, pastoral council chair. "It's hard to believe it's finally here."

Two books on Tolkien's Catholic vision in 'The Lord of the Rings'

REVIEWED BY JEAN GONZALEZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

A student persuaded J.R.R. Tolkien to publish "The Hobbit," a book he had written for his children. When adults unexpectedly embraced the 1937 book, his publishers called for a sequel.

Almost two decades later, Tolkien presented his epic: "The Lord of the Rings." Too large for a single book, it was published as a trilogy and has had a large adult audience ever since. That audience was broadened in recent years by a film trilogy and video strategy games that took Middle-earth into new media.

An online search finds more than 300 book titles commenting on the trilogy and its author. Now two new books look at the spirituality and Catholic influence in Tolkien's works.

"The Power of the Ring: The Spiritual Vision Behind 'The Lord of the Rings'" is a relatively short, but jam-packed, offering from Stratford Caldecott, a Catholic lay scholar and director of the Chesterton Institute for Faith and Culture in Oxford, England.

Caldecott begins with a lesson on Tolkien's history and love for the Catholic faith. Tolkien was raised by a Catholic priest, who was a friend of the family, after his mother died when he was 12.

Tolkien discussed his epic novel in letters written to his son, Christopher, and in companion works about the history of Middle-earth. Caldecott uses these writings to explain Tolkien's spirituality in his own words. Caldecott identifies grace, marriage and a "sacramental universe" as elements in "The Lord of the Rings" that reveal a Catholic influence.

Caldecott's book is not an easy read; it requires concentration and patience. That may not deter "Ring" enthusiasts. But the first page should read: "Heavy references ahead. No novices allowed." This is not a book for a person hoping to gain background knowledge before picking up the trilogy.

"The Battle for Middle-earth: Tolkien's Divine Design in 'The Lord of the Rings'" is a more gentle read. Its author, the Rev. Fleming Rutledge, an Episcopal priest with previously published works including "The Bible and The New York Times," shows an obvious love for Tolkien's work.

Rev. Rutledge describes his own work as a "theological narrative" that seeks to "specifically identify the allusions to a transcendent agency that Tolkien has placed along the way."

Like Caldecott, Rev. Rutledge refers to Tolkien's letters to support his theories. He says it was part of Tolkien's plan that the characters and setting of "The Lord of the Rings" do not demonstrate a religion. Using a letter Tolkien wrote to fellow author C.S. Lewis (who wrote "The Chronicles of Narnia"), Rev. Rutledge explains how Tolkien hoped to reach two types of readers: Christian believers and those who have no theistic faith.

Comparing the narrative structure of Tolkien to the narrative structures in the Old and New Testaments, he says Tolkien hoped to reach unbelievers through a majestic story that included a disguised theological design.

At 373 pages, Rev. Rutledge's book is an enjoyable read that can be digested bit by bit. Readers should be familiar with Tolkien's characters and settings to appreciate Rev. Rutledge's book, although the book could inspire those who have not read the trilogy to pick up the masterpiece for themselves.

Gonzalez serves as projects editor for The Florida Catholic in Orlando.

Actions over appearances

BY DAN LUBY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Catholics used to be easier to spot in a crowd.

When our religious medals glittered in the locker room or at the beach, when we crossed ourselves at the foul line or passing in front of the parish church, when our gardens were decorated with statues of Mary or St. Francis, when we unwrapped our aromatic tuna sandwiches on Friday in the cafeteria, we knew that others recognized us as Catholic.

Lots of those external markers of Catholicism have become less visible in recent years. Many have lamented that change and wished for a restoration of such distinctive signals of Catholic identity.

While such a move could have significant benefits for the spiritual lives of individuals and for the mission of the church, Paul's exhortation to the Philippians in Sunday's Mass readings proposes an entirely more transformative way to distinguish ourselves as Catholics.

"Humbly regard others as more important than yourselves," he urges them and us. It's a simple enough instruction, but deeply challenging.

What would our families look like if visitors to our homes saw, in addition to religious icons, people treating not only guests but one another as if the other's needs were paramount? How would our parishes appear to neighborhood observers if the cardinal rule for our communal attitude and behavior were putting our own needs second to those of the other?

What would our nation look like if Catholics as a body supported public policy that saw other nations and peoples as more important than ourselves or that put the needs of the world's poor and powerless, from womb to tomb and from pole to pole, ahead of our own?

May our hearing of the Gospel so move us to conversion that when people see us in the public square our Catholic identity shines forth, not only in our explicitly religious symbols but in our imitation of Christ, who poured himself out for the sake of love.

Director of 'Emily Rose' hopes film prompts viewers to examine faith

NEW YORK (CNS) — The director and co-writer of "The Exorcism of Emily Rose" said he wants the movie's patrons to ask themselves, "Is there a devil? and, more importantly, is there a God? and, if so, what's the implication of that?"

"Those are questions to be reckoned with, and I'm unabashed in the belief that everyone has to reckon with those questions," said Scott Derrickson. "In some way, everyone lives their life based on what they believe."

"This movie is intended to stretch and provoke everyone who sees it, including Christians," he added.

Echoing the closing argument made by a lawyer played by Laura Linney in the movie: "Either there's a God or there's not. And whichever way you decide, it's still a terrifying aspect to contemplate."

Derrickson said one purpose of making "Emily Rose" was precisely to ask these questions, although to do so he had to make "a scary, entertaining film."

"The research phase (of the movie) was horrible," Derrickson said. "I must have read two dozen books on possession. I viewed a lot of video of real exorcisms. ... That was a part of the (research process) I'll never do again."

Asked if he believes people, even devout Christians, can be possessed, Derrickson replied, "I do."

"It's an important theological question," said Derrickson, a Presbyterian who calls himself "very close" to becoming Catholic.

"The manner in which I would answer it is ... that I do not believe that a spirit-filled Christian can become demon-possessed," he said.

"However, what I will say is that for every one of those theological rules that we like to systematically create, there are often exceptions. I don't believe that God will tell me to commit a sin, but he told Abraham to murder his son," he said.

Making a movie with conspicuous religious and theological content is not the easiest thing to do in Hollywood, Derrickson admitted.

He noted that the movie got the green light "one weekend after 'The Passion (of the Christ)' opened, but it also happened to be the weekend the head of Screen Gems (studio) read the script," Derrickson said.

Derrickson and his co-writer, Paul Boardman, took only essential elements from the 1976 German exorcism case and subsequent criminal trial for "Emily Rose," but concocted their own trial to raise the questions they wanted to ask.

"The courtroom is the perfect theater for these ideas that, ultimately, that case touched on, that relate to these ideas about faith, belief and skepticism," Boardman said.

"We knew we had elements that would make it commercially credible," tying the horror and courtroom genres "in a way that would make it fresh ... with the thematic depth we wanted to plumb," Boardman added.

"The Exorcism of Emily Rose" is "a sober consideration of faith and the mystery of evil," wrote David DiCerto, a staff critic for the U.S. bishops' Office for Film & Broadcasting. DiCerto added it was "a well-crafted and intelligent movie that aspires to engage heads and not just spin them," as did the 1973 movie blockbuster "The Exorcist."

"The Exorcism of Emily Rose" is classified A-III — adults — by the film and broadcasting office for "disturbing scenes of demonic possession, a brief but violent vehicular homicide, and a grisly death image, as well as minimal crude language."

This 'Life' worth finishing

Robert Redford and Morgan Freeman star in "An Unfinished Life," a captivating story of a rancher — caregiver to a ranch hand mauled by a bear — who gives shelter to his son's widow and the granddaughter he never knew he had. The film is sensitively acted and vividly conveys an admirable message about forgiveness and letting go of the past. Despite profanity, rough language and irreligious remarks, some brief episodes of domestic violence and implied premarital sex, the film is uplifting entertainment for adults and mature adolescents. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Pope to canonize five in October ceremony signed or approved any decrees that would conclude pending causes for a beatification or canonization, said Vatican officials. In an attempt to highlight the difference between a beatification and a canonization, Pope Benedict is presiding over canonizations only.

Those who have been beatified and are scheduled to become saints Oct. 23 are:

— Blessed Jozef Bilczewski. As archbishop of Lviv, Poland he helped numerous Catholics, Orthodox and Jews during World War I.

— Blessed Zygmunt Gorazdowski. As a priest in Lviv, he founded homes for the poor, homeless, abandoned children and single mothers. In 1884, he founded the Sisters of Mercy of St Joseph.

— Blessed Alberto Hurtado Cruchaga. A Jesuit priest in Chile, he taught and worked with the poor. He also started the Hogar de Cristo movement, which provides vocational training and other services for young people.

— Blessed Felice da Nicosia. He was often humiliated, even by his fellow Capuchin brothers, for his illiteracy. He collected donations for the monastery and visited jailed prisoners every Sunday.

PORTRAYING A SAINT

Parishioners to perform play on St. Francis

BY JOANITA M. NELLENBACH
CORRESPONDENT

HENDERSONVILLE — St. Francis — the “Poverello,” the little poor man of Assisi — gave up privileges in this life, and parishioners at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville feel honored to portray him and those who shared his life.

The church will present “Il Poverello” Sept. 30, Oct. 2 and 3. Admission is free.

“It’s a privilege and a lot of fun,” said Maria Ashbrook, who plays Lady Jacoba, one of Francis’ supporters. “I fell in love with Francis when I was in college, and since then I’ve had a deep devotion.”

Ashbrook admires Francis’ “personality, his charm, his acceptance, the way he found God in all things, his simplicity.”

Those qualities come across in this play, written by Capuchin Franciscan Father John Salvas, parochial vicar of Immaculate Conception Church. “Il Poverello” tells of Francis’ passionate life — his love of “Lady Poverty” and his ardent desire to live as Jesus did.

“I wanted to give something of my Franciscan spirituality to the parish,” said Father Salvas.

Frank Kelsch brings to the role the same passion he had when he portrayed Christ in the parish’s paschal drama.

“Francis was the second Christ,” Kelsch said. “It’s a great privilege to play one of the great saints of the church. With (Father Salvas’) script, it’s a chance to contemplate the life of Francis To even try to put yourself in the same position as Christ and Francis, you realize what they sacrificed.”

Perhaps more than any other person in history, Francis lived like Christ: owning nothing, ministering to those in need. Toward the end of his life he prayed to Jesus, “to experience in myself in all possible fullness the pains of your cruel passion and to feel for you the same love which made you sacrifice for us.”

He received Christ’s wounds in his hands, feet and side, the first recorded stigmatic.

“Il Poverello” will present Francis’ life, from his early experience as a soldier through his conversion to Christ, disciples gathering to him, the founding of the Franciscan Order and receiving Clare as the first woman Franciscan, to the stigmata, and his “transitus” from this life to eternity as he welcomes “Sister Death.”

Oct. 3, the eve of the feast of St. Francis, is the usual time for celebrating the transitus. At the end of the Oct. 3 performance, in another ceremony traditionally held that night, the friars stationed at Immaculate Conception Church will renew their vows.

Lady Jacoba (Maria Ashbrook) comforts St. Francis (Frank Kelsch) as he dies. The rehearsal is for a scene in “Il Poverello,” a play about the life and death of St. Francis being performed at Immaculate Conception Church Sept. 30, Oct. 2 and 3.

In addition, members of the St. Francis of the Hills Fraternity will renew their promises as members of the Secular Franciscan Order (SFO).

“It’s been enlightening for me; the story opened my eyes,” said Sherry Glatzer, who is working on the play’s props. “I had no idea how the Franciscan brothers started or about the life of St. Francis.”

Even for Secular Franciscans Bill Stewart and Randy Hair, “Il Poverello” has brought a deeper appreciation of St. Francis.

“It gives me a new feeling for the life of Francis,” said Stewart, who made his perpetual profession last year, and is portraying Brother Illuminato.

When Francis dies, Stewart is one of the Franciscan brothers carrying lighted candles throughout the church to the strains of “Salve Regina” in Gregorian chant — the traditional hymn when a friar’s body is carried to its burial.

The play, Stewart said, helps him to appreciate “what we talk about in SFO by living (the life of one of the first Franciscans). You’re close to it the whole time you’re here, and it makes you closer to the people here.”

“It’s opened more of the life of St. Francis,” said Hair, who portrays Brother Masseo and is a candidate for permanent profession as a Secular Franciscan.

“When (Father Salvas) came out and said, ‘Do you realize this man has 74,000 followers (in the three orders)?’ I realized we’re part of a huge spiritual group, and it’s ever-growing,” said Hair.

“(Father Salvas) is just so talented,” Kelsch said. “He has a vision that brings it all together. He takes great joy in the subject, and that translates to all of us.”

“Il Poverello” has done for the cast members what they hope it will do for those who come to see the life of St. Francis of Assisi. As the flier for the drama says, “Be inspired by the one who put flesh on the Gospel.”

Contact Correspondent Joanita M. Nellenbach by calling (828) 627-9209 or e-mail jnell@dnet.net.

WANT TO GO?

“Il Poverello” will be performed at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville Friday, Sept. 30; Sunday, Oct. 2; and Monday, Oct. 3 at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Take I-26 to Exit 49B (old Exit 18B), Hwy. 64 west. Follow Hwy. 64 to the church, 208 Seventh Ave. West. The church has front and rear parking areas. If parking at the rear of the church, an elevator is available to take you to the main church.

As the hurricane winds howled and whizzed by Bishop Steib reflects on Katrina experience

Sunday morning, Aug. 28, began with the sun shining ever so brightly! I was at Divine Word Seminary in Bay St. Louis, Miss., visiting with the members of the community.

However, Hurricane Katrina was churning the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. The forecast called for the hurricane to hit landfall at the mouth of the Mississippi River and perhaps slide more westward. But by mid-afternoon it became clearer that the Gulf Coast was more and more involved in the path of the storm.

At the same time, it was too late to leave the seminary either to go to Louisiana or to return to Memphis because of the traffic congestion and the evacuation plans involving the interstates.

I had weathered many hurricanes at the seminary. It was located on the highest ground in Bay St. Louis. For many years it served as a shelter for the community and many of the townspeople. Moreover, several years ago the seminary had acquired a generator in case of hurricanes.

I thought the seminary was as safe a shelter as possible. And it was — until the water surge Monday morning!

It was unbelievable how quickly the water rose about 6 feet above the ground! It was incredible how easily the water rose to 2 and one-half feet on the first floor of Christmann Hall where the priests and brothers lived.

It was not a pretty sight to watch some 30 cars floating in the water, trunks and windows opened to let in the water, until they disappeared! It was like being on an ocean.

All of this was happening while the hurricane winds were howling and whizzing by, carrying leaves and tree branches, tiles and roofs, garbage cans and frames of all kinds, and debris from near and far.

Contingent plans were made should we have to go to the roof! Unfortunately, there was no escape hatch to the flat roof building. Yet, thank God, the water surge reached a peak, and slowly the water began to recede.

We were on the "bad side" of the hurricane for nine hours. We had heard in the morning that the eye of the hurricane would pass over Bay St. Louis, but that was not the case!

That night, amid soggy floors and dripping roofs, amid candlelights and flashlights, we thanked God that Hurricane Katrina had passed, and we tried to assess the situation.

Other people made their way to the seminary with their horrifying tales of how they had to escape from their homes, or climb to their attics, or get on top of their roofs, or cling to trees. It was a night that will not soon be forgotten.

Early the next morning, I went walking outside to pray Morning Prayer. It was an eerie feeling to pray in the midst of rubble, fallen trees and pockets of water.

Psalm 37 from the Office of Readings said: "Calm your anger, and forget your rage; do not fret, it only leads to evil. For those who do evil shall perish; the patient shall inherit the land."

How appropriate! How easy it would be to blame nature, blame others or, worse, to blame God for what happened. Yet, as I prayed, I looked to the east. Through the leafless and branchless trees that withstood the ravages of the hurricane, through the pine trees whose tops were snapped to the ground like toothpicks, the sun was coming through bright and clear!

The dragon flies were flying here and there! There is life! God is still with us! And the sun was proof to me that God is still good — all the time!

It is from my experience of this disaster that I ask the people of the Diocese of Memphis to welcome the sisters and brothers of Hurricane Katrina. Join me in welcoming our sisters and brothers from the dioceses of New Orleans and the Gulf Coast as they come to us for safe haven in order to put their lives together again.

Let us make them feel at home as they contemplate their future. Let us be their home away from home in their social, educational and spiritual life.

Let us pray with them as they give thanks to a good and gracious God.

People's daily lives must include place for God, pope says

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — A reminder of God's transcendent nature needs to be at the center of people's daily lives, Pope Benedict XVI said at his weekly general audience.

Just as David dedicated himself to providing a dwelling place for the Lord, such a visible dwelling place is still important to have in today's cities and communities, he added.

In his Sept. 14 catechesis, Pope Benedict highlighted Psalm 132, "The Pact Between David and the Lord," which celebrates "the solemn transport of the Ark of the Covenant, sign of the divine presence" of God in the midst of the people of Jerusalem.

The pope came to Rome by helicopter from his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo to hold his general audience in St. Peter's Square before some 20,000 pilgrims from all over the world.

The psalm depicting David, who would not rest before he found a dwelling place for the Lord, "is very important because it shows that in the center of daily life, of a city, of a community, there must be a presence that evokes the transcendent mystery of God, that is, a place for God to dwell," he said.

The temple or a sacred place for worship serves as a "visible sign" of the sharing that takes place between God and humanity, that God and humanity have always walked together throughout history, he said.

A person "cannot walk easily without God," for it is God who leads the way; a place of worship is a visible sign of "this communion" and that the faithful "let themselves be guided by God," he said.

The pope said each individual is also called to be "a home for God."

"God's true dwelling place was not made of wood, but was made of flesh and blood. It was Our Lady who offered herself to the Lord as the Ark of the Covenant," the pope said in remarks apart from his written text.

Mary "invites us to be the dwelling place and womb for God in the world," he said.

Become more worker, less consumer

Catholic Church promotes dignified work, shuns consumption

With the defection of three unions from the AFL-CIO, organized labor appears split over the appropriate strategy to fight for the rights of workers. Once boasting membership of one-third the workforce, unions now represent only 12.5 percent.

Over the last quarter century, globalization, a shrinking manufacturing base, the decline of employer-employee loyalty and successful efforts to diminish the rights of workers have taken traction away from the union movement. Labor added to its own problems with occasional cronyism and inadequate responses to workers' needs.

Friends of labor recognize the need for reform coupled with a combined strategy of greater grassroots organization and political action. The split in labor revolves around the disagreement over the degree of funding for each effort.

Since Pope Leo XIII's "Rerum Novarum" in 1891, the church has highlighted the social dimensions of work and affirmed the rights of workers. Historically, the conditions of the working class appear less desperate than a century ago, yet today the problem of mass poverty has shifted to one of mass insecurity. Millions lack health care; retirees forfeit pensions, families live one paycheck away from calamity, and in real terms and wages remain static over 30 years.

At the time of Pope Leo XIII's writing, industry barons promoted a shift in self-perception among Americans from worker to consumer. Over the past quarter century, that thinking has dramatically changed from a working-class consciousness to sink-or-swim individualism. The admonition: earning money heightens consumption, privatizing insurance brings greater riches and joining unions is passé.

Yet, the safety net that promises a dignified life for every worker and citizen continues to fray one strand at a time.

Without a working-class consciousness, workers' organizations will never deliver their potential. Historically, people died fighting for the right to organize. Unions fought to end child labor and secure an eight-hour day. Unions backed safety and health standards, Social Security, unemployment insurance and the minimum wage.

The church recognizes all these benefits as the rights of workers. But the social dimension of work must address the particular needs of workers today.

Respect on the job and dignified work head the list. No person can be regarded merely as a cog in the wheel for profit, because each worker reflects the image of God. Workers need more flex time for family needs, essential minimum benefits and a greater part of the profits. These too reflect the teachings of the church about work.

Probably, the greatest contribution the church can make in reestablishing a consciousness about work comes from a theology of work. Biblically, work is divine activity. God worked in creating the world (Gen. 2:2) and God referred to redemption as work (Is. 29:23).

In addition, God put humanity in the garden "to cultivate and care for it" (Gen. 2:15). Humanity becomes a co-gardener with God. Every time workers use their creativity or contribute to society, or every time they promote reconciliation and justice, they participate in divine activity.

Liturgically, during the intercessions at Morning Prayer (Week III in the breviary), the church prays, "Make our work today benefit our brothers and sisters, that with them and for them we may build an earthly city, pleasing to you." Here's the spirituality of work in a nutshell.

The church promotes dignified and communal work. It shuns mindless consumption. The liturgical year celebrates St. Joseph the Worker as well as St. Isidore the Farmer with his companion-spouse, St. Mary de la Cabeza. It makes no mention of St. Wal-Mart, the Shopper.

Obligation to participate in Mass

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN
DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

Q. Sometimes I have a hard time getting to Mass, so I listen to one on television. Can't we just fulfill our Sunday obligation by watching Mass on television? (Florida)

A. I've responded to this type of question several times in past years. The answer is basically simple. The Mass is not a private prayer, but, except for special circumstances, is an act of worship of God that essentially involves other members of our community of faith.

Many Catholics still do not realize that the responsibility of Sunday Mass does not oblige us to hear or watch someone else do something, but to be present to do it ourselves with our fellow Catholics.

In other words, the Eucharist is an action, a celebration, of the Catholic community. It cannot be replaced by seeing a television program.

If, for a legitimate reason, one cannot be present in church for Sunday Mass, a television or radio Mass may help us unite with it in spirit. It may also serve to increase our desire for union with Christ in the Eucharist. But such listening or viewing is never a substitute for being there.

A free brochure on ecumenism, including questions on intercommunion and other ways of sharing worship, is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Box 3315, Peoria, IL 61612.

Questions may be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address, or e-mail: jjdietzen@aol.com.

Give the devil his due

Exorcism rite is more celebration, less mystery

I was all set for exorcism calls from the media. I was ready to talk about Satan and give the reporters a devil of a story.

What possessed me to prepare for such an event? A new movie, "The Exorcism of Emily Rose," opened this past weekend and as the name implies, it is about the little known, somewhat secretive Catholic rite of exorcism.

The movie trailers emphasize horror, apparently in an attempt to connect the film to the 1973 blockbuster, "The Exorcist." That movie made vomit-spewing, head-spinning actress Linda Blair a household name. "The Exorcist" created a sensation that earned it $440 million and spawned four sequels.

Apparently, the appetite for exorcism/entertainment is still pretty strong. The new film earned $30 million in its first weekend. But viewers in search of a horror fix may have been disappointed. Film reviewers say "The Exorcism of Emily Rose" is really a courtroom drama about an exorcism that pits the practice of medicine against the practice of faith. Reviewers were positive about the movie and especially about the quality of its acting.

The bigger question for me though is, Why is exorcism so closely associated with horror and why is it wrapped in a mystery? Jesus cast out demons in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke and he gave his disciples the authority to do so.

"Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse those who have leprosy, drive out demons. Freely you have received, freely give." (Matthew 10:8)

The Catholic Church clearly has a firm theological basis for performing exorcisms and many forms of exorcism have been practiced since the earliest days of the church. Most Catholics are more familiar with the rite of exorcism than they might realize. The denunciation of Satan and all his evil works and the prayer which asks God to set children free from original sin are both part of the sacrament of baptism and are referred to as minor exorcisms.

Is there any doubt that evil exists in the world, or that the only way to combat evil is with the grace of God? So why is an exorcism viewed as some kind of oddball practice found in horror movies?

Perhaps it is the way we approach the rite of exorcism. It was updated by the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments in 1998. The rite includes a prohibition from broadcasting it in any media. It's understandable that someone who is tormented by the forces of darkness would not want to share the experience on the

DAVID HAINS
COMMUNICATIONS DIRECTOR

evening news.

But this prohibition perpetuates a mystery about our faith that, in the hands of the wrong people (e.g., movie producers), can lead to voodoo-like images.

So in case anyone ever asks you about exorcism, you can first amaze them by properly describing it as a celebration — an exorcism is a kick in the devil's fanny, so who wouldn't celebrate?

Then, in addition to pointing out that it has a scriptural basis, explain that the rite describes an exorcist as a priest, selected by a bishop, who is a man of piety, knowledge, prudence and holiness of life. The priest-exorcist initially approaches the possessed person as he would anyone who suffers from physical or psychological illness. He doesn't assume diabolic possession until he has conducted a diligent investigation that includes extensive consultation with spiritual, medical and psychological experts.

Once those criteria have been met, devil beware — a man of Christ is coming to take you out!

The rite of exorcism is something of which Catholics should be proud.

CHARLOTTE — Catholics will once again be standing up for life across the Diocese of Charlotte and the United States.

The U.S. Catholic Church observes October as Respect Life Month, with Respect Life

Sunday falling on Oct. 2.

To help kick-off the month and show their support for life, hundreds of parishes in dioceses around the country are participating in Life Chains. In the Diocese of Charlotte, parishes will be standing along property lines of their respective churches, on city sidewalks and with other church groups in their towns. People

HIS FINAL HOURS

Before his death, pope prayed to 'go to the house of the Father'

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II's last words before his death were "Let me go to the house of the Father," according to the Vatican's official account of his final hours.

The pope murmured the phrase in Polish "with a very weak voice and mumbled words" to those gathered at his bedside six hours before he died April 2, the Vatican said.

The detailed chronology was contained in a special 223-page supplement to the "Acta Apostolica Sedis," the official record of Vatican documents and acts, released Sept. 19.

Most of the account deals with previously published information about the pope's deteriorating medical condition, the actions taken at his death, the arrangements for

DE-SHROUDING THE MYSTERY

Isabel Piczek, a Los Angeles liturgical artist whose artwork is displayed at the Vatican, was a featured presenter at the International Shroud of Turin Conference in Dallas Sept. 8-11.

Artist says shroud's image left on cloth at moment of Resurrection

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — World-renowned Los Angeles liturgical artist Isabel Piczek earned accolades for her breakthrough theory "opening new doors of research" at the International Shroud of Turin Conference in Dallas Sept. 8-11.

The conference drew 160 scientists, artists and physicians from around the world to share the latest research on the shroud, believed by many to portray a full-length image of the crucified Christ.

A Catholic and theoretical physicist, Piczek believes the image was left on the shroud at the moment of Christ's resurrection.

Using a statue she created as a visual aid that measures one-third the actual size of the man depicted on the shroud, Piczek presented her explanation of the image's "concealed bas-relief effect." She theorizes the image of the shroud was transported onto a straight and taut linen above and below the man's hovering body.

"One of the puzzling mysteries of the shroud is that the image transported to an absolutely straight, taut surface is not flat. It is semi-three-dimensional, very much the same as a bas-relief is in art," explained Piczek.

"In art, the bas-relief image always curves out of a straight background that radically eliminates the rest of the space behind the bas-relief," she said.

Refuting theories that the figure on the shroud was painted, Piczek said the image's strong foreshortening of the body combined with the lack of a continuous film of a paint medium on the cloth's surface are "decisive arguments" that the shroud is not a painting.

According to Piczek, the foreshortening of the legs, reflecting the reclined figure's elevated knees, excludes the possibility of a contact image of any kind.

"An unknown system obeying laws different from optics created the image with strangely similar visual results," she said.

Piczek said she arrived at her theory during the creation of the shroud statue a month before.

Piczek, who holds degrees in art and particle physics, thinks this new explanation of how the image appeared warrants greater investigation of the nonimage area of the shroud. Such research could yield scientific clues to the "unknown information field" that caused the projection, according to her.

During the conference, botany expert Alan Whanger indicated that pollen and flowers on the shroud reveal plants native to Jerusalem at the time of Jesus. Other conference presenters discussed their analysis of the shroud's human bloodstains as well as biblical references to the shroud and an explanation of the cloth's "lost years" before it resurfaced in France in the 13th century.

Maryknoll nun completes prison term for SOA trespass conviction

MARYKNOLL, N.Y. (CNS) — Maryknoll Sister Lelia Mattingly said her now-completed six-month prison term for trespassing last November at the home of the former School of the Americas deepened her faith and strengthened her resolve to work for the closure of the training facility for Latin American military.

Now called the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, the school at Fort Benning, Ga., is the site of an annual protest by demonstrators who say some of the worst violators of human rights in Latin America have been trained there.

The U.S. Department of Defense, which runs the school, says its curriculum teaches Latin American military personnel democratic principles and respect for human rights.

Sister Mattingly was one of 15 protesters arrested and charged with trespassing at last year's demonstration, which drew a record 16,000 participants. This year's demonstration is set for Nov. 18-20.

After her release, she was greeted by a cheering group of more than 100 at the Maryknoll Sisters Center in New York Sept. 12.

The Maryknoll nun, who served her sentence at Danbury Federal Correctional Facility in Danbury, Conn., said in a statement she was not planning to cross the line again at Fort Benning.

But because of what she called "continuing reports from Latin America of abuses" by military personnel trained at the Georgia facility and "because of the continuing degradation of U.S. foreign policies which have led us into an immoral, illegal, pre-emptive war on the people of Iraq," she said, "my conscience may lead me to challenge this drive to power and control of others' natural resources."

FROM THE VATICAN

Papal envoy says U.S. must not be abandoned during Katrina recovery

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — “The United States must not be abandoned” as it continues to recover from the devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina and begins to grapple with the poverty revealed by the disaster, said a special papal envoy.

Archbishop Paul Cordes, president of the Pontifical Council “Cor Unum,” said after a four-day visit to affected areas in Louisiana and Mississippi that he was afraid “the superpower may isolate itself and stay isolated” in the wake of the natural disaster.

As a sign of his personal solidarity, Pope Benedict XVI sent Archbishop Cordes to the United States Sept. 10-14 to meet with victims of the hurricane and with church and government officials.

While he had seen “terrible scenes” during his visit he had also witnessed “gestures of great humanity,” the archbishop said Sept. 17

Many people had been shocked by the discovery of poverty in the country — a poverty, he said, that in some places was “shameful in rich America.”

He said members of the church had a duty to not abandon those in need in the United States.

“It is not only our ‘communio’ with members of our church and our human solidarity: There is more” that impels people to reach out to the United States at this time, he said.

He said Catholic Charities had made $6 million available for relief efforts from the very beginning of the disaster, but he suggested more was needed. He said his visit to New Orleans, Baton Rouge, La., Biloxi, Miss., and other places “awakened renewed attention” to the need for additional humanitarian assistance.

Mass the first Sunday of each month at 4 p.m. Prayer and worship with prayer teams will be available at 3 p.m., and a potluck dinner will follow the Mass. Father John Putnam, pastor, will be the celebrant. For further information, call Bill Owens at (704) 639-9837.

Vatican denies it is hiding Croatian general accused of war crimes

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican spokesman denied reports that the Vatican Secretariat of State has attempted to help hide a Croatian general accused of war crimes.

Carla del Ponte, chief prosecutor for the U.N. international tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, told a London newspaper she believes Gen. Ante Gotovina is hiding in a Franciscan monastery in Croatia.

In an interview published Sept. 20 in The Daily Telegraph, she said she had met with Archbishop Giovanni Lajolo, Vatican foreign minister, in July seeking the Vatican's help in discovering which of roughly 80 monasteries in Croatia was sheltering the general.

“They said they have no intelligence and I don’t believe that,” she told the Telegraph. “I think that the Catholic Church has the most advanced intelligence services.”

“Msgr. Lajolo said to me, ‘Let me know in which monastery Gotovina is hiding.’ I said, if I knew, I would not be here in Rome,” the prosecutor said.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said Sept. 20, “The Secretariat of State is not an organ of the Holy See that can collaborate institutionally with tribunals.”

He said Archbishop Lajolo asked del Ponte to explain why she believed the general was hiding in a monastery and to provide some indication of which monastery it might be so that he could contact local church authorities.

Previous investigations of rumors that the general was hiding in a church building “had a negative outcome,” Navarro-Valls said.

The spokesman said that as of Sept. 20 del Ponte had provided the Vatican with no further details about her suspicions.

Gotovina was indicted in 2001 on charges that he was the commanding officer responsible for atrocities committed in 1995 as Croatian forces attempted to reclaim control of the Krajina region. Some 150 Serb civilians were killed and more than 150,000 were displaced.

$3 million in missions money pledged to hurricane-affected dioceses

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops’ Committee on Home Missions received approval Sept. 14 from the bishops’ Administrative Committee to spend more than $3 million from its reserve funds to dioceses dealing with Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath.

The funds will be spent in both mission and nonmission dioceses — a situation that required approval of the Administrative Committee, which handles the business affairs of the U.S. bishops in between their general meetings.

Grants will be made to dioceses affected by the hurricane as well as to other dioceses incurring substantial costs in offering relief to hurricane refugees. The grants will be made “in the most equitable way possible,” according to a U.S. bishops’ announcement Sept. 19.

The funds would be used either for immediate relief for people, or for lessening the damage done to diocesan or parish infrastructure and to ministry programs.

O, say, can you sing?

School performance promotes National Anthem project

HUNTERSVILLE — “The Star-Spangled Banner” never sounded so good.

Students, teachers and staff of St. Mark School in Huntersville gathered in the school’s courtyard to sing the song Sept. 14. The performance — attended by parents, Huntersville Mayor Kim Phillips and members of the city council, police and fire departments — celebrated the launch of “The National Anthem Project: Restoring America’s Voice.”

The multiyear educational campaign is to encourage Americans to sing “The Star-Spangled Banner” while spotlighting the important role music education plays in giving Americans a patriotic voice.

The campaign, sponsored by The National Association for Music Education, is the result of a Harris Interactive survey indicating two out of three U.S. adults do not know all the words to “The Star-Spangled Banner,” and many more did not know which song was the national anthem or why it was written.

The performance at St. Mark School was directed by Heidi Hickox, general and choral music teacher, and Brian Joyce, band teacher. The event included a remembrance of Sept. 11, 2001, and the history of the national anthem.

Knights, others appeal Pledge ruling his daughter’s California school district over the practice of reciting the pledge.

The high court declined to decide whether the words “under God” made it unconstitutional to recite the pledge in public schools.

Five of the justices rejected the case because Newdow did not have legal custody of his daughter; he said he was challenging the pledge on her behalf. Her mother, Sandra L. Banning, who has primary custody, opposed the legal effort.

Three of the eight justices who ruled on the case said they thought Newdow did have legal standing to sue, but they joined the other five in rejecting the case because they believed the pledge is constitutional.

The new lawsuit was again filed by Newdow, a physician and an attorney who represented himself before the Supreme Court last March, but this time with the participation of other students who live in four Sacramento-area school districts.

Karlton’s Sept. 14 decision said that because the Supreme Court did not reverse the 9th Circuit ruling in favor of Newdow’s original claim that decision prevails and the practice of reciting the pledge is unconstitutional.

Karlton did not issue a restraining order to stop the schools from saying the pledge while appeals proceed, but said he would consider motions requesting such an order. A 9th Circuit ruling would only apply to states within that jurisdiction, comprised of nine Western states and the Pacific territories.

On Sept. 19, the Becket Fund, a religious liberty law firm that represents the Knights of Columbus and 10 students who want to defend the practice of reciting the pledge, issued a statement saying an appeal had been filed.

The Knights of Columbus fraternal organization was a part of the successful 1954 effort to persuade Congress to add the words “under God” to the pledge. When Newdow filed his new lawsuit, the organization was given permission to join the case as a defendant.

In a Sept. 15 statement, Supreme Knight Carl A. Anderson said, “If freedom of religion in America means anything at all, it means that it’s just as constitutional to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, complete with the words ‘under God,’ as it is to read aloud the Declaration of Independence. They both express the same truth: that our fundamental rights come from God, our creator and not from government.”

Fun, faith celebrated at St. Matthew Church

McSweeney dedicated the Grandparent Garden, a meditation area between the church and the school honoring the relationship between grandparents and their grandchildren. Among the paving bricks are 843 engraved bricks ordered by families of St. Matthew Church and School.

"The Grandparent Garden is dedicated to the vocation of grandparenting," said Msgr. McSweeney.

Each engraved brick carries a personal message and the names of the grandparents in whose honor or memory the brick was purchased.

Still a work in progress, the garden will include benches, a picnic table and landscaping. It will feature statues of St. Anne and St. Joachim, the grandparents of Jesus.

Following the morning's spiritual events, the festival kicked into high gear with about 300 people attending a carnival featuring vendors, Irish dancers, music, games and inflatable rides for the children.

"This is a day when we celebrate who we are as a faith community and our growing diversity as a multicultural parish," said Mercy Sister Jeanne Marie Kienast, pastoral associate. "This is a wonderful unifier for our parish."

Msgr. McSweeney also noted that people of all ages were involved in the festival as both participants and volunteers.

In addition to honoring grandparents and entertaining children, adults and teenagers worked at the rides, vendor and game booths.

The festival of faith has been celebrated every other year since 2001, the parish's 15th anniversary.

Since the announcement of its founding on Sept. 21, 1986, St. Matthew Church has grown to become the largest Catholic church in the Diocese of Charlotte, with more than 18,000 registered parishioners.

'Triumph of the Cross'

Father Matthew Kauth, pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Church in Franklin, talks to teenagers about sin during the fourth annual "Triumph of the Cross" conference at St. Barnabas Church in Arden Sept. 9-10.

Many gather for fourth annual conference at St. Barnabas Church

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ARDEN — A Christian author, a college professor of literature, a Catholic high school teacher and several priests were among the workshop leaders discussing faith, prayer and Catholicism at a recent conference in Arden.

Nearly 150 people, including many teenagers, attended the fourth annual "Triumph of the Cross: Building Catholic Families, Building a Catholic Culture" conference held at St. Barnabas Church in Arden Sept. 9-10.

"The triumph of his cross is the giving of grace," said Father Roger Arnsperger, pastor of St. Barnabas Church, during his homily at Mass.

Regina Doman, author of several books for teens, gave the keynote speech on "The Genius of Catholic Womanhood" as well as a workshop on writing Catholic fiction.

"As Catholic writers, we need to at least acknowledge that evil is out there," she said. "It is difficult to do it in a way that you are not exposing people to sin."

"Why We Have Sin: A Talk for Young People" was the workshop topic of Father Matthew Kauth, pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Church in Franklin.

"We have sin because we do it," said Father Kauth. "Evil is the absence of a good that should be present. Adam and Eve knew what was good but didn't know the absence of God."

God offers himself to us but he won't force himself on us, said Father Kauth.

"God gives us just enough grace to make us want him," said Father Kauth. "On your part, you have to want more."

Lack of integrity is one of the main "Pitfalls for Catholic Teens," according to Jennifer Gordon, a teacher at Knoxville Catholic High School in Knoxville, Tenn.

"Because you're Catholic, you belong entirely to Christ," she told her teen audience. "Is there a piece of you that you're holding back? ... You have to strive for a real world the way God meant for things to be."

Growth as a Christian is all about time, and devoting more time to prayer is essential, said Scott Richert, executive editor of "Chronicles: A Magazine of American Culture," during his workshop, "Pray Without Ceasing: Reintegrating the Home and the Parish."

Richert encouraged participants to learn short prayers by rote and to expand the time they already devote to prayer.

"Prayer will resurface when we need it," he said.

Other workshop topics included moral living, celebrity conversions and Islam in America.

The conference also featured a concert of sacred choral music by a choir comprised of parishioners from St. Barnabas Church and St. Eugene Church, St. Joan of Arc Church and the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville.

The music also will be performed at the diocesan Eucharistic Congress in Charlotte Sept. 23.

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Part 26

In our discussion of the Communion Rite last time, we concluded by mentioning that the “Prayer After Communion” completes the Communion Rite. Following the Communion Rite is a decidedly short and simple conclusion to the Mass called the “Concluding Rite,” consisting of relatively few parts.

Let us now examine how the Mass is ended by investigating these parts.

The ritual of the Mass allows a time and a place for announcements that are to be given after the "Prayer After Communion." There are two specifications for these announcements: they are to be brief and necessary.

The priest then greets the faithful in the usual manner, "The Lord be with you," with the usual response by the faithful. The celebrant then blesses the faithful with the customary sign of the cross and invocation of the Holy Trinity. He concludes the Mass in the same manner in which it was initiated; the prayer of the Mass, the highest form of prayer known to mankind, is now completed with the Trinitarian blessing.

On solemn feasts and special occasions, there may be a more elaborate prayer over the people, which is usually begun with the instruction, "Bow your heads and pray for God's blessing."

One final exchange remains between the deacon — or, if there is no deacon, the celebrant — and the faithful, known as the “dismissal.” The deacon (or priest) says, “Ite, missa est [Go, it is the dismissal]” in the Latin version, which is rendered as three options in the current English edition: “Go in the peace of Christ”; “The Mass is ended, go in peace”; or “Go in peace to love and serve the Lord.”

The faithful respond one last time, “Deo gratias” [“Thanks be to God”]. The dismissal, although very subtle and concise, holds great theological importance. It is the dismissal that gives the Mass its name: “the Mass” comes from the Latin Missa, meaning “sent” or “dismissed.”

The faithful go to Mass, not merely as an escape from the world or as a diversion from one's Christian responsibilities, but rather that they might be sent back into the world, fortified by the grace of God. Having rendered to God the worship of the Mass and having received the fruits of redemption, the faithful can better accomplish the duties of their particular vocation in the midst of the world — to sanctify the home, the workplace, the school, the marketplace, etc.

But before the celebrant and the faithful depart, the celebrant and deacon reverence the altar once again with a kiss and either bow to the altar or, if the tabernacle is in the sanctuary, they genuflect to the reserved Blessed Sacrament in the tabernacle.

There may be a recessional hymn that accompanies the movement of the ministers from the sanctuary, but this is not necessary since the Mass is already ended.

Now what?
Immediately upon the completion of Mass, it has been recommended by the Catholic Church for centuries to remain for a time of personal thanksgiving. We are encouraged to remain quiet, kneel down and thank God for the outpouring of grace and mercy received in holy Communion.

St. José Maria Escrivá advises us, “Do not leave the church almost immediately after receiving the sacrament. Surely you have nothing so important to attend to that you cannot give our Lord 10 minutes to say thanks Love is paid for with love.”

Perhaps you saw the film "The Passion of the Christ" in the theatre. What was the response of the audience to the events of the Lord's passion, crucifixion and death? Each of the four times I saw the film in the theatre elicited the same response from the audience: silence, stillness.

The Mass is the same powerful, dramatic, bloody sacrifice re-presented in an unbloody manner. If we had the grace to better understand the mystery of the Mass, I dare suggest that we would also discover the same reaction in our souls: silence, adoration and thanksgiving.

Next time we will finish our series “Understanding the Mystery of the Mass” with a short review and a few concluding remarks.

Father Buettner is parochial vicar of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton.

TOP HONORS

Boy Scout earns Eagle rank in Stanley

STANLEY — Boy Scout Troop 49 awarded Christopher Stephen Lisi with the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rank in Boy Scouts, Aug. 28.

Christopher is a parishioner of Holy Spirit Church in Denver, where he serves as an usher, altar server, Vacation Bible School volunteer and is a member of the parish youth group. He is an honor student at Highland School of Technology in Gastonia.

To receive the Eagle Scout rank,

Christopher completed an individual service project — he painted the interior rooms of the youth building at First United Methodist Church in Stanley, which is the host church for Troop 49. The project helped beautify the building.

In Troop 49, Christopher has held the offices of quartermaster, historian, patrol leader, troop guide, instructor and is currently senior patrol leader. He also has earned the Arrow of Light award and two outstanding achievement awards.

Court celebrates successful first year of serving church, community

SYLVA — The Catholic Daughters of the Americas continues to grow in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Court St. Mary, Mother of God 2534 recently welcomed 13 new members during two ceremonies in June and August.

Seven members were received into the court (chapter) at St. Mary, Mother of God Church in Sylva June 26, and six more women joined at St. Joseph Church in Bryson City Aug. 11.

Founded on June 27, 2004, with 31 women from four parishes — St. Mary, Mother of God Church; St. Joseph Church; St. Francis of Assisi Church in Franklin; and Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Cherokee — the court quickly added six more women in July ceremonies.

Father Ray Williams, pastor of St. Mary, Mother of God Church, became the court's first chaplain.

The new court became one of 14 courts in North Carolina. To date, the courts have a total of almost 750 members.

During its first year, members of Court St. Mary, Mother of God served lunches to Habitat for Humanity volunteers, organized a 24-hour eucharistic adoration during Lent and held fundraisers and meetings with keynote speakers discussing topics including the pro-life movement, the role of the laity after Vatican II, Hispanic immigrants and living out the Beatitudes.

The court has plans to take on projects relating to the Catholic Daughters' national Circle of Love program, which is geared to assisting Catholic Daughters in working with the Catholic Church and community.

From its inception in 1903, Catholic Daughters of the Americas has grown and developed into the largest organization of Catholic women in the Americas.

Headquartered in New York with 100,000 members in the United States, Guam, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Dominican Republic and Mexico, Catholic Daughters of the Americas' purpose is to help the church in its religious, charitable and educational works.

The organization, open to Catholic lay and religious women 18 years of age or older, supports Covenant House, which provides shelter and services to homeless and runaway youths; Support Our Aging Religious, a national agency that helps religious orders meet retirement needs; Holy Cross Family Ministries; the U.S. bishops' Apostleship of the Seas; Teachers of Exceptional Children in conjunction with the National Catholic Educational Association; Morality in Media; Catholic Relief Services; and Habitat for Humanity.

It also provides scholarships and support for seminarians.

The Junior Catholic Daughters of the Americas, the national program for girls ages 6-18, was founded in 1925.

FIGHTING FOR LIFE

Life Chains to be held on Respect Life Sunday

will hold pro-life placards with messages such as "Abortion Kills Children" and "Jesus Forgives and Heals."

"Life Chain allows us to give a voice to our message that life is sacred," said Maggi Nadol, director of diocesan Respect Life Ministry. "It is often difficult for the pro-life side to visibly express our deeply held belief that God is the author of life."

"The Respect Life program is the primary educational vehicle for the (bishops') Pastoral Plan for Pro-Life Activities," said Msgr. William P. Fay, general secretary of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Msgr. Fay said the U.S. bishops inaugurated the Respect Life program with a resolution they adopted in the spring of 1972. The first of what the resolution called a "week of prayer and study dedicated to the sanctity of human life and the many threats to human life in our world" was held that October.

"Begun as a 'week of prayer and study' focusing on contemporary threats to human life, the program expanded to a month of prayer and study, and expanded quickly again to a year-round program that begins anew each year on the first Sunday of October," Msgr. Fay said.

Pro-life packets

A packet of materials for the 2005-06 Respect Life Program of the U.S. bishops has been made available to dioceses and parishes.

Its theme, "Help build a world where human life is always loved and defended, every form of violence banished," is derived from Pope John Paul II's prayer to Mary on Dec. 8, 2004, the feast of the Immaculate Conception.

Inside the packet is a series of six papers: "Justice, Mercy and Capital Punishment"; "Pope John Paul II: Dying With Dignity"; "The Gospel of Life and Its Great Exemplar"; "Roe vs. Reason"; "Contraception and Abortion: The Underlying Link"; and "Genetic Enhancement: Custom Kids and Chimeras."

Article authors include Archbishop Charles J. Chaput of Denver; Capuchin Father J. Daniel Mindling, academic dean at Mount St. Mary's Seminary in Emmitsburg, Md.; attorney Helen Alvare, an associate professor of law at Columbus School of Law at The Catholic University of America in Washington; and Marilyn Coors, an assistant professor of psychiatry and assistant professor of bioethics at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center.

with resources for Respect Life Sunday; a liturgy for Jan. 23, 2006, the day after the anniversary date of the 1973 Supreme Court decision that made virtually all abortions legal nationwide; and a suggested novena and Holy Hour.

"We hope that these materials will also be useful in your efforts to foster greater respect for life," said Cardinal William H. Keeler of Baltimore, chairman

Books explore theological vision of the new pope

REVIEWED BY RACHELLE LINNER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

"Let God's Light Shine Forth: The Spiritual Vision of Pope Benedict XVI" is a lovely book that serves two purposes.

It is a fine introduction to the pope's personal and professional life. And the selection of beautifully written (yet relatively short) excerpts from his writings can be fruitfully used for personal meditation and reflection.

Robert Moynihan, founder and editor of the monthly magazine Inside the Vatican, has compiled illustrative quotes that reveal the clarity of the pope's thinking and let us glimpse the solidity of his luminous faith.

The selections are grouped into three themes — his faith, today's world and the Christian pilgrim — which, taken together, are a lucid expression of the pope's urgency for "a new curiosity about Christianity, a desire to understand what it really is."

He says, "The essential is not that Christ announced certain ideas — something that he in fact did, of course — but that I become a Christian in the measure to which I believe in this event: God entered the world and acted."

A 75-page essay on "The Man and His Life" draws on the more than 20 interviews that Moynihan conducted with then-Cardinal Ratzinger when he was prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith "where he labored to protect the wonder and beauty of God from being encrusted and hidden under theologies of relativism, atheist Marxism and secularism."

There are, of course, different ways of understanding the controversies of those years, which is why so much of the literature about Cardinal Ratzinger is ideological in tone. Of those many ways of looking at those times, this book gives preference to the new pope's self-understanding; the result is a vivid spiritual portrait of "a simple, humble worker in God's vineyard," a pastor who grieves for a world marked by the absence of God.

"The Thought of Benedict XVI: An Introduction to the Theology of Joseph Ratzinger" is a reprint of a 1988 book that examined Cardinal Ratzinger's personal theological writings, as opposed to those decisions rendered through the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

The book opens with an overview of the history and characteristics of Bavarian Catholicism, important because of its decisive formative effect on the future Pope Benedict. In discrete chapters, Dominican Father Aidan Nichols explains the context and content of Cardinal Ratzinger's theological ideas, from the earliest academic work on ecclesiology (a study of the nature of church in St. Augustine) to his writings on the Second Vatican Council, the creed, eschatology, liturgy and ecumenism.

It is understandable that publishers would respond to the interest in Pope Benedict XVI by reprinting older books. It is also evident that part of this interest is, appropriately, in Joseph Ratzinger the theologian because it was in his role as a theological adviser at the Second Vatican Council that he first came to public prominence.

Moreover, his understanding of the vocation of the theologian influenced his actions at the congregation and will no doubt shape his papacy.

All of this would bode well for a book like this. Unfortunately, "The Thought of Benedict XVI" is not helpful for the general reader. The text assumes a working knowledge of theology and church history, and the author, a professor of dogmatic and ecumenical theology, assumes a high level of conceptual sophistication.

Had he stopped now and then to take a metaphoric breath, a nonprofessional reader could have been included more fully in the conversation.

Still, the book is worth the effort because it affords an understanding of the new pope's intellectual influences. Father Nichols' chapter on the pope's liturgical theology is a reminder that doctrine is not an end in itself but a vehicle that brings us to the doorway of worship and adoration.

Linner, a librarian and writer, earned a master of theological studies degree from Weston Jesuit School of Theology in Cambridge, Mass.

Prayerful persistence leads to peace

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

About a year ago our family was faced with a move across several states — a daunting task, given that we never had moved farther than across town.

We had several months to consolidate our belongings, pack them up and get them loaded onto a moving van, and I planned everything carefully so that the van would arrive at our Ohio home the same time we did. I even lined up volunteers to begin unloading boxes as soon as we parked in the driveway.

Once in Ohio, I welcomed the volunteer workers and awaited the arrival of the moving van. After an hour of waiting on the curb, I called the moving company, only to learn that the van had broken down en route and would not be repaired for several days.

All my meticulous planning came to naught as our family spent three days in a local hotel without any furnishings or supplies.

I was reminded, like Isaiah's vine grower or the landowner in Matthew's Gospel, that there are times when no amount of careful, controlled endeavor can guarantee the desired outcome. The unexpected, unpleasant event can and will happen, and when it happens despite one's best efforts, it is easy to feel persecuted or even tempted to give up entirely.

Worry and anxiety didn't make the moving van arrive any sooner. Persistent hope, rather, kept us steadfast and peaceful until our belongings were recovered and we were able to move in.

In today's readings, God resolves to "give up" on Israel — the vineyard he planted — because it has not responded to his covenant as hoped. Nevertheless, a way is found, and the vineyard is spared: The rejected stone becomes the cornerstone, and the land bears fruit because of God's own persistence.

Paul speaks of this same kind of persistence when he encourages the Philippians: "Keep on doing what you have learned and received and heard and seen in me. Then the God of peace will be with you."

When our foolproof plans and best efforts fail, God's remedy of prayerful persistence leads us from discouragement and despair to the "peace that passes all understanding."

Questions:

When have you experienced the defeat of your own careful plans, and how did you respond? In what situation in your life do you currently need the graces of persistence and peace?

Director says TV movie hopes to capture essence of Pope John Paul II

VILNIUS, Lithuania — In the lobby of the Lithuanian Film Studio stood a group of fully dressed cardinals, some of them complaining in Russian about the prolonged wait.

In another area, Mehmet Ali Agca — not the real one — sat in a mock prison cell, where he was about to be filmed meeting with the pope he tried to assassinate.

Such scenes could be encountered all around Vilnius for almost a month until Sept. 13, when Five Mile River Films Ltd. finished shooting major scenes of the new TV movie, "Have No Fear: The Life of Pope John Paul II," for broadcast on ABC.

The filming was to be completed in Rome, and a 90-minute-long movie was scheduled to reach the international market by mid-November.

"Having only 90 minutes to tell the story of such a huge character in history, we had to take a point of view, which is pope as a human being," said executive producer Lorenzo Minoli.

"What struck me was how this man has been always very coherent to his ideas and beliefs," he said. "This is the most important thing with the title that I wanted, that was his teaching: Have no fear of belief, have no fear of God, have no fear of — period. And have no fear of death."

Minoli, who produced the "Jesus" miniseries, said the idea of "Have No Fear" was conceived in April, when the world was witnessing the incredible outpouring of homage to Pope John Paul as he was dying.

"I arrived in Rome half an hour before the bells started to ring, announcing the pope's death. The day after he died, I walked at midnight in St. Peter's Square and was shocked to see so many young people of different roots — you could see punks and very well-dressed-up kids — all together, all there," said Minoli.

"He touched the hearts of people who had almost nothing to do with belief because of his presence, and I would say because of the way he died," said Minoli. "He died with dignity; he gave to the sick and dying people and elderly the dignity of being sick and of being old. And I think this is very much in the spirit of what our faith is about."

Minoli, an Italian who was raised a Catholic and went to Catholic schools, said for the role of Pope John Paul he chose a non-Catholic, German-born actor Thomas Kretschmann, who has had roles in such movies as "The Pianist."

"I wanted a very good actor who could play the part from the young pope till the old pope. The fact that he doesn't have a Catholic tradition is even better, because he has to learn and find a common denominator, which then becomes really the essence of the message — Thomas is doing it fantastically," he said.

Minoli said Kretschmann hired a dialect coach in order to sound Polish.

"I was telling him: You are a German, you have an accent as thick as I have, so nobody really cares whether your accent is really Polish or German, but no, he wanted to be true to the part," Minoli said with a smile.

He said Lithuania "was very similar to Poland, architecturally speaking." But he also said he found the country was "a very special place — there is a very strong sense of spirituality floating in the air. People like to have fun, but there is a very clear boundary, and it's really unique."

Minoli said it had been challenging to capture the essence of the pope so close to his death. But he said he and fellow producer Judd Parkin hired Jesuit Father James Martin, associate editor of America magazine, as a consultant.

"I'm crazy," Minoli said, laughing, but added that the movie was "a point of view of somebody who has been touched deeply by him and wants to make a homage to him in my own way."

Visit to the Vatican

Students, parents and chaperones from Bishop McGuinness Catholic High School in Kernersville stand outside the Vatican during their 12-day summer trip to Italy.

During the trip, organized by history department chair Michael Streich, the students experienced a high level of commentary and experience while touring the Vatican and the Colosseum in Rome, learning about St. Francis of Assisi in Assisi, viewing artwork by Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci in Florence and visiting Venice and the island of Capri.

Another school trip to Europe took place in July. The high school's summer foreign trips focus on both educational value and fun, and provide out-of-classroom experiences for the students.

Then-cardinal Joseph Ratzinger uses incense to bless the casket of Pope John Paul II during his funeral Mass in St. Peter's Square at the Vatican April 8. Cardinal Ratzinger was elected pope April 19. A detailed chronology of Pope John Paul's final hours was released by the Vatican Sept. 19.

Pope John Paul II's final hours revealed by Vatican his funeral and his final testament.

The volume also contained more than 150 pages of condolence messages and testimonials that arrived from political and religious leaders around the world.

Final hours

In recounting the pope's final days and hours, the chronology described the pontiff's poignant appearance on Easter, March 27, when he was recovering from a tracheotomy to relieve breathing problems.

"The pope tried to read the words of the apostolic blessing without success and, in silence, with the right hand he blessed the city and the world," it said.

At his last public appearance at his apartment window March 30, he gave a blessing but was unable to speak to a "stunned and sorrowful" crowd in St. Peter's Square, it said.

"This was the last public 'station' of his painful Via Crucis," it said.

The next day, March 31, the pope had a crisis: He was stricken by a "violent shaking chill" as he was being taken to Mass at 11 a.m., the chronology said. His temperature quickly rose to more than 103 degrees, and he went into septic shock with cardiocirculatory collapse, caused by a urinary infection.

The Vatican promptly took steps to arrange "all the necessary therapeutic steps and cardiorespiratory assistance," it said. The chronology said church officials respected the pope's "explicit desire" to remain in his residence and not be taken to the hospital, underlining that sufficient medical facilities had been set up in the Vatican's Apostolic Palace.

When Mass was celebrated at the pope's bedside that evening, the pontiff followed it with half-closed eyes. He was able to weakly raise his right arm twice, when the bread and wine were consecrated.

After receiving the anointing of the sick that evening from Latin-rite Cardinal Marian Jaworski of Lviv, Ukraine, a longtime friend of the pontiff, the pope received Communion and asked to celebrate a "eucharistic hour" of meditation and prayer.

At 6 a.m. April 1 the pope, "conscious and serene," celebrated Mass, the account said. At 7:15 he listened to the recitation of the Way of the Cross and made the sign of the cross at each station.

As the prayers continued throughout the day, the pope's medical situation worsened, with gradual circulatory, respiratory and kidney failure, it said.

"The patient, with visible participation, shared in the continual prayers of those who were assisting him," it said.

'Sleep in the Lord'

On April 2, by the time of the morning Mass, the pope had begun to lose consciousness. In the late morning, after receiving for the last time the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the pope's temperature rose rapidly.

"Toward 3:30 p.m., with a very weak voice and mumbled words, in the Polish language, the Holy Father asked: 'Let me go to the house of the Father,'" it said.

Sister Tobiana Sobodka, a member of the Handmaidens of the Sacred Heart of Jesus who headed the team of Polish nuns in the papal household, heard the pope say the phrase, according to the pope's personal physician, Dr. Renato Buzzonetti, who was quoted in the Rome newspaper La Repubblica.

The Vatican's chronology said the pope went into a coma that evening at 7 p.m. Medical monitoring equipment tracked the steady loss of vital functions.

"Following a Polish tradition, a small lit candle illuminated the semidarkness of the room, where the pope was passing away," it said.

At 8 p.m. a Mass marking the feast of Divine Mercy was celebrated at the pope's bedside, the chronology said. The feast, instituted by Pope John Paul, is celebrated the Sunday after Easter.

Archbishop Stanislaw Dziwisz, the pope's longtime Polish secretary, celebrated the Mass.

"Polish religious songs accompanied the Mass and blended with those of the young people and the multitude of faithful, who were gathered in prayer in St. Peter's Square," the chronology said.

"At 9:37 p.m., John Paul II went to sleep in the Lord," it said.

The account confirmed that an electrocardiogram was administered for more than 20 minutes before the declaration of death, to verify the cessation of heart activity.

Final good-byes

The supplement's brief introduction in Latin made a point of underlining the fact that a great multitude, especially young people, made their way to St. Peter's Square as the pope lay dying, "as if to sit with him" and show their affection.

The condolences and testimonials published in the volume were written messages received by the College of Cardinals, the Vatican Secretariat of State or the papal chamberlain. There were messages from representatives of 162 countries, including many world leaders. Others expressing admiration for the late pope included Cuba's Fidel Castro, Libya's Moammar Gadhafi and Iranian President Mohammad Khatami.

No message from the U.S. government appeared in the book.

In a televised message April 2, U.S. President George W. Bush said of the pope's death: "The Catholic Church has lost its shepherd, the world has lost a champion of human freedom, and a good and faithful servant of God has been called home."

The blessings of Katrina

Tragedy can be a wake-up call for us all

We don't like 9/11 and Hurricane Katrina and we never will; however, both tragedies have blessings, death, success and defeat. I wish to focus on the blessings.

When the infamous 9/11 came, the people immediately said: "We have been hit!" I didn't have a chance to witness that horror, except through the TV, because that morning I was flying comfortably from Newark, N.J., to Greenville, S.C., and while I was enjoying the flight unaware of the tragedy taking place, New York, Washington and Pennsylvania were experiencing death and horror.

When Katrina hit the Gulf Coast, people were saying: "New Orleans is gone!" In both tragedies, we experienced some extraordinary sense of community, we all felt close to one another and we did the impossible to help the victims, without knowing their names or background or race or religion.

Why is that? Do we have to go through tragedies to experience loving care? Can we care for and love one another every day without tragedies?

I consider those tragic events as breakthroughs of nature and history. The breakthroughs continue or pop up throughout our lives — the point is how to make the breakthrough a failure or a success, a learning experience or a nightmare.

The word "breakthrough" is actually a compound of "break" and "through." As far as I know, the two words were first hyphenated and were first used to describe a military advance of decisive importance.

The Bible is filled with breakthroughs. The Book of Exodus tells us how God broke through a man, Moses, who, in a fit of temper, had killed one of his own. The story ends with God speaking to Moses from the bush: "I have seen the affliction of my people, I have heard their cry, I know their sufferings, and I have come down to deliver them; and you are the one who will do it."

Perhaps, as you read this, you may be the one God has sent to be the good news for those who may not see the good news in the aftermath of 9/11 and Katrina. In all the stories recorded in the Old and New Testaments, describing natural and human calamities, there is something indescribable; there is always darkness and light. There is always a voice, coming as it were from the other side, yet somehow from the inside.

I met a loving couple on Sept. 11, 2005. They were coming to worship and to commemorate the fourth anniversary of 9/11. I welcomed them and I saw a beautiful smile and some suffering on their faces. They told me that they were coming from New Orleans.

"Our house and personal belongings are gone," they said. "However, the good news is that we were able to be saved, we still have the best that any human being can have ... we have our precious lives, we have God, and we have one another."

This is how a breakthrough becomes a redeeming moment rather than a despairing curse. The blessings of Katrina are defined by love.

A definition of love that won a nationwide newspaper contest read: "Love is the doorway through which the human soul passes from selfishness to service and from solitude to kinship with all humankind."

The horror and pain of 9/11 and Katrina will not fade away quickly, but the wake-up call had an immediate and dramatic effect on all of us. The reality is that we cannot control all the events, but we can and we should prioritize God in our lives.

Did you know that in a 90-year span, the average person spends 22 years working, 21 years sleeping, nine years watching TV, seven years eating, seven years on the telephone, seven years playing, seven years dressing, three years traveling, three years on the computer, two years waiting for somebody, one year drinking, one year tying shoes and one year in church?

Church hardly made the list; we probably can do better. Here are some suggestions:

1. Start each day with a prayer and with this question: "What good can I do today?" Consider your spouse, your child, a co-worker, a subordinate, a boss, a relative and so on.

2. Look for ways to do that good thing. It can be simply offering to get a coworker a cup of coffee or complimenting a colleague for a job well done.

3. Do something nice for someone you dislike or for someone who dislikes you. This is difficult to do, but it definitely has a positive effect in your life.

4. Identify the so-called "nobodies" in your daily life and do something that will make them feel like "somebody." Example: An executive took the person who cleaned the floors in the building to lunch.

5. Go to church this Sunday to get the strength to do all of the above.

Dear Katrina, thank you for your blessings, but, please, do not come back.

Capuchin Father Aurilia is pastor of Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville.

When can you marry a relative?

Q. Please explain for our family which relatives are forbidden to marry and how this is figured. Two cousins on my father's side, I think they are called second cousins, want to be married. Is that possible? (Ohio)

A. Your question deals with the impediment to marriage that in church and civil law is called consanguinity — literally, common blood.

There are two kinds of consanguinity. One is the direct line, meaning the relationship between an individual and his or her parents or grandparents. This kind of relationship is a serious impediment to marriage. In the church as well as in most cultures, no permission (dispensation) for marriage between two such persons is possible.

The other type of consanguinity, which applies to your question, is indirect, or collateral. This is the relationship between brothers and sisters, first cousins and other relatives.

To be specific, in the collateral line there are as many degrees of relationship as there are persons in both lines together, not counting the common ancestor (Canon 108). Brother and sister are related to the second degree, niece and uncle to the third, first cousins to the fourth and so on.

This method of determining degrees of collateral relationship are generally employed also in civil law.

According to Catholic Church law a collateral relationship up to and including fourth degree is an impediment to marriage (Canon 1091).

Can people related in this way marry each other? It depends.

As with the direct line, no dispensation can be given by the church for a marriage

Question Corner

FATHER JOHN DIETZEN

between brother and sister. In other cases, however, the church, through the bishop, can (and fairly often does) dispense for a serious enough reason.

Marriage between first cousins is more prevalent in some other parts of the world than it is in our own. In these cultures dispensations by the church for such marriages are not uncommon. In the United States most state laws prohibit first-cousin marriages.

Church and civil laws forbidding marriage within certain degrees of consanguinity are based on obvious social and health reasons. While a few ancient cultures apparently allowed some marriages between brothers and sisters, and even it seems between parent and child, marriage of individuals closely related were forbidden by every major code of law with which we are familiar, including those which predate Jewish law of the Old Testament.

From your description it sounds as if the relationship you ask about would not be within the degree forbidden by church law. But you, or they, need to talk with a parish priest or other counselor to be sure where they stand.

Questions may be sent to Father John Dietzen, Box 5515, Peoria, IL 61612, or e-mail: jjdietzen@aol.com.

The blame game

Best resolution is to take responsibility

We've all been watching the "blame game" these past few weeks. A large-scale "blame game" erupted in Hurricane Katrina's aftermath. Directly after the storm, Louisiana officials blamed the federal government for not sending in relief fast enough; conversely, the federal government blamed Louisiana for not giving the green light to troops or relief, or declaring a state of emergency early enough. The rest of us, watching one of the biggest finger-pointing matches of the century, didn't know who was in the right. None of us is immune from becoming a contestant of this sort in daily life. Three days before a group presentation in one of my sophomore-year English classes, the four of us discovered that only one actually had done the work assigned. None of us culprits wanted to come clean and say that we'd been too busy with other things; all of us wanted to cover up our own blunders and lay the blame on somebody else. That blame turned into finger-pointing, which morphed into an all-out fight. It was then that we realized we were so far down the rabbit hole that it was almost impossible to see the truth of the matter. It was time to own up and say where we went wrong. It's easy to play the blame game. All you have to bring is an excuse and an outstretched finger. You can play it if you're guilty — or even if you're innocent. You can play as an uninvolved bystander armed with the barest of facts. And when people play a full-on, no-holds-barred version, the truth is shoved into obscurity in favor of something that's less than justice and more than unfair. I think the only way to win at the blame game is to break the rules completely and play the responsibility card. Responsibility, wrongly portrayed as toil and drudgery, is really one of the only things that differentiates leaders who can handle crazy situations successfully from individuals who can't rise above the blame game. It's understandable that taking responsibility for one's actions isn't everyone's favorite option. But the blame game isn't the "way out" that I used to think it was. It isn't concerned with fixing the problem; it sweeps issues under the rug and tries to shove cleaning supplies into somebody else's hand — somebody who is often innocent of the whole thing. Nobody stood up in Louisiana during that first week and took responsibility for what went wrong. As a result, the losers were the residents of New Orleans. Things are getting better, but that's because people are starting to step up to the plate, admit where they went wrong and turn their eyes toward concrete solutions. Responsibility isn't glamorous or easy, but nobody is as qualified to fix mistakes as the person who made them. Taking charge of patching up the blunders we actually make always gets the boat back on course quicker than laying blame on someone else. People also look up to and admire people big enough to admit where they went wrong. As for my group, we finally decided to admit that we hadn't done the work. As a result, we were able to commit ourselves to hard work over the next few days and got an A on the project instead of the F we would have received if we'd just kept on playing the blame game.

Coming of Age

KAREN DIETLEIN
CNS COLUMNIST

Soccer players, big and small, get top billing at papal audience

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — The leaders of Europe's professional soccer association and 500 pint-sized soccer players from Italy and 16 East European countries got top billing at Pope Benedict XVI's Sept. 21 general audience. The Union of European Football Associations was giving its support to a project of the Italian soccer federation and the Pontifical Council "Cor Unum," the Vatican's charity coordinator, to provide balls, shirts, shoes and other soccer equipment to schools and orphanages in Eastern Europe. Pope Benedict told them, "Your presence gives me an opportunity to underline the importance of sport, a discipline that when practiced with respect for the rules becomes an educational tool and a vehicle of important human and spiritual values." The pope said he hoped the initiative for Eastern Europe would help people see that sports could contribute to building solidarity and respect among peoples.

At the end of the audience, three of the under-12 soccer players gave gifts to the pope: a bouquet of yellow and white flowers, an equipment bag and a soccer ball. Before and after the audience, several sections of St. Peter's Square were cleared for the children to play soccer. In his main audience talk, the pope offered his reflections on Psalm 132, particularly God's promise to King David that if his people kept God's covenant and decrees he would bless them, sustain them and send them a savior. What God has promised, the pope said, "is the result of God and human beings freely entering into a relationship with one another."

Nuns gone fishing

Much-deserved break leads to day on water

It was something you don't see every day — eight nuns in full habits on three little boats, fishing. People in other boats went past and then circled around to get another look. The security guards at the nearby power plant, seeing people in flowing robes and fearing terrorism, came rushing down to the river bank with binoculars. They looked, then paused and looked again. One speedboat pulling several girls on an inner tube went past us and then circled around to pass again. A little girl called out "Hi sisters!" and raised her hands in a wave. She shot right off the back of the inner tube into the water. The nuns screeched with laughter. These nuns get only one day per year off. They are Missionaries of Charity, members of the religious order started by Mother Teresa of Calcutta. The sisters work at various houses in Washington, including a homeless shelter, a home for single mothers and an after-school drop-in center in poorer neighborhoods of our nation's capital. One of the families in our parish adopted two children through their order and got to know the sisters. Although they all looked similar in their white saris with blue trimmed veils, they were a diverse group. They came from all over the world: Kenya, India, Venezuela, Argentina and the United States. They had been raised in various faiths. Some had been raised as Catholics, others as Hindus or Protestant Christians. One sister was raised as a member of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore and became a Catholic under the influence of the Josephite Fathers. She was probably the only African American in her neighborhood ever to enter the convent. Her mother never left her AME church, and Mother Teresa became her friend. Once a year these nuns get a day off. This year they decided to do what people in our part of the world love to do on days off: go fishing. They had a few conditions. They wanted live bait. They wanted to do the fishing themselves. My secretary organized the event. She got three men of our parish with boats to take them out. They are frequent volunteers and fishing buddies. One of them got a huge bucket of squirmy land shrimp for bait. The bait worked. The sisters caught more than 200 fish, but we suggested they throw back the little ones. In the end, we kept 153 fish because that is the number the disciples caught when they followed the instructions of the Lord on where to fish after the resurrection. The sisters didn't just fish. They went riding up and down the river in the three boats. A couple of the power boats were pretty fast. The nuns seemed to like to push them up to full throttle, veils flapping in the wind. Back at the parish center the sisters proved adept at cleaning fish. They wasted nothing, even leaving the heads on, which in India they evidently like to eat. At the end of the day the sisters spent an hour in prayer in our parish chapel. I stayed with them for adoration and Benediction. Our chapel had a strange smell of fish the next day. It was only one day out on the water, but it seemed like a long vacation. It was the combination of natural beauty, human goodness and grace-filled laughter that made the day truly "re-creating." We can't wait for the nuns to have another day off next year. Like the disciples, we're going fishing.

CHARLOTTE — Bishop Vincent S. Waters of Raleigh established St. Ann Church in August 1955, installing then-Msgr. (later Bishop) Michael J. Begley as pastor. With nearly a half-dozen Catholic churches having been constructed in Charlotte, a Catholic presence already had taken root firmly in the Mecklenburg County seat.

With property purchased on the corner of Park Road and Hillside Avenue, Msgr. Begley and parishioners began tending to their new spiritual home. A house on the property became the rectory, and a duplex on parish grounds served as a catechetical center, with Sisters of the Mission Helpers of the Sacred Heart offering faith formation classes.

In 1956, the duplex was converted into a convent for the sisters of St. Joseph of Chestnut Hill, Pa., who had arrived to open a parochial school. After holding Mass in the nearby Park Road School auditorium for a year, Msgr. Begley began celebrating Mass in the school building when construction was completed in September 1956. The school opened its doors to 296 children in its first year.

As parish growth continued to coincide with the influx of Catholics to the Charlotte area, plans were developed to build a new church. With the building project complete in 1960, St. Ann School gained space for three classrooms and a library. Later additions to the school further increased the number of classrooms.

In 1957, the future fourth bishop of Charlotte, Peter J. Jugis, was baptized by then-Msgr. Begley at St. Ann Church and later served as priest-in-residence during the summer of 1983.

In 1961, Bishop Waters directed Msgr. Begley to begin the mission of St. Vincent de Paul to serve the ever-increasing number of Catholics in south Charlotte. On July 9, 1965, Bishop Waters proclaimed St. Vincent de Paul Church a parish in its own right.

St. Ann Church continued to expand over the next few decades, both in membership and property. An adjacent lot was purchased during Msgr. Anthony Kovacic's pastorate, 1972-79, and renovation work in the church and school building took place while Msgr.

which serves both the parish and the school. A strong focus on outreach work highlighted pastoral life at St. Ann Church, with Msgr. Allen leading missionary projects for the needy of Kentucky and Jamaica.

In July 2000, Father Conrad Hoover assumed the pastorate of St. Ann Church. Under his direction, the interior of the church was remodeled and a capital campaign has begun for construction of a new church. The parish hopes to have the new church completed in time for Christmas 2007.

About 810 Charlotte Catholics became parishioners of St. Ann Church when the parish was founded in 1955. Five decades later, more than 700 families — under the spiritual direction of Father Hoover; Father Joseph Dinh, parochial vicar; Permanent Deacon George Szalony; and Sister of St. Joseph Judy Monahan, pastoral associate — continue to build up this thriving community.

Father Hoover said the mission of St. Ann Church is "to nurture and strengthen our own spirituality through the Scriptures and the Catholic tradition."

"We invite all to receive God's love in Christ as we journey to become Christ, giving ourselves in compassionate service to all people," he said.

St. Ann Church prides itself on the diversity of its membership. Two years ago, the only bilingual Spanish and English Mass was initiated at the church.

Last summer, St. Ann Church celebrated its golden anniversary with Masses, a dinner dance and breakfast Aug. 13-14, 2005.

"We are privileged to be part of a parish which has been at the center of the life of the Diocese of Charlotte since its beginning," said Father Hoover. "We are no longer among the largest, but we are filled with the spirit of compassion and hope."

CHARLOTTE — Construction workers atop a high rise paused and tipped their hardhats in respect.

People lining the streets knelt reverently in silence. Those who weren't Catholic watched with great interest.

It was the first time a eucharistic procession had made its way through the streets of uptown Charlotte.

Approximately 3,500 people from across the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte joined Bishop Peter J. Jugis as he carried a monstrance holding the Blessed Sacrament from St. Peter Church to the Charlotte Convention Center Sept. 24.

AN ARMY OF FAITH

Rosary Army members Pat Willits (left), her son, Greg, and husband Dick work on some rosaries in Conyers, Ga., in mid-August. Greg Willits started making rosaries three years ago and formed Rosary Army Inc. on Good Friday in 2003.

One man's passion for rosary launches new ministry

CONYERS, Ga. (CNS) — Greg Willits is 6-foot-5 with a shaved head and a goatee. He's hardly the type of guy one would imagine doing arts and crafts. But love for his faith has inspired Willits and, in turn, hundreds of others to become rosary-making soldiers.

The Willits home, looking from the outside like an unassuming family home, houses the headquarters of an army — an organization that counts prayer as part of its artillery.

Since Willits created the Rosary Army in 2003, people across the country have taken to heart the group's slogan: "Make them, pray them, give them away."

Willits, a "cradle Catholic," in 1995 married his wife, Jennifer, a baptized Catholic who was not practicing the faith. It was during a powerful reconciliation experience with a parish priest that Willits began to embrace the rosary.

"I basically had to relearn it," he said.

He prayed the rosary every day during a 54-day novena.

"I found a lot more peace than I had in a long time," he said.

Willits had always been a creative person, but it was one day, while searching the Internet for instructions to make a twine-knotted rosary, that his life changed. He found some basic instructions and began to make his own rosary, and soon he was hooked.

The buzz surrounding the Rosary Army was slow at first, with a few people requesting rosaries through its Web site, www.rosaryarmy.com. After word got out, thousands of free, all-twine knotted rosaries have been distributed, and hundreds of "soldiers" have joined the group to make rosaries.

Through the Web site, visitors can learn how to pray the rosary and how to make a twine rosary. Through interactive forums, they can also discuss their faith and make prayer requests. Rosary Army soldiers make the rosaries and send them in to Willits, who then distributes them to those who request them.

At the Atlanta Archdiocese's eucharistic congress, more than 2,500 rosaries were distributed.

"We have sent a rosary to every state in the United States and I don't know how many countries," Willits said.

His family has also become involved. Willits' mother, Pat, serves as the head of quality control, putting metal crucifixes onto the rosaries and checking to make sure they have been properly made. Willits' wife is also heavily involved. As the mother of four boys, Jennifer said that she now looks to Mary as a role model.

"I really try to treat her as a spiritual mother," she said. "I revere her in a new way."

Bishops' task force expanded to include Hurricane Rita aid

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A special task force created by the U.S. bishops to deal with the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina will also address the problems expected to be caused by the impact of Hurricane Rita on the Gulf Coast.

Archbishop Joseph A. Fiorenza of Galveston-Houston, task force chairman, announced the expanded responsibility Sept. 23 as Rita approached the coasts of Texas and Louisiana.

The archbishop was named to head the task force Sept. 14 by Spokane Bishop William S. Skylstad, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

"As many victims of Hurricane Katrina who took refuge in Galveston-Houston now move on because this region is facing its own hurricane-related danger, this task force is determined to be prepared to address whatever needs will arise in the wake of this second storm," Archbishop Fiorenza said.

The task force made up of bishops and representatives of leading Catholic organizations collecting funds and carrying on relief work was established by the USCCB Administrative Committee.

It aims to build on what is already in place and seeks to:

— Support the many efforts of the affected dioceses.

— Encourage a sustained response from the Catholic community.

— Coordinate the many diverse efforts in order to increase effectiveness, assure accountability and eliminate duplication.

— Examine the future moral and policy implications of this disaster for the church and society.

Pope says Eucharist should be impetus for love, charity

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — The Eucharist should be an impetus for the faithful to love others and attend to their needs through charity, Pope Benedict XVI said at his Sept. 25 noon-time Angelus.

Jesus transformed his death into “a gift of himself, an act of love which he gives completely,” said the pope.

“In the Eucharist, the Lord, with his body, gives himself, his soul and his divinity to us, and we become one with him and among ourselves,” he said to the people gathered in the courtyard of his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo, south of Rome.

The faithful’s response to God’s great act of love and sacrifice “should then be concrete,” he said.

“One must express an authentic conversion to love, in forgiveness, in mutual welcoming and attention to the needs of all people,” said the pope.

He said there were myriad ways one could serve others every day and that the faithful could look to the Eucharist as a source of energy and inspiration for performing good works.

“In this way the Eucharist becomes the source of the spiritual energy that renews the world in the love of Christ,” he said.

The pope said the saints offered the church examples of people who received strength for their charitable works from the Eucharist.

He highlighted St. Vincent de Paul, the founder of the Daughters of Charity whose feast day was Sept. 27, and Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta, the founder of the Missionaries of Charity.

Synod of Bishops to review liturgical issues, emphasize Sunday Mass

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI presides in October over the Synod of Bishops on the Eucharist, an assembly that will review liturgical issues, emphasize the importance of Sunday Mass and mark the close of the “Year of the Eucharist.”

More than 250 bishops from every continent will attend the Oct. 2-23 synod to discuss the theme “The Eucharist: Source and Summit of the Life and Mission of the Church.”

The synod will take an in-depth look at many pastoral aspects of the Eucharist, then formulate conclusions that are passed on to the pope for possible use in a later document. The synod’s function has always been advisory, and many observers will be watching the October session to see if the new pope expands that role or gives the synod additional responsibilities.

Pope John Paul II announced the synod on the Eucharist several months before his death. Pope Benedict has embraced the event, saying it will serve to highlight the Eucharist as “the true treasure of the church.”

The potential topics of conversation are many and varied, ranging from liturgical abuses to the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist. Some bishops are expected to zero in on particular pastoral problems, such as the local shortages of priests to celebrate Sunday Mass or the church’s policy against reception of Communion by Catholics who have divorced and civilly remarried without an annulment.

The working document for the synod, which will be used as a starting point for the synod discussions, said that because Christ is truly present in the Eucharist the sacrament must be treated with dignity and shared only by those who hold the same faith. It repeatedly called for balance in how the Eucharist is celebrated and for universal respect for liturgical norms.

The key problem, according to the working document, is that Catholics have a diminishing awareness of the obligation and benefits of attending Mass and receiving the Eucharist every Sunday. In addition, it said, too few Catholics are aware that the Eucharist can only be received when they are in a “state of grace” — which means receiving the sacrament of penance if a serious sin has been committed.

Pope Benedict opens the synod with a Mass at the Vatican Oct. 2. In the days that follow, bishops and other participants meet in morning and evening sessions in the synod hall, which is closed to outsiders.

Gathering of faith

Hundreds celebrate Hispanic ministry, culture

LEXINGTON — Hundreds of people gathered recently to celebrate Mexico's Declaration of Independence and the sixth anniversary of Hispanic ministry at Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Lexington.

Approximately 300 people attended a dance held at the National Guard Armory Sept. 17, and hundreds gathered outside the church for a bilingual Mass Sept. 18. Mexican independence is celebrated Sept. 16.

"When I was assigned here to Our Lady of the Rosary Church (in July 1998), a woman approached me and asked me to start a Spanish Mass," recalled Oblate Father Al Gondek, pastor.

Unsure at the time if a Spanish-language Mass was needed, Father Gondek waited a year before asking Father Fidel Melo, now pastor of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro, to celebrate a Spanish-language Mass on Mexican Independence Day in 1999.

"He graciously accepted and the church was packed," said Father Gondek. "I told them there would be a Spanish Mass every Sunday."

Father Gondek began studying Spanish in order to celebrate Mass and reach out to the Hispanic community.

After the bilingual Mass Sept. 18, Anglo and Hispanic parishioners enjoyed a fiesta with traditional Mexican food, folklore dances and games.

Teams of Our Lady provide spiritual growth for couples

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — Not many people would argue that marriage is a challenge. Jobs, family obligations and worldly temptations all add stress to today's marriages. Fortunately, there are many resources to help marriages, whether they could be described as "in trouble," "wedded bliss" or somewhere in between.

One such resource is Teams of Our Lady, an international movement of married couples founded in 1947 by Father Henri Caffarel, a French priest.

Teams of Our Lady has existed in the United States since 1958, and the movement continues to grow throughout the nation. It is officially recognized by the Vatican as a lay institute under the Pontifical Council for the Laity.

Teams are being formed in the Diocese of Charlotte. Several families attended a picnic at Cane Creek Park in Waxhaw Aug. 28.

The purpose of the Teams of Our Lady movement is growth in the spiritual life of married couples and families through a program of prayer and study. Husband and wife develop intimacy through shared prayer and regular in-depth conversations while making their Christian faith a daily living experience.

Each team is made up of five to seven couples and a spiritual counselor, often a priest. The goal of each married couple is to help others grow in Christ and, through their marital bond, promote the kingdom of God.

The movement does not impose a particular type of spirituality on its members, but teams agree to practice daily prayer, regular reading and reflection on Scripture; a monthly discussion of family and spiritual matters; and an individual "rule of life" for personal improvement.

"Sacramental Christian marriage not only represents the loving union between Christ and the (Catholic) Church, but makes a couple share in this union," Father Caffarel said in 1959.

For Mary Pat and Vince Arostegui, joining a Team of Our Lady was a chance to grow together spiritually as a couple.

They joined Teams of Our Lady 20 years ago while living in Virginia. Parishioners of St. Matthew Church, they are a "sector couple" and their duties include holding informational meetings in the diocese and piloting new teams for their first five months.

"We still enjoy the opportunity to be with like-minded Catholics who are curious about their faith," Mary Pat Arostegui said.

Although the mission of Teams of Our Lady is spiritual growth, not marriage enrichment, couples find their marriages grow stronger through their participation, Arostegui said.

Couples involved in Teams of Our Lady include newlyweds as well as couples who have celebrated their golden anniversaries. Arostegui said she is impressed with the commitment young couples give to their marriages.

"These young couples are a blessing to the Catholic Church," she said. "They are willing to put in the effort."

IN OUR SCHOOLS

St. Pius X School advisory board receives national award

GREENSBORO — The advisory board at St. Pius X School in Greensboro is doing some outstanding work.

The board was one of eight governing or advisory boards of Catholic education to receive the Outstanding Board Award from the National Association of Boards, Commissions and Councils of Catholic Education, a department of the National Catholic Education Association.

Gary Fly, president of the St. Pius X School board, accepted the award during the association's annual convention in Philadelphia, Pa., March 30.

According to Dr. Regina Haney, NABCCE executive director, the 2005 award winners

"represent qualities of effective boards that set the example for others."

Projects sponsored or run by the St. Pius X School advisory board include BASH (Building a Scholastic Heritage), a celebration/fundraising event; an annual living rosary; the implementation of new bookkeeping procedures including the purchase and installation of new software; and a long-range plan that reflects the school's mission and facilitates the school's administrative goals.

Achieving excellence

St. Leo the Great named Blue Ribbon School

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

WINSTON-SALEM — St. Leo the Great School in Winston-Salem wins the blue ribbon.

St. Leo the Great School is one of 295 schools in the nation to be named a No Child Left Behind Blue Ribbon School for 2005. It is one of only 10 in North Carolina and the first Catholic school in the diocese to receive the recognition.

"We're all very excited here," said Principal Georgette Schraeder, shortly after learning the news Sept. 23.

The No Child Left Behind Blue Ribbon Schools program honors public and private kindergarten-through-12th-grade schools that are either academically superior in their states or that demonstrate dramatic gains in student achievement.

"The achievement gap is closing and that is great news for every student," said U.S. Secretary of Education Margaret Spellings. "These Blue Ribbon Schools are an example of what teachers and students can achieve."

"In the three-plus years since No Child Left Behind was signed into law, we've learned a new equation: 'Accountability plus high expectations plus resources equals results,'" she said.

The program recognizes schools that make significant progress in closing the achievement gap or whose students achieve at very high levels. The schools are selected based on one of three criteria:

— schools with at least 40 percent of their students from disadvantaged backgrounds that dramatically improve student performance on state tests;

— schools whose students, regardless of background, achieve in the top 10 percent of their state on state tests; — and private schools that achieve in the top 10 percent in the nation.

"All of our classes are scoring 90 percent or better across the board in reading and math," said Schraeder. "It shows a strong academic program here at St. Leo the Great School."

Under No Child Left Behind, schools must make Adequate Yearly Progress in reading and language arts and mathematics. Each state — not the federal government — sets its own academic standards and benchmark goals, because each state knows best what goals and criteria are most appropriate for its school districts.

"They also look for community outreach and ecumenical projects," said Schraeder.

Schraeder and Christine Hurley, the school media specialist who assisted with the program's academic reports, will represent the school and receive an award certificate from President George W. Bush during a ceremony in Washington, D.C. in November.

"Being a Catholic school in a mostly non-Catholic state, this recognition is good for us," said Schraeder. "It's an affirmation of all the work we've done and it helps us feel more confident to work harder and try new things."

"Seeing your hard work rewarded is a blessing," she said.

EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS

Thousands enriched at Eucharistic Congress

The procession was part of the first diocesan Eucharistic Congress Sept. 23-24 — two days of prayer, praise, worship and music centered on the holy Eucharist. An estimated 7,000 people attended the congress.

"The whole Eucharistic Congress far exceeded my expectations," said Bishop Jugis. "The response was significant in that the people of our diocese were hungering for an event of this sort where they could come together to celebrate their faith and love for the Lord."

Heavenly voices

A collection of sacred choral music opened the congress Friday evening, Sept. 23. The choir, comprised of parishioners from churches around the diocese, performed music from several eras of church history.

"The number of people who attended the concert exceeded my expectations," said Father Roger Arnsperger, pastor of St. Barnabas Church in Arden and chair of the Eucharistic Congress steering committee.

"Many people said they enjoyed the concert and that it benefited and enriched them," he said.

After the concert, actor Jim Caviezel, who portrayed Jesus in the movie "The Passion of the Christ," spoke about his Catholic faith and challenged participants to embrace their faith in the midst of the diversity in American culture.

Eucharistic procession

Knights of Columbus color guard and first communicants from around the diocese, who kissed and then dropped rose petals, led the eucharistic procession Saturday morning. They were followed by deacons and priests of the diocese and guest clergy.

Bishop Jugis carried the Blessed Sacrament in a monstrance blessed by Pope John Paul II. The congress was in part due to the late pope's proclamation of the Year of the Eucharist, which ends with the Synod of Bishops Oct. 2-23.

"In his apostolic letter inaugurating the Year of the Eucharist, Pope John Paul II asked that we maintain a sense of eucharistic amazement in the church, that we allow ourselves to be amazed — to be in awe and in wonder — at the miracle of the holy Eucharist," said Bishop Jugis.

Following Bishop Jugis in the procession were banners representing many of the 92 parishes and missions in the diocese. Hundreds of people watching the procession joined in as their parish's banner passed by.

"I've had tears in my eyes, watching the different congregations go by, singing hymns and praying the rosary," said Jim Keidel of St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte and grand knight of Knights of Columbus Council 10505.

"But seeing the bishop carrying the monstrance, especially here in the south, and seeing our Catholic faith prospering and growing is a great feeling," said Keidel.

"It's the first time I've participated in anything like this," said Beanie DeJean of Holy Family Church in Clemmons. "It is such a profession of our Catholic faith. It will stick with me a long time."

Walking in the procession were Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin, Archbishop Emeritus John F. Donoghue of Atlanta, a former bishop of Charlotte, and Abbot Placid Solari of Belmont Abbey.

Groups participating in the procession included Knights and Ladies of the Holy Sepulchre, Knights and Dames of Malta, Catholic Daughters of the Americas, Belmont Abbey College, rosary and eucharistic adoration groups, Holy Crusaders and Filipino-American groups.

"We were able to demonstrate to the community the spiritual energy emanating from Filipino spirituality and Filipino religious culture," said Cris Villapando, director of diocesan faith formation ministries.

"By including us in this Eucharistic Congress, we felt very proud of our religious tradition and we felt empowered to use this event as a teaching moment for our children," he said.

"What better avenue to bring us together than the Eucharist, the sacrament of unity, which makes us the living Body of Christ," said Bishop Jugis.

Holy hour

The procession led into the convention center's main ballroom, where a holy hour followed with eucharistic adoration, prayer and song. Giant view screens projected happenings on the stage to participants both inside and outside the ballroom.

"During the holy hour, although there were thousands of people in the room, there was a reverent silence (during the adoration) that impressed me," said Bishop Jugis. "I attribute it to our love for the Lord and reverence for the great mystery of the Eucharist there on the altar."

Bishop Curlin reminded the congress participants that they were the living Body of Christ and challenged them to discover Jesus inside themselves.

"This (congress) should change the Diocese of Charlotte," said Bishop Curlin. "This should set us on fire with a burning desire to go out and serve the world."

The Eucharist was then taken to an adoration chapel. As it passed by, the convention center was quiet, with thousands on their knees in reverent silence.

Eucharistic adoration, said Bishop Jugis, is an integral part of expressing the Catholic faith in the Eucharist.

"We have the celebration of the Mass, and we have eucharistic processions, but an equally valid expression of our faith in the Real Presence is the silent adoration of our Lord, when we allow him to speak to us and move us," he said.

"All of these expressions were present during the course of the congress," said Bishop Jugis.

Around the congress

A dozen speakers offered inspiring talks throughout the day to adults, teens and children. Congress participants also could visit the vendor area or spend time in eucharistic adoration. Priests were available to hear confessions in both English and Spanish. A Mass celebrated by Bishop Jugis and concelebrated by priests and visiting clergy closed the congress.

"During the Mass, I realized all the wonderful things that had taken place during the Year of the Eucharist and during this congress," said Father Arnsperger. "To look out and see so many people gathered from around the diocese was wonderful."

"I am grateful for the participation of all the faithful at this Mass," said Bishop Jugis during his homily.

"Pope Benedict XVI remarked at his Mass of installation: the Church is alive and the Church is young. The same can be said today of this gathering of the Church of Charlotte," said the bishop.

Congress reflections

Approximately 350 volunteers helped to keep the congress running smoothly.

"This congress would not have happened or been a success if it had not been for the harmonious working together of the volunteers, staff and steering committee," said Bishop Jugis.

"It was tremendous participation and goodwill from everyone, and what was produced was a beautiful tribute to the glory of God," he said.

Bishop Jugis also was grateful to those who attended the congress from near and far.

"I am thankful to the parishioners who made the sacrifices to come from areas far distant from Charlotte to be present and participate in the congress," he said.

Many people who attended the congress felt rejuvenated in their faith.

"It was so inspiring. It's a proud day to be a Catholic," said Kathy Moran, a parishioner of Holy Family Church in Clemmons.

"I wish we could do this every week," she said.

"Many of the priests said this congress was a wonderful thing for the diocese. And many people asked if we could do this again," said Father Arnsperger. "Plans are already underway."

During the closing Mass, Bishop Jugis announced the plans for another Eucharistic Congress next year. His remarks were met with thunderous applause.

"As soon as I saw the crowds at the concert and at the procession, I realized this would not be a one-time event and will be something we will continue in the future," said Bishop Jugis.

"Everywhere I went during the congress, people were thanking me for making this available," he said. "We presented an opportunity for our Catholic people to celebrate and the Holy Spirit took it, ran with it and multiplied the blessings."

Those blessings, said Bishop Jugis, will continue to spread throughout the diocese.

"I believe that from this congress, the excitement and interest in the holy Eucharist will continue to grow around the Diocese of Charlotte," he said.

Jim Caviezel, who portrayed Jesus in the movie "The Passion of the Christ."

"I enjoyed his talk. He challenged us to not be afraid to be Catholic and to live our faith in the midst of the diversity in American culture," said Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

Caviezel spoke also about the spiritual effect of portraying Jesus on film.

"His presentation was compelling about his getting into the role and mind of Christ," said Bishop Jugis. "He said it had a lasting effect on his spiritual life."

Bishop Jugis said Caviezel's experiences were a good model for Catholics.

"We should draw close to our Lord in prayer, seek friendship with him and live in union with him," said Bishop Jugis. "Being like Christ, identifying with him, will have an effect on our spiritual lives as well."

Dr. Dora Tobar, a theology professor at The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., spoke in Spanish on "Living Hosts for a Hungry World."

In his last encyclical, "Ecclesia de Eucharistia," Pope John Paul II wrote that the eucharistic celebration occurs not only in the transubstantiation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, but also with Catholics' conversion to be the "ecclesiastical body of Christ."

This means, said Tobar, that taking part in the eucharistic table transforms people into active members of the church whose mission is to communicate Christ to the world.

"Dr. Tobar said husbands and wives need to be Christ for one another," said Antonio Garcia, Hispanic ministry coordinator for the Asheville Vicariate.

"Men need to realize that when they deny their children (such as through abortion), they are saying 'no' to Christ," he said.

Approximately 700 people attended the Hispanic track, according to Ricardo Veloz, coordinator of diocesan Hispanic youth and young adult ministry.

Father Leo Patalinghug, associate pastor of St. John Church in Westminster, Md., and spiritual director of the Cursillo Movement of Baltimore, spoke to teenagers about "Spiritual Combat."

Being a Catholic often makes young people targets of criticism and temptation, said Father Patalinghug. To combat evil and temptation, he said youths need three "spiritual weapons" — patience, balance and joy.

"Part of being Catholic is being a bridge to God and reaching out to others who don't know God," he said. "But to do so, you first must know God yourself."

To be successful, youths need to stay balanced in their faith and beliefs.

"You need to keep your eyes on a target that never moves — Jesus," said Father Patalinghug.

Charlie Aeschliman, a former U.S. Navy S.E.A.L. and basketball-handling champion, spoke to teens about "Basketball and Eucharistic Strength."

"It was great hearing (Aeschliman) talk about perseverance," said Reed Ignizio, a parishioner at St. Barnabas Church. "(Perseverance) is very important if you want to accomplish anything in life."

Father Antoine Thomas, a member of the Congregation of St. John who began leading holy hours for youngsters in his native France in 1994, guided the teens through a period of eucharistic adoration.

"He showed that even the youngest person is capable of religious expression, even silent, focused adoration of the Blessed Sacrament," said Bishop Jugis.

Young people participate in the celebration of Mass, said Bishop Jugis, but it is good for them to know other expressions of their faith in the Eucharist, such as the eucharistic procession and eucharistic adoration.

"I hope experiencing eucharistic adoration will engender in their hearts a hunger for adoration of the Blessed Sacrament," said Bishop Jugis. "Maybe that hunger for quiet adoration will move their parents to participate with them in adoration at their parishes."

EUCCHARISTIC CONGRESS

Understanding of Eucharist deepened at Congress

BY DEACON GERALD POTKAY
CORRESPONDENT

CHARLOTTE — They came from different parishes, different backgrounds, different cultures.

But for many of the estimated 7,000 people who attended the diocesan Eucharistic Congress in Charlotte Sept. 23-24, they were there to deepen their understanding and appreciation of the Eucharist.

"Since we live in an area where Catholicism is sparse, we don't usually have the opportunity to gather like this," said Janice Steiner, a parishioner of Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe who brought her teenagers to the congress.

"Hopefully, (the congress) will give them and us the fire to truly ignite our faith."

A dozen speakers offered inspiring talks throughout the day to participants. Sacred music was incorporated into the various events and Mass. Confession and eucharistic adoration was available.

"The celebration of the Eucharist and the songs made me very emotional," said Hope Ziglar, a parishioner of St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte.

"Just being with those who are honoring the Eucharist is spectacular," said Peggy Zohorsky, a parishioner of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte.

"The faith that they (the speakers) have and how they express it to people is fantastic," she said. "This is bringing me a deeper faith in the Eucharist."

Gilberto Garcia from Holy Cross Church in Kernersville came to see speaker Scott Hahn, a theology and Scripture professor at Franciscan University of Steubenville, Ohio, who spoke on "The Lamb's Supper" and his conversion to Catholicism.

"I came to learn about the Eucharist," said Garcia. "The more I walk in my Catholic faith, the more I am convinced what it means to be Catholic, for I see the beauty of Catholicism."

Joan Zdanski of Holy Infant Church in Reidsville believes many people take the Eucharist for granted.

"We don't fully realize that it is truly Jesus in the Eucharist. This Eucharistic Congress gave us the opportunity to understand more and receive more graces as a community," she said.

"It was powerful to see so many people kneeling on the sidewalks and in the streets of Charlotte (as the eucharistic procession passed by)," said Zdanski. "The sacredness of the event became more obvious to me as different ethnic groups sang and prayed in their parish communities."

Carolyn Tazioli, a parishioner of Our Lady of Angels Church in Marion, said she was already looking forward to next year's Eucharistic Congress.

"I came away with such a spiritual uplifting due the speakers, the bishop, the camaraderie and the enthusiasm of our fellow Catholics," she said. "This event was for every person of every age. We have all been blessed by this."

'Curious Catholic' letters to son become popular book

BY SHARON LITTLE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

FORT WAYNE, Ind. — Pay attention to your next-door neighbor and the cashier at the grocery store. They, and many others, may offer lessons your heart needs to learn.

That's the kind of attitude that San Francisco attorney Jerry Hurtubise has taken to his own heart through the years, and it's evident in his new book, "The Spiritual Apprenticeship of a Curious Catholic."

Hurtubise, who provides legal assistance to severely injured people in San Francisco, said he initially intended the recollections from his childhood to be letters to his son, Peter, now 15, so he would know something of his father's growing-up years.

His own father died unexpectedly when he was 13, and it was the absence of personal knowledge about his dad's childhood that motivated him to write.

Friends persuaded him to turn the recollections into a book, and ACTA Publications in Skokie, Ill., made it the first in its American Catholic Experience series, aimed at giving voice to lay men and women concerning their Catholic faith.

With an Irishman's wit, Hurtubise has chronicled a variety of experiences that make easy, enjoyable reading. One of the funniest is his recollection of his first confession as a second-grader when, in an attempt to bring to the priest a sin worthy of forgiving, he confessed to adultery.

Growing up in Indiana, Hurtubise became an attorney, in large part because of an interest in the United Farm Workers union and in social justice issues related to migrants.

Today, Hurtubise is happy in his chosen vocation. Peter read his father's letters, and even helped edit them.

Hurtubise thinks and hopes the book and its positive stories will become more important and meaningful to Peter when he grows older.

The point the author hopes readers will take from the book, he said, "is that providence works with a person, especially in the most trying times. God puts people in your life to help you get through certain periods."

The volume has received praise from death-penalty opponent Sister Helen Prejean, a Sister of St. Joseph of Medaille, and Holy Cross Father Theodore Hesburgh, former president of the University of Notre Dame in Indiana.

"Occasionally something is written causing us to reflect upon and more fully appreciate our common Catholic experience," said Sister Prejean in a back-cover blurb about the book. "This refreshingly unmoralistic, often poetic, book is one such experience."

Father Hesburgh said, "In this age of uncertainty in our church, these beautifully written memoirs of a Catholic as a young man could not have come at a more opportune time."

Despite its popularity, however, "The Spiritual Apprenticeship of a Curious Catholic" may be the author's only book.

"I have nothing left to say; that's all I wanted to say," Hurtubise said.

During crisis, we can feed on feast of God

BY BEVERLY CORZINE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Recently, we have been eyewitnesses to history as we have watched the cataclysmic destruction and suffering along the Gulf Coast. Our view, however, has been limited by the perspective of each television company's camera.

On the first weekend after the hurricane, we had numbers of visitors in our parish who had made it out and were staying with relatives. Countless stories of escape and survival culminated with someone saying, "Everything we had is gone, but thank God we're alive!"

By mid-week a friend and I visited with people in the Arlington, Texas, Salvation Army shelter. We listened to folks tell their stories.

One mother told us that she was so thankful the children were back in school because school was something normal and their blank stares were disappearing. The children came home during our visit and were eager to talk about how great their school day had been.

As we were leaving I saw a little boy leaning against the pillow on his bed, eating chips, cheese, grapes and a cookie. The look on his mother's face told me how thankful she was for her son's after-school feast. In that moment I knew something both of the importance of a feast and what it is to be an eyewitness to history.

In the readings from Isaiah and from Matthew's Gospel we find images of the great feasts of the Lord. Each feast story illustrates the generosity and compassion of God as well as God's promise never to desert us.

Even in times of greatest peril the images of the great feast of the Lord help us to remember that we never are truly alone.

Questions:

When, recently, have you been invited to "feast" on the riches of God? How have you responded?

This 'Game' worth playing

Shia LaBeouf and Josh Flitter star in "The Greatest Game Ever Played," an absorbing and inspiring true-life story of a young amateur working-class golfer, Francis Ouimet, who played against British golf champion Harry Vardon in the 1913 U.S. Open. Director Bill Paxton's film is filled with excellent period detail, and though the pace is leisurely, the color palette muted and the dialogue low-key, the themes of class conflict, achievement against improbable odds, loyalty and good sportsmanship are vividly drawn, and the golf sequences are grippingly suspenseful. This film contains minimal, mild language. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

'Flightplan' (CNS)

A thriller set aboard a jumbo jet in which a recently widowed passenger (Jodie Foster) questions her sanity as she desperately searches for her young daughter who mysteriously disappeared midflight, leaving no trace she was ever on board.

The tautly paced nail-biter maintains a high-suspense altitude, though the script experiences increasing turbulence in its story logic and plausibility leading to a more conventional action climax.

Several intense sequences, some violence, minimal crude language and profanity. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

CCHS student in movie

Ferrell is filming a NASCAR-themed movie in the Charlotte area. He plays a top driver who falls on hard times after being defeated by a French Formula One driver.

Ferrell's character, Ricky Bobby, goes to work as a pizza delivery driver to make ends meet.

Matt, a senior at Charlotte Catholic High School, plays a teenage delivery driver who makes fun of Bobby.

Matt began acting with Charlotte's Children's Theater when he was in the seventh grade. A parishioner of St. Vincent de Paul Church, he also plays running back on Catholic's undefeated varsity football team.

A couple of years ago, Matt signed on with a local talent agency, looking for work in commercials. A few weeks ago, the agency called him about auditioning for the Ferrell movie.

Matt said Ferrell goaded the star-struck young actor by kidding around with him prior to shooting the scene when Matt's character insults Bobby with the line "Hey, Ricky, are you on fire?"

In the scene, Bobby stands out, literally — Ferrell is 6 feet 3 inches tall — in his uniform of denim shorts, green shirt and orange cap — thus igniting the "on fire" line.

CCHS senior Matt Day, left, poses with actor Will Ferrell on the set of Ferrell's NASCAR-themed movie, currently being filmed in the Charlotte area.

Matt hopes this won't be his last on-screen performance. He plans to try acting in college (he hasn't decided to which school he wants to go next year) and looks forward to someday having a bigger role in another Will Ferrell movie.

And that $700, plus residuals, he got paid for one day's work? Most of it will go toward paying for college, but "my mom's letting me keep some of it," he said.

If acting doesn't work out, Matt said he might go to law school.

Stay tuned for Matt's big-screen debut, coming to a theater near you in 2006.

people for a march past the White House to the National Mall.

Other Catholic participants included members of the Sisters of St. Joseph and the Catholic Worker movement, as well as individual Catholics such as 1976 Nobel Peace Prize-winner Mairead Corrigan Maguire and Cindy Sheehan, the mother of a soldier killed in Iraq, whose vigil outside President George W. Bush's ranch in Crawford, Texas, drew national attention during the summer.

"We believe our presence was required," Jones said, adding that his organization's opposition to the war in Iraq is built upon the late Pope John Paul II's statement that war is "always a defeat for humanity."

"We wanted to say that it is still a defeat three years later, and it will still be a defeat three years from now," Jones told Catholic News Service in a Sept. 26 telephone interview.

He said "the faith-based contingent was huge" at the Sept. 24 demonstration and that an evening interfaith service Sept. 25 under two tents on the grounds of the Washington Monument had "the spirit of tent revivals" of the past.

Maguire spoke at the interfaith service, representing Pax Christi USA, Jones said.

Officials from Jewish, Muslim, Quaker, Buddhist, Mennonite and mainline Protestant houses of worship also spoke or led prayers during the service, which was organized by Clergy and Laity Concerned About Iraq and United for Peace and Justice.

On Sept. 26, Sheehan was the first of several dozen protesters arrested in front of the White House for failing to move on when ordered to by police. Other Catholics arrested included Jesuit Father Simon Harak and Marie Dennis, vice chairwoman of Pax Christi International.

The "demands for the demonstration" included U.S. withdrawal from Puerto Rico and the Philippines; an end to "threats against Venezuela, Cuba, Iran and North Korea"; no military recruiting in schools or communities; and defense of civil rights against "the racist, anti-immigrant and anti-labor offensive at home."

As the demonstrators were gathering, leaders of the Maryknoll Fathers and Brothers, Sisters and Lay Missioners issued a joint statement Sept. 23 reiterating

"with even greater vigor" their opposition to the war in Iraq, which they first formally opposed in February 2003.

"The cost of war in terms of human life and suffering for the people of Iraq, for our own service people and their families, and for others involved in the conflict has been unconscionable," they said. "The burden of war has been carried by the poor and vulnerable as military expenditures steal funds from social programs in the U.S. and around the world."

"We the people can help by beseeching Congress that monies allocated to Iraq arrive there, that we cease the establishment of permanent bases, and that troops are withdrawn quickly yet in a manner conducive to the well-being of the people of Iraq," they added.

The Maryknoll leaders called for quick withdrawal of all U.S. "military troops, bases and secret prisons" and for U.S.-financed reconstruction in Iraq, "repairing damage caused by the invasion, occupation and years of U.S.-led sanctions."

"Reconstruction projects should not provide another windfall for U.S. firms," they said. "Contracts should provide jobs for Iraqi workers and companies."

A pledge of future glory

Understanding the Mystery of the Mass, Conclusion

For the past 26 lessons, we have examined and discussed the constitutive parts of the holy sacrifice of the Mass. We have focused our attention on the basic structure and historical, theological and spiritual significance of each part of the Mass.

However, a study such as the one we just completed, that attempts to dissect its subject, may leave the audience with the impression that the Mass is a loose compilation of dissimilar parts. Therefore, it is necessary to reiterate the essential coherence of the Mass as one single act of worship, a reality that we mentioned from the beginning.

Indeed from beginning to end, with all its parts, the holy sacrifice of the Mass is the prayer of self-sacrifice and thanksgiving of the Son of God offered to the eternal Father, in which we, as his Mystical Body, render to God worship, adoration, praise and thanksgiving. In each Mass, we unite ourselves with the worship of Jesus Christ, the high priest and victim, unto the Father in the Holy Spirit.

By recalling the events of Christ's passion, death and resurrection at every Mass, we are truly present at Calvary, present when Christ offered the one perfect sacrifice of his body and blood to the Father and offered the fruits of his sacrifice to you and me.

And so, the Mass provides us access to the saving mysteries of our faith: the events of the past are brought into the present that the benefits of our redemption may be applied to our souls. Therefore, the past 26 lessons of the Mass have dealt principally with examining the events of the past that are brought into the present at each Holy Mass.

But what about the future?

Indeed, there is still a further explanation that is necessary, a further aspect of the Mass not yet investigated: the eschatological reality, the final end toward which the holy sacrifice of the Mass is directed.

In his encyclical on the holy Eucharist, "Ecclesia de Eucharistia," Pope John Paul II discusses the eschatological reality of the Holy Mass:

The Eucharist is a straining toward the goal, a foretaste of the fullness of joy promised by Christ (Cf. John 15:11); it is in some way the anticipation of heaven, the "pledge of future glory." In the Eucharist, everything speaks of confident waiting "in joyful hope for the coming of our Savior, Jesus Christ" (EE #18).

And not only does the Holy Eucharist anticipate future glory, but the Holy

Guest Column

FATHER MATTHEW BUETTNER
GUEST COLUMNIST

Father explains that in the Mass, our bond of communion with the Church already in heaven is strengthened, that we actually participate in the heavenly liturgy:

The eschatological tension kindled by the Eucharist expresses and reinforces our communion with the Church in heaven.... This is an aspect of the Eucharist, which merits greater attention: in celebrating the sacrifice of the Lamb, we are united to the heavenly "liturgy" and become part of that great multitude which cries out: "Salvation belongs to our God who sits upon the throne, and to the Lamb!" (Rev. 7:10).

The Eucharist is truly a glimpse of heaven appearing on earth. It is a glorious ray of the heavenly Jerusalem which pierces the clouds of our history and lights up our journey (EE #19).

Therefore, our participation in the holy sacrifice of the Mass anticipates and prepares us for our eternal occupation in heaven, of offering praise, glory, adoration and worship to the Father with the Son in the Holy Spirit.

And as we await the second coming of the Lord, the advent of his promised return in glory, the Church orients herself to the east, the land of the rising sun, and faithfully continues to "Do this in memory of me."

The mystery of the Mass is thus represented on every altar in every Catholic Church throughout time and history, so that we may unite ourselves to the mystery of divine love, which impelled St. Thomas Aquinas to exclaim: "O Sacred Banquet, in which Christ becomes our food, the memory of his passion is celebrated, the soul is filled with grace, and a pledge of future glory is given to us" (Cf. CCC #1402).

Learning to coast

Raise your ingenuity as gas prices remain high

It's no exaggeration to say gasoline prices have reached a crisis point that is causing a ripple-down effect on everything we purchase.

As ominous as the word "crisis" sounds, it comes from the Greek and means a crossroads; it also denotes an opportunity to take a fresh route leading to new discoveries.

While the gasoline crisis is causing hardships, it is also changing Americans for the better.

For example, we are seeing a new surge in carpooling. And people in carpools find they are more relaxed not having to drive every day. They also tend to enjoy the opportunity it gives them to socialize.

The better gas mileage that many cars now are getting is another change for the good. We've known for a long time that gas mileage was a problem, but no one did much about it. But now not only is action being taken, but we are seeing that more and more people prefer hybrid cars that get excellent gas mileage.

I have found it interesting that as gas prices changed, so did my driving habits.

In years past, I bicycled across this country. The roads taken were anything but flat. So when you are on a bike all day, you learn to conserve energy. I now find myself applying what I learned on those trips to my driving.

Whenever I would come to a crest in the road and start downhill on my bike, I would consciously put it into a coasting mode. After repeatedly doing this, I developed a sense of soft-pedaling and gliding. I've adapted this technique to driving by paying more attention to crests in the road and when to soft-pedal things while maintaining appropriate speed.

I've become aware that half the miles I travel to and from work are slightly downhill. Then there are the down ramps. By design, most of them are steep, and you don't need to "drive" your car down them to maintain the proper speed before arriving at the highway.

Another technique I use is to take notice of stop lights and stop signs ahead of me. So many people drive right up to them and slam on the brakes. In most cases when we see a red light or stop sign, we can begin coasting 100 to 200 yards before reaching them without causing a problem to drivers behind us.

Yet another technique at a stop light is momentarily to lift the foot off the brake as it changes and to let the car roll five or 10 yards before applying the gas. Most people spurt as soon as the light changes. By letting the car roll ever so little, the engine works less in moving dead weight.

If we treat our car engine as if we were conserving our "legs," we will learn that our energetic cars can be just as energetic on less fuel. Equally important, we will be turning a crisis into a new adventure in driving.

The first pope who chose another name for himself

Q. We are told that for centuries popes have changed their names on becoming bishop of Rome, as our new pope took the name Benedict instead of his baptism name Joseph.

Do we know who was the first pope to take another name? (Florida)

A. The first pope we know of who chose another name was Pope John II, who was elected in 533. He was a Roman priest named Mercurius (Mercury), who felt it would not be appropriate for the leader of the Catholic Church to have the name of a pagan god.

Pope Sergius IV, pope from 1009 to 1012, often is mistakenly identified as the first to assume a new name. His given name was Peter, but after his election he chose another, out of deference to St. Peter the apostle. He was not the first to do so, however.

The new media — tell a friend

Good news spreads without secular press

Communicators often use the word “channels” to describe the different ways a message can travel from a sender to a receiver. A channel can be as simple as word of mouth publicity or as complex and expensive as a full-page magazine advertisement or television commercial.

For most organizations, especially nonprofits, the holy grail of channels is the news media. A news media announcement of an upcoming event is free publicity, so for starters you can’t beat the price.

In addition, the presence of reporters, especially those with television cameras, has a tendency to validate the event. Organizers can say, “The news media showed up, this must be important.”

Over the last year I worked to communicate the message of the first Eucharistic Congress to the people of the Diocese of Charlotte. It was an exciting time at the Pastoral Center as the steering committee met monthly to discuss our plans. We lined up speakers, rented the Charlotte Convention Center and asked volunteers to help us.

In choosing my communication channels, I decided to put the news media at the bottom of my list. Although I believed that the eucharistic procession through the streets of uptown Charlotte would be a compelling story, and I prayed that we would have a turnout that justified the cost of staging the event, I knew I didn’t have any proof that what was being planned would happen on the scale for which I hoped.

Since this was our first congress, I could only guess at the turnout. And because the centerpiece of the congress was the Eucharist — something the general news media finds difficult to understand — I didn’t expect much coverage in advance of the event.

Catholics & the Media

DAVID HAINS

The effort to promote the congress focused on word of mouth, the Internet and The Catholic News and Herald. A network of 61 parish contacts was at the core of the communication effort, talking up the event, hanging posters and making sure that bulletin and pulpit announcements were made on a regular basis.

Advertisements and articles in this diocesan newspaper and the Web site answered most questions about the congress and did a great deal to increase interest.

As the event drew closer, the secular media took note and several small articles appeared in newspapers around the diocese. The coverage was welcomed, but by the time it appeared, all of our other channels were in high gear.

On the day of the event, the coverage that was planned by The Charlotte Observer, the largest newspaper in the Carolinas, failed to materialize so there was no mention or dramatic picture of the event in the Sunday paper. The religion editor called me on Monday to explain that someone had dropped the ball and that they would do better next time.

He also mentioned that they had already received calls and letters from readers wondering why the paper didn’t cover the story.

Anyone who attended the congress will tell you that it was an impressive event. An estimated 7,000 people attended throughout the day, and the vigil Mass Saturday afternoon filled the cavernous ballroom to overflowing with more than 4,000 people praying, singing and listening to the Word of God as we witnessed the miracle of the Eucharist on a grand scale.

The lesson from this episode is that secular media coverage of church events isn’t nearly as valuable as word of mouth, the World Wide Web and this diocesan newspaper; and while the presence of the news media is welcome, it isn’t needed to validate our dedication to the Eucharist.

Next year we will have a track record of success and some dramatic photos. I suspect that the news media will be very interested in Eucharistic Congress II.

What about you? Would you like to be a parish contact for next year’s congress? Send me an e-mail if you are interested in helping. The date hasn’t yet been determined, but I now know from experience that whenever it takes place, plenty of help is going to be needed to make it as successful as our first Eucharistic Congress.

At audience, pope prays repeatedly for peace

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope Benedict XVI, speaking at his weekly audience, prayed repeatedly for peace.

“Oh Lord, let your face shine upon us today for the benefit of peace and, in these times, give us and all people on earth harmony and peace,” he said Sept. 28.

God’s “divine love becomes concrete and nearly observable in history with all its bitter and glorious events,” he told some 30,000 people gathered in St. Peter’s Square.

Today, God’s redemptive and protective power “reaches us now in Christ,” he said.

“Oh Lord, let your face shine on us for the benefit of peace, to protect us with your powerful hand and save us from every sin ... and rescue us from those who unjustly hate us,” the pope said, quoting from the writings of Pope St. Clement I.

He said this first-century pope’s prayer can be a prayer for the faithful today.

Pope Benedict asked God, who is “the only one capable of carrying out these works that are greater than us,” to grant harmony and peace to all the people of the world.

At the end of his audience, the pope mentioned a group of Palestinians and Israelis who were to attend a peace seminar in Rome.

In his catechesis reflecting on Psalm 135, the pope said the psalm offers praise to God who “is greater than all gods” and does all that he wills “in heaven and on earth.”

The psalm, he said, attributes the slaying of Israel’s enemies and Israel’s inheritance of the promised land to “the powerful intervention of God.”

God intervened in history with his “awesome” and “wonderful works,” showing “his face as redeemer of his people and sovereign of the world,” said the pope.

“The liturgy has the task of making the divine gifts ever present and efficacious,” he said, showing them to lead to “freedom and salvation.”

After the audience, the pope returned to the Vatican to take up his residence in his newly renovated papal apartments.

It marked the official end to his vacation stay at the papal summer residence south of Rome, in Castel Gandolfo, where he had spent most of the summer months.

An attitude of prayer

Abiding in God leads to joyful life

Abiding in the Lord is a beautiful form of prayer.

Listen to the words of Jesus: “Abide in me and together we will bear rich fruit. ... In this world you will have many troubles, but do not be afraid, for I have overcome the world. ... I have told you all these things that your joy may be full.”

The Lord wants us to live in his joy. We do this best by abiding in him. In other words, by giving ourselves to God consciously and joyfully we are creating an attitude of prayer.

This doesn’t mean we have to be thinking about God all the time; that would be next to impossible. But we can make a daily morning offering, giving the Lord all our thoughts, actions, joys and sorrows.

Just beneath the surface of your busy lives, your soul will be resting in the Lord. Like a mother who is attentive to the sounds of her infant in the next room even while she is busy doing something else, so too will you be attentive to the presence of God, even though you are not consciously thinking of him at the moment.

Spirituality for Today

It is a wonderful gift to God when you make an intention to abide in his presence — even though you know your thoughts will be a million miles away from him most of the day. This is what we call a virtual intention as opposed to an actual intention, which would have to be repeated thousands of times a day.

Here’s a little prayer I use during the day to recapture my morning offering: “Holy Spirit, Soul of my soul, I adore you. ... Thank you for loving me. Guide and protect me always, and help me to be responsive to the needs of others.”

I find that by repeating this thought often, I not only live in his joy but I renew my awareness that I am a carrier of divine love.

Recently I gave a day of recollection on joy to the priests of the Diocese of Erie, Pa. One of them put up his hand and asked me to define spiritual joy. I replied, “Spiritual joy is abiding in God’s unchanging love.”

I explained further that supernatural joy requires a leap of faith. Whereas natural joy is immediate, like holding a laughing baby, supernatural joy comes from the deep inner knowledge of God’s loving presence within you. It is a joy that this world cannot give.

Julianne of Norwich said that we can choose this state of mind. She said, “The greatest honor you can give to almighty God, greater than all your penances and sacrifices, is to live gladly, joyfully because of the knowledge of his love.”

Even if you are a sinner, caught up in some situation not of your liking, you can abide in God’s love. The desire to be a saint one day is a sincere beginning. It pleases God to receive your good intentions and high hopes. Keep it up.

One day the Lord will heal all your wounds and forgive all your misdeeds. In the meantime, abide in his love, and live your precious life joyfully.

Our Lady of the Rosary Church a thriving home for Catholics

LEXINGTON — In 1917, J.V. Brown and family came to Lexington, the earliest known Catholics in the area. A few years later they were joined by Sylvia Leake Marsh and J. Lance Crump.

For nearly 30 years, local Catholics traveled to Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury for Mass and to receive the sacraments.

In January 1944, through the efforts of Charles Coira, a local Catholic businessman, Father Thomas Colgan of St. Edward Church in High Point began celebrating Sunday Mass in the Coira home.

In April 1944, a mission of Sacred Heart Church was established in Lexington. Father Cletus Helfrich was assigned pastor of the unnamed church and conducted services for about two years. At that time, there were 100,000 people in the county, with less than one percent of the population being Catholic.

In November 1946, when about 15 Catholics were gathering weekly for Mass, a house was bought on the present site of Our Lady of the Rosary Church. With this purchase the parish could then call itself Holy Rosary Church — the church's original designation.

The Diocese of Raleigh installed Father Edward Sullivan as the first resident pastor of the new parish.

In 1950, Father Peytus from Christ the King Church in High Point came to lead a small African-American Catholic mission of 12 people.

Among them was Pauletto Thomas, who, in 1962, became Dominican Sister Mary Paul.

In 1954, that mission was integrated into Holy Rosary Church.

By the mid-1950s, the facilities had become inadequate. Construction of a new church and adjoining rectory was begun in September 1957. The construction was completed during Holy Week 1958 and dedicated by Bishop Vincent Waters on July 16, 1958.

In 1966, Father Ron McLaughlin was assigned as pastor. There was at this time a great deal of racial tension and unrest. Father McLaughlin was instrumental in forming the Layman's Christian Council, whose goal was to unite lay people from local black and white churches. They met monthly at the First Presbyterian Church to resolve many of the issues of the time.

During the 1970s and early '80s, Oblates of St. Francis de Sales priests pastured the Lexington church.

In 1977, the church was updated to meet the requirements of Vatican II. In 1979, a separate rectory was built behind the church. The former rectory was converted into office space.

In 1981, the parish received a modification of a different kind: its name was changed to Our Lady of the Rosary Church. A nearby building was also purchased that year, named Our Lady of the Rosary Center and modified to include classrooms for religious education, a kitchen and a parish hall.

In 1988, the diocese assumed leadership of the parish, assigning Father Richard Hanson as pastor, followed by Father Joseph Kelleher in 1991.

In 1998, the diocese once again entrusted the administration of the parish to the Oblates of St. Francis DeSales at the request of then-Bishop William Curlin. On July 1, 1998, Oblate Father Albert Gondek was assigned as pastor. Under his leadership, the church and Rosary Center were updated and modernized, a rectory was purchased and the former rectory was converted into administrative offices.

With an influx of about 3,000 Hispanics to the Lexington area during the 1990s, a Hispanic community was born.

"When I was assigned here ... a woman approached me and asked me to start a Spanish-language Mass," said Father Gondek. "I told her that there were no Spanish-speaking people here. She said that there were more Spanish people here than I could imagine."

On Sept. 18, 1999, a Spanish liturgy was celebrated for the first time. The church was filled to capacity and continues to be so at the weekly Spanish Mass.

At the present time, the parish is seeking approval to renovate the parish center to accommodate various activities and events.
